INSURING THE VOLUNTEERS WOULD MEAN BIG OUTLAY

Mayor and City Clerk Will Secure Certain Information and Report.

The Committee of the Whole Council met last evening and discussed the advisability of doing something for the volunteers. The idea of insuring the men was gone over carefully, but the total cost, it was said, would be somewhere in the neighborhood of $15,000. Owing to the general financial condition, an expenditure of that amount would be utterly impossible.

It was finally decided that all information such as age, place of birth, married or single, etc., should be obtained, and then definite steps taken. The Mayor and the City Clerk will obtain the information and report at another meeting.

Bread of Flour and Potatoes

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 22.—The Rotterdam correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says that, because of the shortage of flour, the bakers in Rotterdam are making bread composed of equal parts of flour and potatoes. The mixture is palatable.

GERMANS GET PASSPORTS.

Already numerous Germans have applied to Chief Thompson for passports. Others who have not done so should act at once .

HEAVY LOSSES TO THE AUSTRIANS REPORTED

Some 25,000 Are Killed and Wounded and 10,000 Are Taken Prisoners.

IS CONFIRMED

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 22.—A despatch to Reuter's Telegram Co. from St. Petersburg sent under today's date says,, "After a brilliant Servian victory at Matschwa, the Austrians fled toward bridges of Drina pursued by Servians who captured rich booty and a large number of prisoners including officers.

They took forty guns most of them howitzers, horses, ammunition and field hospital and military kitchens which were abandoned by the Austrians in their flight.

London, Aug. 22.—Official sources confirm reports that the Austrians lost 20,000 men in three days' fighting on the river Drina, and that Gen. Leman, the Belgian commander of the forts at Liege, is a prisoner of the Germans and en route for Cologne.

AUSTRIANS LOST HEAVILY.

London, Aug. 22.—According to a Central News despatch from Rome, many Austrians were drowned in their flight to the Drina river. Servian artillery annihilated the survivors. The correspondent says 25,000 Austrians were killed or wounded in a battle and that 10,000 were taken prisoners.

GERMANS HAVE FAILED.

Paris, Aug. 22.—Col. Leonce Rousset writing for the Petit Parisian says, "The situation of a slight setback in Lorraine is unimportant. On the whole the German staff's plan of invasion may be said to have failed. They sought to crush us with a lightning blow but as it is we will carry the war into the enemy's territory."

London, Aug. 22.—The Times publishes a report that Karl Baedeker, publisher of Baedeker guide books, has been killed in action.

OFFICERS' MESS MAKE GRANT

Gift of $2 for Each Member of Contingent

The officers' mess of the 57th regiment have decided to make a grant out of their own drill pay fund of two dollars to every man in the local contingent.

ITALIANS TO MOBILIZE

King Victor Emmanuel Won Over by Ministers

Canadian Press Despatch.

Paris, Aug. 22.—A general mobilization in Italy has been decided upon and will be proclaimed in three or four days, according to a message from a Rome correspondent asserts. King Victor Emmanuel, until recently, felt obliged to renounce all idea of Italian intervention in the conflict, but was won over by the arguments of his ministers.

VESTRY MEETING.

57th VOLUNTEERS OFF TO VAL CARTIER EARLY THIS MORNING

Orders to Entrain Came Last Evening and Contingent of 126, Officers and Men Responded

The soldiers have gone! After two weeks of anxious waiting their orders came last evening, which called them to Val Cartier. The news spread about the city with great rapidity and crowds thronged the streets till after midnight spending a few hours with friends, they might never see again.

Long before the soldiers were on hand at the Armouries this morning the enthusiastic citizens were there. The red coats assembeld shortly after 7.30 and answered the roll call. The volunteers then marched to the parade grounds in front of the building and there Mayor Buller addressed them on behalf of the city.

His Worship urged the men to go to the war with free minds as the city of Peterboro would look after any of their families who would be financially affected by their absence. Peterboro was proud of each and every one of the men in line and if God spared them to return they would find the same enthusiastic crowd on hand to welcome them.

The regimental chaplain read prayers and then all united in repeating the Lord's Prayer which was followed by the singing of the national anthem. F. L. Roy then secured a picture of the complete contingent and the order to march was given.

The band led the troops down George and out Charlotte and at every corner large numbers were collected and vigorously applauded the 'Peterboro Boys.' The regular Belleville train was awaiting on track No. 1 and the soldiers entrained amid tremendous cheering by the crowd. At 8.30 the train pulled slowly out, leaving behind hundreds of weeping mothers, wives, children and sweethearts.

While the officers were expecting the order to entrain, they had hoped that the departure would be made in the afternoon or evening. After the order came last evening, each volunteer had to be notified. Officers of the regiment and citizens owning automobiles gave their assistance and the work was finally accomplished at a late hour.

ALL IS WELL AT ANTWERP

Concentration Completed in Good Order

Canadian Press Despatch.

Paris, Aug. 22.—Official information made public today is to the effect that the concentration of Belgian troops before Antwerp has been completed in good order.

The morale of the Belgian troops has not been impaired.

Answered.

"How old are you, Bobby ?"
"Six."
"And when were you six ?"
"My last birthday."

Volunteers May Have Missed the Train

Major Eastwood, of the 57th regiment, announced that if any soldier of the local overseas contingent had the misfortune to miss the train this morning, and will call upon him at the Royal Bank, Hunter street, he will be pleased to furnish him with transportation to Val Cartier. Many of the men found great difficulty in making their way to the train, so great was the crowd at the station.

HAVE A LOOK AT JUPITER

The star Jupiter has been a little more brilliant than usual the last few nights, and a great many citizens were positive that a German airship was floating in these parts. Some became so interested that they could hear the propeller of the machine. If to-night is clear, old Jupiter is likely to again shine forth, but citizens should lose no sleep.

GERMAN LOSSES UP TO AUGUST 17

London, Aug. 22.—In a despatch from Paris the Exchange Telegraph Company's correspondent sends the following summary of German losses up to August 17, as printed in the Paris Matin ;

"Twenty-four cannon taken by the Belgians from the 3rd to the 5th of August at Liege.

"Three cannon taken by the French at Margennes, August 11.

"Six cannon taken by the French at Othian, Department of Meurthe, near Spincourt, August 12.

"Twelve cannon taken by the French near Schirmek, Alsace, Aug. 16.

"Twenty-four cannon taken by the Russians at Stallenpohnen, East Prussia, Aug. 17.

"Twelve cannon taken by the Russians at Gumbinnen, East Prussia, Aug. 17.

"This makes a total of 81 pieces of field artillery, besides which were captured a number of pieces of heavy artillery, rapid-fire guns, aeroplanes, and 19 motor wagons.

"In addition, the Germans lost two flags to the Belgians at Liege; a cavalry standard was taken at Diest, and a flag was captured by the French at St. Blaise, August 15."

Opening of Trent Canal

The report that the Trent Canal opening would be delayed by a bridge at Campbellford it without foundation the Review is informed as at any time the owners of the bridge are prepared to put in a temporary bridge to carry the traffic until a permanent one is built. The chief cause of delay however is the war which has paralyzed supplies. The canal opening has been delayed by the failure of those handling section No. 2 to get their submarine dredging done and from their failure to build secure cofferdams which have been carried away twice. On account of the war the Review is informed that at present no date can be set for the opening of the canal even at a 6 ft. 2 in. depth.

BATTERY RECRUITS LEAVE TONIGHT

The 57th Band will parade at the armouries this evening at 7.30. A third contingent of the 24th Battery, C.F.A., will leave.

Germans May Soon Arrive at Ghent

Canadian Press Despatch.

Paris, Aug. 22.—A despatch to the Havas agency from Bruges, Belgium, under date of Friday, says: "A civic guard at Ghent was disarmed this morning. The Brussels civic guard was sent to Bruges and Antwerp.

"The enemy occupied Alost and Wetteren to-day. It is feared that the arrival of the Germans at Ghent is imminen."

THE DOMINION'S WAR EXPENSES

To the End of 1914 They Will Amount To 18 Millions.

OTTAWA, Aug. 22.—In the House yesterday the Prime Minister gave the following details of the millions required for expenses of the war for the remaining seven months of the fiscal year: 22,000 men of first contingent at the rate of $1,000 per year; $6,000,000 for naval service department, though only four millions would likely be needed, not including $1,050,000 for two sub-marines; seven months' pay for 25,000 men, $6,100,000; 5,000 horses at $200 each, $1,000,000; transporting troops to Valcartier, $45,000; ocean transportation, $1,000,000; transportation to continent, $300,000; transporting home again, $1,450,000; total for these items, $13,275,000.

GERMANS MAY HAVE FORCES ON SOUTHERN END OF LINE

Amsterdam Despatch Would Indicate That German Generals Finding Resistance too Great in Belgium Will Try to Break Through Near Muhlhausen.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 22.—All indications now point to the advance of the bulk of the German army on France by way of Cernay, or Sennheim, between Thann and Muhlhausen.

This despatch would seem to indicate that for some reason the German general staff has suddenly changed its plan of advance, and has found it expedient, because of the stout resistance in Belgium, causing great delay, to push across the borderland into France through Alsace-Lorraine.

The invasion by the French of the German provinces of Alsace-Lorraine has been regarded as a movement directed against the German left flank. Of the twenty German corps on the western frontier, eighteen a few days ago were known to be between Metz and the battle line around Brussels, since reported seized by the Germans, and of this number no less than eight corps were in Lorraine, south of the Luxemburg frontier. The French advance upon Lorraine, through passes of the Vosges Mountains, was hardly supposed to be sufficient in numbers to check the progress of the German columns, but it was conceded that the French might present themselves in sufficient force on the left wing of the Lorraine army to hold its attention and delay the German move either westward, against Verdun, or northward, to the reinforcements of the Kaiser's army in Luxemburg and Belgium.

It is regarded as possible that the Germans, having knowledge of the intention of the French troops to concentrate more closely at this point, have moved the bulk of the army of the Lorraine forward to offset this, or that the way into France being closer through Cernay, they have determined to press across the boundary at this point first, instead of by way of Belgium, where resistance is more fierce and better concentrated.

RUSSIANS ADVANCE ALONG AUSTRO-GERMAN FRONTIER

Said to be Maintaining the Offensive at Every Point of Contact

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 22.—A despatch to The Exchange Telegraph Co. from St. Petersburg says, "It was officially announced that the Russian Army is now advancing along the entire Austro-German frontier and successfully maintaining the offensive at every point of contact.

London, Aug. 22. — The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Daily Mail in a despatch, dated Friday, says according to information from a high source the retreat of the Germans reported yesterday was marked by brilliant Russian cavalry exploits.

The crack Guards Regiment hurled themselves with irresistible fury on the foe.

LONDON, Aug. 22. — A despatch to the Havas agency from Trieste, via Rome, says during Thursday night the Austrian fleet engaged in a violent artillery combat with an imaginary fleet, the mistake being discovered only after six hours' cannonading.

Official news from Paris gives particulars of the sinking of the Austrian battleship Zrinyi, of 14,000 ton and crew of 857 men. The Zrinyi was struck by a shell from a French warship. The shell exploded in a magazine, causing such damage that she sank in a few minutes.

SPECIAL WAR SESSION HAS COMPLTED ITS LABOR

Senate Passes Bills Making Bank Notes Legal Tender, Authorizing Restrictions on Aliens and Voting Fifty Millions For War.

OTTAWA, Aug. 22. — Prompt despatch was given last night by the Senate to three of the Government's war measures. In one hour the Upper House passed, without amendment, bills authorizing the Government to make bank notes legal tender, empowering the Government to deal stringently with aliens, and voting fifty millions for war.

The special war session of Parliament will close to-day. The House of Commons has passed all the legislation proposed by the Government except the bill to create the Canadian patriotic fund and Hon. C. J. Doherty's bill to amend the Naturalization Act of 1914 so as to conform with the British statute respecting the naturalization and nationality of married women. These bills will be passed to-day.

The financial legislation passed after a brief discussion, the House hastening to adopt a national currency based upon the wealth and credit of the country. The Finance Minister stated that specie payments had been practically suspended in every country in the world, but that the law would be so administered in Canada that a return to a gold basis would be feasible as soon as normal conditions were restored.

He said that the Government was prepared to rediscount high-class securities, including prime commercial paper by issuing Dominion notes to the banks with such securities as collateral. He believed that the banks would accommodate their customers in a liberal way and make no effort to get large profits from the loans discounted by the Government.

The moratorium clause, to which some opposition developed Thursday was passed without comment or discussion.

An announcement of great importance to the insurance companies was made to the effect that the Finance Department would valuate their securities acquired before Dec. 31, 1913, at their commercial value on that day when the next annual inspection and valuation was made next December.

Upon the orders of the day, W. M. German (Welland) asked if there would be further recruiting and mobilizing after the first contingent sailed.

The Prime Minister replied that no decision had been made yet as to a second contingent for abroad and for home defence. Such recruiting would be done as seemed necessary.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier: "What legislation is the Government going to pass to provide for the families of the men who go to the front?"

Sir Robert Borden: "The patriotic fund movement is already under way and the Government will supplement that to any extent that may be necessary. The legislation will be brought down either this session or next session. There seems no special reason why it should be done this session."

The evening sitting was devoted to the tariff changes, which increase taxation upon coffee, sugar, liquors and tobacco. Some of the Liberal members criticised the increased duty upon sugar. Mr. Maclean (Halifax) pointed out that sugar was going in any event because the beet sugar industry of Germany would be blighted by the war. Mr. Carroll (South Cape Breton) thought there should be a tax upon automobiles, and several opposition members favored stamp duties upon notes, checks and other legal documents, and also upon matches and proprietary medicines.

Mr. White intimated that if the war continued long additional taxation would become necessary.

In support of the provisions in the resolution making customs and excise duties upon liquors effective from Aug. 7. Mr. White presented figures to show to what an extent liquors had been taken out of the customs warehouses in anticipation of the tariff changes. The receipts from customs duties on goods so withdrawn from the warehouses between Aug. 13 and Aug. 20, both dates inclusive, during the year 1914, amounted to $987,000, as against $336,000 in the same period of last year.

FRENCH FORCES LEAVE LORRAINE

Invaders' Strength Renders French Resistance Imprudent.

PARIS, Aug. 22.—The War Office in a bulletin last night says:—

"As already announced, after reconquering the frontier our troops advanced into Lorraine along a front extending from the Donan mountain to Chateau Salins. They drove the Germans back into the valley of the Seille river and the marshy district, and our advance guards reached Delme, Dieuze and Morhange.

"Yesterday several German army corps made a vigorous counterattack, and our advance guards, fell back. The fight was extremely fierce on both sides, and in view of the greatly superior number of the Germans our troops, who had been fighting continuously for six days, retreated.

"Our left covers the advanced works of Nancy, and our right is firmly established in the Donan hills. The great strength of our enemy made our remaining in Lorraine useless and imprudent.

"Details received show that the reoccupation of Muhlhausen was a great success. The offensive, first along the line from Thann to Dannemarie (Dammerkirch), and then on to Muhlhausen, was carried out with rare dash. By a bold stroke Gen. Paul Pau, once he was master at Thann and Dannemarie, directed the troops west of Muhlhausen, giving the enemy an opportunity to engage him between our lines and the [illegible] frontier, and then by a second [illegible] the Germans were thrown [illegible] Muhlhausen."

First [illegible]

"What do [illegible] important [illegible] in [illegible]?"
"[illegible]."

PETERBOROUGH, SATURDAY, AUGUST 22, 1914

A MEMORABLE DAY IN PARLIAMENT.

THE SCENE presented in the Canadian Parliament on Wednesday should long dwell in the minds of Canadians, and should be an inspiration to the whole Empire. Party interests were not in evidence. Although the House was divided into the usual ranks of Government and Opposition there was, in reality, but one united party recognising the necessity of defending the Empire in the danger that threatens its existence. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has taken a position in the present crisis that has given him another substantial claim to statesmanship. From the moment when the war cloud burst in thunder on the hills and plains of Europe, he declared his support for whatever the Borden Government should do to defend Canada and the Empire. He led the way as it was his place to lead in such a proposal, that party differences should cease in the present crisis and that Canada should present a united front in support of the Motherland. Sir Robert Borden has profited by the advice of the leader he has so long opposed, nay, more, the Conservative Premier has the support of the Liberals. Once there was considerable dissension and cries of extravagance at the proposal to vote $35,000,000 for naval aid; now there is not a voice raised in protest when nearly twice that sum is voted. The unanimity of the Canadian Parliament is a tribute to the high-mindedness of its members and an example to the Empire and the world. It speaks volumes for the British system of governing an empire and illustrates a political strength never yet equalled by a political organization.

The following passages from Sir Wilfrid Laurier's speech show that Canadian party leaders can get togeher and agree on a policy when the gravity of the situation is so great as that which now prevails:

> "We may differ as to methods," Sir Wilfrid exclaimed. "We have our differences and our disagreements, but, here and now, I give the assurance that in what has been done and what remains to be done we shall take no exception and offer no criticism so long as there is danger at the front. We propose to let the friends and the foes of Britain know that a united Canada stands with the mother country."
>
> "But it is not only in Ireland that you find this union of hearts. In the two other united Kingdoms the voice of faction has been silenced completely. Even those who, on principle, do not believe in war, admit that this was a just war, and that it had to be fought. That union of hearts which exists in the United Kingdom exists in the same way in Canada, in Australia, in New Zealand, yea, even in South Africa—South Africa rent by war less than twenty years ago, now united under the blessing of British institutions, and all British and Dutch stand ready to shed their blood for the common cause.
>
> "Sir, there is in this an inspiration, and the hope is not a vague one, that through painful war the British Empire will emerge with a new bond of union, the pride of all its citizens, the living lesson to other nations."

THE MEANING OF MORATORIUM.

QUITE A LARGE number of newspapers have given explanations of the word moratorium, so that we thought its significance was by now generally known. As there still appears to be some doubt on the subject, we offer the following explanation:

The term is of Latin origin, its meaning being delay, hence, when extended to money matters, it means delayed or suspended payments of a certain kind. The Standard Dictionary gives this meaning: "Moratorium—An emergency act of legislation authorizing a government bank to suspend specie payments for a given period." Bearing in mind that the only real money is gold, and that specie payments are gold payments, moratorium means an act of parliament making it unnecessary to pay in gold, that is, the act makes payments in representative money, such as paper money, legal for all cases. Paper money is worth what it is only because of the gold and securities held to make it good. Instead of passing the gold from hand to hand, paper money is used, and the gold used only to settle balances between banks, between governments, or between nations, as the case may be.

The Canadian Government must, by law, secure twenty-five per cent. of its paper money in gold and securities, of which fifteen per cent. must be gold. From this it is seen how Canadian and British banks make an extensive use of credit. In times of panic, stress, or war, however, the smooth operation of credit is interrupted and settlements must be made in real money. When this cannot be done, failure follows. Hence, to prevent failure, a moratorium law is passed permitting settlements in securities or other currency than gold for a limited time. The result is that banks retain their gold supplies for the specified period, which gives them time to meet their obligations. They do not have to tighten up on the public so rigidly and national business is not brought to a standstill. In other words, it means an extension of credit, allowing time to meet an extraordinary emergency in the financial affairs of large banks in the first instance, and of the public indirectly.

This extraordinary extension of credit is, however, a very delicate matter, because it weakens national credit and currency by loading the gold reserves with a greater burden of debt than they usually bear. So long as the country has the resources to meet its obligations, such an act is the safest and wisest measure to adopt in such an emergency as the present one. Had this war been imminent for the last six months, all banking houses would have been conserving their resources and limiting their loans. But no one expected the war until it was upon them, and, as credit was being extensively used up to almost the day war was declared, financial houses suddenly found themselves in difficulty. They could easily liquidate their debts with a little time, hence this moratorium law gives them the necessary time to settle their affairs and meet their obligations. At the end of the time limit gold payments must be resumed, and the money of the country returns to its usual gold basis.

This device is very old, having been conceived by Julius Caesar, for this, or something like it, was one of the expedients he adopted when regulating the affairs of Italy towards the close of the Civil War almost two thousand years ago. A moratorium has on rare occasions been adopted by modern states, a recent instance being that decreed by Argentina in 1890 at the time of the great Baring crisis.

So far as the public are concerned, such a law really means that the collection of debts is suspended for a time. That is the other way of saying credit is extended. During this period new expenditures are reduced to a minimum so that collections may be amassed to meet financial obligations when the time limit expires. It prevents failures that would mean a collapse of business and hard times, such as have seldom occurred in the world's history.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE VOLUNTEERS who went away from Peterborough Thursday night received a royal send-off. The 57th Band played stirring music, there were rousing cheers, hearty bugle calls, and an immense crowd at their departure. To be sure, there was not a large number leaving, but there were the "makins" of many more squads in the spectators, should they be needed. The Empire is showing in its farthest outposts that when the word is war, they mean to fight like their sires did at Dettingen, Fontenoy, and Waterloo.

THE BRITISH EMPIRE may have its serious squabbles and dissensions within, but when threatened from without, King George is King of a realm that needs to be feared.

WHAT will you bet on the German navy? asks the Montreal Mail. Personally, we would not bet much, and just now we would not bet at all because nobody outside the War Office knows whether it is sunk or floating or what.

A Survival of Barbarism.

Daily Chronicle.

A Government which could make such an offer as that made to Britain last week, and launch such an aggression as that launched at Belgium this week, does not represent any civilization, German or other. It represents a survival of immoral and barbarous forces, which in the long run Europe must inevitably have had to subdue or to go under.

A Patriotic Duty.

St. John Globe.

Merchants and manufacturers should keep constantly in mind the fact that war imposes on them a duty not less patriotic, not less important than that devolving on the younger men who must form the bulk of those in the fighting line. A cheerful optimism is one of the most sacred obligations of the moment. The present is not the time to shut down factories, to close up enterprises and cut off the incomes of the bread winners.

A Cheerful Note.

Calgary News-Telegram.

Let us get the commercial wheels moving once more. Take down the shutters which have been put up in so many places in fear of a fancied "bogey," that should be chased instead of feared. Pull down the crepe, and let us get going again. The West's products have already begun to move eastward, and there's a big year's business ahead, in spite of war or any other temporary obstacle.

No Short or Easy Struggle.

Westminster Gazette.

We throw everything into the scale, our fleet, our army, our wealth, whatever services can be rendered by sailor or soldier or private citizen, to be used as the Government thinks fit for the honor and safety of the country. We cannot lull ourselves with the false hope that this will be a short or easy struggle. Foresight and discipline are needed not only to reinforce armies and navies, but to keep the every-day life going, and to mitigate the inevitable distress through rising prices and loss of employment which will fall on the poorer members of the community. Again and again historians have told us that it is the spirit of the people which tells in the struggle between nations. That is not less true than formerly, though modern warfare wears outwardly the aspect of a gigantic and horrible machinery. The spirit of the people is seen not in the tumult and shouting, but in endurance, patience, forbearance, and the cheerful resolve of the more fortunate that they will, so far as in them lies, share the burdens of their poorer neighbors. them lies,

Pius X.

Montreal Dail Mail.

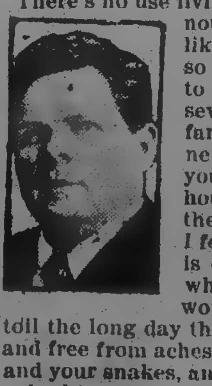
The death of Pope Pius X removes from world-influence a virile democratic force. Of humble origin, Pope Pius X. carried to the chair of St. Peter a mind and a character serene and undisturbed by the powerful place duty directed him to fill. In all his work, he bore in mind the simple democratic ideas and ideals which he, the son of a peasant, had learned in early life. A thorough Italian, he was yet a devoted and ardent Churchman. He added something to the power of his church. The man who sought his best inspiration in the lowly places could not have been other than a great Churchman. There have been Popes more skilled in diplomacy, more scholarly and more brilliant in statecraft than Pius X. Leo XIII., his predecessor, was a more picturesque and striking figure. Other Popes have figured even more conspicuously in history. But Pius X., with his democrarcy, struck a note inharmony with the yearning of the masses. To do that was to accomplish much for the trust that was given into his keeping, to the surprise of the world, eleven years ago.

The death of the Pope, at this time of European conflict, cannot but cause sad reflections upon the probability that his death was hastened by knowledge that the force of love and charity which he labored to spread should prove unavailing against the onrush of barbaric passion as it is unloosened in time of war.

The sincere mourning that will be voiced by millions at the passing of Pius X. will rise in strange contrast to the harsh sounds of battle now arising from bloody fields in Europe.

SLEEP

By Walt Mason



I go to roost tired out and sore, and sigh, while yet awake, "There's no use living any more, life's such a grievous fake. It's nothing but a round of toil and tears and things like those; my heart is sorer than a boil, I have so many woes." While grumbling thus I start to snore until the bedsprings rock, and then, for seven hours or more, I sleep around a block. Ah, far and wide my snores are flung, till wakeful neighbors yell; I learned to sleep when I was young, my tutors taught me well. For seven hours, or maybe nine, I sleep with ardent zeal; then, in this withered heart of mine, new energy I feel. I murmur, as I don my rags, "How foolish is despair! I don't indorse those dismal wags who say that life's a snare. I'm glad that I have work to do, and wish I had some more; I'll gayly toil the long day through, enjoying every chore. I feel as fresh and free from aches as Adam, ere his fall; bring on your wildcats and your snakes, and I shall whip them all!" Oh, sleep! It is the only dope that's never known to fail, that brings new courage, faith, and hope, when man is tired and stale.

THE TOLERANT SEX.

GEORGE was a fellow who never could see
That women knew more than their mere A B C.
The comment that always he'd chortle with glee
Was: "She does pretty well—for a woman."

A girl wrote a book, an astonishing hit,
A model of style, to say nothing of wit,
But all you could get that poor boob to admit
Was: "She writes pretty well—for a woman."

He married at last. Was his prejudice fled?
You've never met George. On the day he was wed
He yielded a lot, for I'm told that he said,
"She's a pretty good sort—for a woman."

They'd go to a lecture, they'd go to a play,
Where woman was "it" and where man was passe,
But all you could ever induce him to bray
Was: "She does pretty well—for a woman."

Their baby was born. As he stood at the side
Of the bed and looked down at his wife, happy eyed,
And the infant, I'm told he admitted with pride
That she'd done pretty well—"for a woman."

For Johnny.

Mrs. Briggs is so good looking that Mr. Briggs seldom finds it in his heart to be angry with her, but he was really cross when she returned from Florida.

"I understand," he said, "that you passed yourself off as a widow while you were away. How about it?"

She admitted it.

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself," said Briggs, "but I suppose you are not."

"Of course I am not," said Mrs. Briggs serenely. "I only did it on Johnny's account. I wanted him to have a good time, and he did. You have no idea how kind all the gentlemen were to him."—New York Times.

Still Climbing.

"Have you ever heard Jimkins relate about the time he got halfway up Mont Blanc with one of his little nephews and no guide?" asked one man of another.

"How long ago did he tell you about it?" was the evasive reply.

"Last March, when he'd just got home," said the first man.

"Well," said the other, "in eight months since then he has climbed the rest of the way, succored a fainting guide, and survived a snowstorm on the summit, resuscitated two benumbed strangers on the way down and guided the entire party to the foot, where a group of frantic relatives was waiting."—Sacred Heart Review.

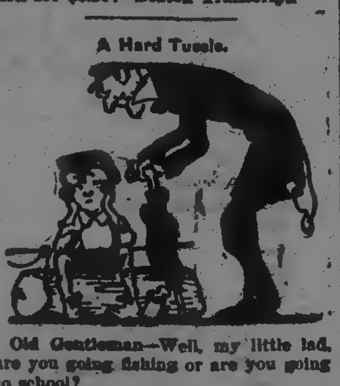
Why She Didn't Apply.

Marks—So you saw the woman who dropped the purse, but lost her in the crowd. Did you advertise for her?

Parks—Yes; I put this in. "If the very homely woman of forty, wearing a dress of last year's style and a most unbecoming hat, who lost her purse containing $3.50, on Boylston street Saturday will apply to—, her property will be returned." I've had no answer though.

Marks—Gracious! Do you think a woman would own up to that description for $3.50?—Boston Transcript.

A Hard Tussle.



Old Gentleman—Well, my little lad, are you going fishing or are you going to school?

Little Lad—I dunno yet. I'm jes' a-wrastlin' with me conscience.—Philadelphia Ledger.

CLERKS GET SECOND CHANCE.

Canadian Banks Do Not Dismiss On First Wrong Step.

A few days ago in one of the medium-sized Canadian banks, a 19-year-old clerk was found to have "borrowed" fifty dollars to which he had no title. Technically it was an "embezzlement," and the law of Canada would have sent the lad to prison. But the general manager looked at it another way. He wrote the lad's father, notifying him of the incident, and stating that the management had decided to give the clerk a second chance to "make good" by removing him to an out-of-town branch whose his act would not be known except to the local manager. Of course the fifty dollars was returned in instalments from the clerk's salary, but there the incident ended. The theft becomes no barrier to promotion, and remains a close secret with four or five senior officers of the institution.

Instead of this proceeding being pointed to as irregular, it is the common rule in practically all the Canadian banks. Petty infringements occur at intervals in all financial institutions and the discrepancy between the small salaries of bank clerks and the style of living to which they are supposed to adhere forms a constant temptation to overreach their earnings. This is done quite commonly in a manner that at first glance does not look like "embezzlement," but rather like "high financing" applied to petty purposes. As has been divulged in police court more than once during the past year, a clerk in desperate need of money "flies a kite." In other words, he issues a personal check against his empty savings account, and trusts to the friendship of fellow tellers and ledger-keepers to hold the worthless check until such time as he is able to back it with real money. Such a thing violates every rule of the banks and when found out is made a serious matter. Manipulations of this kind are very often responsible for the first black mark on the record of a clerk, but are seldom taken by the bank as a genuine cause for prosecution.

There are cases from time to time in which large sums are stolen when open prosecution becomes a matter of necessity. Here enters the question of making restitution, which is "put up to" the relatives and friends of the guilty clerk. The dislike of publicity is usually sufficient pressure to make any family circle disgorge, or even run into heavy debt to soften down the processes of law. Restitution is regarded as of such importance that most magistrates grant delays to help along the family collection. This arrangement between the court and the bank is sometimes curtly denounced, as when Col. Denison in the Toronto Police Court recently refused to hold the case to oblige the prisoner's wealthy friends, and told the lawyers that he would not become a party to any scheme to curtail the punishment of a crime. In the majority of cases, however, restitution does ameliorate the sentence, and to a large extent, smooths down the anxieties of the victimized institution.

There are people who would be more useful to the world if they were not in it.

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed "Tender for Public Building, Peterborough, Ont." will be received at this office until 4.00 P.M., on Monday, September 14, 1914, for the work mentioned.

Plans, specifications and form of contract can be seen and forms of tender obtained at the office of Mr. Thos. Hastings, Clerk of Works, Postal Station "F", Yonge St., Toronto, at the Post Office, Peterborough, and at this Department.

Persons tendering are notified that tenders will not be considered unless made on the printed forms supplied, and signed with their actual signatures, stating their occupations and places of residence. In the case of firms, the actual signature, the nature of the occupation and place of residence of each member of the firm must be given.

Each tender must be accompanied by an accepted cheque on a chartered bank, payable to the Honourable the Minister of Public Works, equal to ten per cent. (10 per cent.) of the amount of the tender, which will be forfeited if the person tendering decline to enter into a contract when called upon to do so, or fail to complete the work contracted for. If the tender be not accepted the cheque will be returned.

The Department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By order,
R. C. DESROCHERS,
Secretary.

FOR SALE

Mr. J. W. Fitzgerald is offering for sale some beautiful Building Lots on Benson and Geraldine Avenues.

This property lies within two minutes' walk of the Street Railway and within ten minutes' walk of the heart of the City. The City water, gas, light and sewer service are installed, the property already being completely surrounded by beautiful homes. The site is an ideal one, with a gentle southeasterly slope, and being considerably elevated above the city and not in the immediate vicinity of any manufacturing industries. The air is always pure, healthy and invigorating. Nearly all the lots are already beautifully wooded with foreign and domestic shade trees, and for anyone contemplating the erection of a home, there are certainly no lots in the city that offer equal advantages.

Copies of Registered Plan No. 149, which covers the property, may be seen and all other information may be had at the offices of Mr. R. J. Kidd, J. T. O'Connell & Co'y, C. J. Carroll & Co'y, also at the office of the owner, Mr. J. W. Fitzgerald, Ontario Land Surveyor, 435 George St. 'Phone 885.

Woman's World

Titled Daughters of Society Leaders Make Newport Season Gay.

DUCHESS OF MARLBOROUGH.

Newport is congratulating itself on the brilliancy of its social season. There are many distinguished guests present and expected. The beautiful and clever young Duchess Consuelo of Marlborough is the guest of her mother, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, at Marble House. Other titled daughters of American families who may take part in the social festivities of Newport during the season are Lady Granard, the daughter of Mrs. Ogden Mills; Lady Camoys, daughter of Mrs. William Watts Sherman; Countess Szechenyi, daughter of Mrs. Vanderbilt, and Countess Guy de Lasteyrie.

The rank, beauty and public spirit of the Duchess of Marlborough have made her exceedingly popular in London society. Even Queen Mary has shown her liking for the young American woman who has been so generous with her wealth in relieving the London poor and devoting time and money to many movements for public betterment.

Her entertainments at Sunderland House are brilliant affairs, often graced by the presence of some member of the royal family.

Like her mother, Mrs. Belmont, the duchess is a suffragist, though not a militant one.

Her two boys, the elder of whom, the Marquis of Blandford, is heir to the dukedom, are in England in the care of their tutors.

Man sets up the drinks—then drinks upset the man.

GRAY HAIR

THE VINE SCREEN.

Beautiful Effect In Nature That May Be Copied For the Lawn.

There is a beautiful curtain of hanging vines, stretching from one tree to another in a certain country place. It is the outgrowth of years, but it could be easily copied on a smaller scale by any one who has patience.

The curtain in question hangs from two old elm trees which stand about twenty feet apart. Virginia creeper is trained to grow up the trunk of the two trees to a height of about fifteen feet, and then it is trained along a strong wire fastened from one tree to the other.

The long tendrils of the creeper have grown many feet, and they hang down and intertwine until now they form a curtain, thick and strong, which reaches to within a few feet of the ground.

This curtain would make a satisfactory substitute for a conventional hedge in some situations. It could be copied with one of the thick growing annual vines, like hop or canary bird vine or balloon vine. Such a curtain could be trained to hang on one end of a sunny porch or veranda.

Of course the vines forming it would need gentle urging. The soil in which they are rooted should be rich and fine, and the vines should be scrupulously watered.

It might be better, in a sunny position, not to train the tendrils of the vine over wire, for wire becomes excessively hot and sometimes burns. Strong cord would be better.

Two Summer Hints.

To remove flyspecks from gilt picture frames beat the white of an egg lightly and add a half teaspoonful of baking soda; wipe the frames with this and then finish with a soft cloth. The legs of silk hose or the long arms cut from silk gloves make excellent cloths for this purpose. They are easily kept clean with soap and water and are easier to use than chamois.

To clean a willow chair scrub with soap and water, rinsing thoroughly in tepid water in which a tablespoonful of borax has been dissolved. This will prevent its yellowing. Then pour warm water over the chair and set it in the sun to dry to keep it from getting brittle. This also serves to tighten the willow.

Leather Furniture.

Milk that is heated is excellent for cleaning leather furniture. Use soft cotton cloths and rub all over to take off spots and dirt. Then take a mixture of beeswax, melted and mixed with turpentine, one part wax to two of the turpentine. This should be rubbed in and soft, clean cloths used for rubbing off so dust will not settle.

A Finland Festival.

Paul Waineman's "A Summer Tour In Finland" contains this pretty bit of folklore: "Midsummer is the great annual festival of Finland. From every height a bonfire leaps to the sky in honor of the mating of night and day, who are then united. The Finns possess a poetical legend relating to this annual custom. Kolt and Amarik, the sunset and sunrise, besought the lord of the sky to give them permission to be eternally a bride and bridegroom and once a year to clasp each other in their glowing arms."

Points for Mothers

Hot Weather Hygiene.

In hot weather danger sometimes arises for the children in a faulty condition of the food. This is especially the case with milk, and it is necessary to see that the milk used comes from a guaranteed source and that it is kept under hygienic conditions in the house.

Fruit, too, becomes a danger, and the eating of unripe or overripe fruit is a very common cause of nursery ailments.

Now to consider the question of medicine and dieting when the first warm weather appears.

For the former, when circumstances render it necessary, magnesia may be safely recommended, provided it is in a suitable form for children's use. Any obvious disturbance in the internal arrangements should be counteracted by this in preference to castor oil or even olive oil, for both have a tendency to heat the blood, a tendency which is counteracted in magnesia.

To the older children a simple saline draft may often be given with advantage.

A good, homely remedy is made by stewing prunes in water in which some senna pods have been soaked, one ounce of the pods being put into a pint of boiling water and left until the water is cold. Strain the water then and stew one pound of prunes in it, adding four or five tablespoonfuls of golden syrup; then pass the mixture through a sieve and keep it in a well stoppered bottle, giving one teaspoonful as a dose each morning. It is quite nice to take and generally liked by children.

When the Youngsters Travel.

Children traveling can all too easily prove a bore to every one. On shipboard it is easy to keep them out of the way. On some of the ships, of course, special nurseries and playrooms are provided. Even when this is not the case the children can be kept happily occupied with books and toys in their deck chairs or else can be taken for walks about the deck. But they should not be allowed to romp up and down the deck, running thoughtlessly into other pedestrians and stumbling rudely against the deck chairs.

Children in a train are harder to take care of. Whatever their own discomfort may be, don't allow them to romp up and down the aisles. If they become very restless they may walk up and down the aisles a few times without disturbing any one if they can be trusted to be quiet and mannerly.

For the rest interesting games and books that can be enjoyed in their seats should be provided for their entertainment. Colored crayons, pencil and other paper games, games of cards—like "authors"—paper dolls and the other sort of dolls and various word games that can be directed by an elder member of the party are all good entertainment for child travelers.

Summer Drinks For Children.

Barley water when very carefully prepared is a first rate drink for children in hot weather and makes a welcome change from plain water or milk and water. Lemonade should be only very sparingly given them, and then only when carefully made with fresh lemons.

A child should be allowed to drink as much as it likes either of barley water or plain cold filtered water. The extra perspiration caused by the hot weather will often induce thirst, and the need nature makes felt in this way should be met.

In hot weather, too, when there is lassitude or signs of ill health, one of the excellent patent foods should be given for a time. In this way the nutriment required which is not given by the ordinary diet will be obtained, for it is no use to force a child to eat more than it wants at ordinary meals—a very common nursery mistake in the first warm weather.

It is quite surprising to find the difference which a cup of malted milk once or twice a day and a meal of some good patent food for supper will make, even in a few days, in a child who is peevish and generally out of sorts.

Fruit For the Little Ones.

The question of fruit for children is a vexed one, and it is well to put parents on their guard. Really fresh fruit, either raw or cooked, provided it is in good condition and free from skins, strings and pips, is excellent for the little ones.

Rhubarb is a very valuable nursery food. It should be carefully rubbed through a sieve after having been stewed with raw brown sugar for young children. Then it can be given freely, even to tinies from eighteen months onward, especially if beaten up with custard. Indeed, this form of simple "food" makes a first rate nursery pudding and one much appreciated.

Raw fruit except bananas is rather at a premium now, but these should have the fibrous strings adhering to them carefully removed before being given to children, while for babies under two and one-half years they should be mashed up with a little cream.

Food Between Meals.

Give the children a cupful of warm liquid—soup or milk—if they come in hungry. It is nourishing and doesn't spoil their dinners.

WOMAN SICK FOR YEARS

Wants Other Women to Know How She was Finally Restored to Health.

Hammond, Ont. — "I am passing through the Change of Life and for two years had hot flushes very bad, headaches, soreness in the back of head, was constipated, and had weak, nervous feelings. The doctor who attended me for a number of years did not help me, but I have been entirely relieved of the above symptoms by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, Blood Purifier and Liver Pills, and give you permission to publish my testimonial." — Mrs. LOUIS BEAUCAGE, Sr., Hammond, Ont., Canada.

New Brunswick, Canada. — "I can highly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to any suffering woman. I have taken it for female weakness and painful menstruation and it cured me." — Mrs. DEVERE BARBOUR, Harvey Bank, New Brunswick, Canada.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record of being the most successful remedy for female ills we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., seem to prove this fact. Every suffering woman owes it to herself to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Bells and the Orchestra.

"Parsifal" is interesting quite apart from its artistic merit as having had a musical instrument invented for it and named after it. The reproduction of the sound of church bells in opera was long a difficulty. Real bells simply drowned the orchestra, and all substitutes were tried in vain until Dr. Mottl designed the Parsifal bell instrument, somewhat on the principle of the grand piano. Each of its five notes has six strings, which are struck by large hammers covered with cotton wool. And the result is as near to the solemn sound of church bells as the theatre has been able to get.—London Chronicle.

GETTING ACQUAINTED

There are some neighbors that you perhaps do not care to mix with, but occasionally a new one comes who is rather modest and difficult to become acquainted with, yet whom you instinctively believe to be good company.

One way to become acquainted is to ask if she is interested in the Summer Pastime and whether she is or not makes little difference, for you will soon be telling her what you're doing and she'll be interested enough to talk upon that and other pleasant topics.

They Are Held on Sunday and Rarely Finished In One Day.

In France elections are held on Sunday. Universal manhood suffrage is the rule. Every Frenchman of twenty-one years of age, on proof of six months' residence, is a legal voter at the elections to the chamber, saving only soldiers on active service and others disqualified for bankruptcy and criminal reasons. Because of the number of candidates the first day's polling in many districts is not final. Where no candidate receives an absolute majority, a second election is held. It often happens that from one-third to one-fourth of the elections for deputies are not finally decided until the second poll, when not infrequently one or more candidates in a district have withdrawn.

The polling begins at 8 in the morning and lasts until 6 in the evening. Instead of regularly appointed clerks and election officials, three volunteers take charge of the "urn" in which the ballots are deposited and conduct the proceedings. One of the penalties of being first to appear is the likelihood of being impressed into service as one of the assessors, of whom two, both independent voters, must serve with the "president of the ballot." The counting of the ballots is also done by volunteers called for from among the electors.

In the absence of the party system it is difficult strictly to classify the candidates. In a general way they range themselves in groups around certain well known political leaders.—New York World.

The Emu's Kick.

An emu can kick as hard as any donkey. The bird stands on one leg and with the other delivers at will a quick and generally very accurate blow. "I never would have believed that a bird had such power," says a recent Australian traveler, "had I not had ocular evidence of it during our trip. After two or three of our men suffered from the terrible kicks of these birds we did not venture near them, but, after running our horses until we got close enough, would bring them down with our rifles. We killed them for their feathers and also hunted for their eggs, but we took good care not to go within kicking distance."—[illegible]

Senator Davis Is Not Limited to Anti-Tipping Propaganda.

The Hon. Senator T. O. Davis, father of the much discussed anti-Tipping Bill which he succeeded in passing through the Senate at the last session of the Dominion Parliament, but which came to an untimely death for want of a foster father when introduced in the House of Commons, is one of the most active and frequently heard members of the Senate. He is a ready speaker and has a strong, sonorous voice, and when he speaks the Senate sits up and takes notice. He comes by his oratorical ability naturally, for he belongs to a family long recognised as a power in the nationalist movement in Ireland. The famous and eloquent Thomas Osborne Davis, the colleague of the late Hon. Thomas D'Arcy McGee and Gavin Duffy, in the Young Ireland party, was an uncle, and the Senator was named after him. To judge from portraits of the great Irish agitator, the nephew resembles the uncle very closely. Senator Davis's father was a man of education and great natural ability, graduate of Trinity College, Dublin, and was for some time principal of Rouse's Point, N.Y. High School.

Senator Davis sat in the House of Commons as a Liberal member, and was chief Liberal whip for the western members for the last four years of his term in the House. Ten years ago, Earl Grey called him to the Senate, where he sits, a sturdy man with a staunch figure and a strong countenance, with a keen eye and a firm mouth, with just a touch of humor flickering about his chin occasionally, and a hint of Irish mischief lurking in his eyes.

Senator Davis has had other ideas besides the abolition of tipping. It was on his initiative that official attention was attracted some ten years ago to the importance of investigating and conserving the natural resources of the unexplored Northland. On his initiative, and in spite of opposition from both sides of the House, the Senate appointed its famous Northland investigation committee, which disclosed so much about the resources of the country.

Senator Davis was born at Sherrington, P.Q., some fifty-eight years ago, and at the age of eighteen went west, entered a mercantile life in Prince Albert, on the north Saskatchewan. His knowledge of the French language, for he speaks French as fluently as English, proved of great value to him among the French half-breeds, who formed such a large proportion in the early days of the population of the North Saskatchewan.

The Senator was a personal friend of Reil, Dumont, the Touronds, and all of the other leaders of the Northwest Rebellion of 1885, and before the outbreak took place he personally warned all officials whose ear he could get that trouble was inevitable without the rights of the half-breeds were conceded. But he was only a small, insignificant trader at that time, and his fears were laughed at. He was in the east when the rebellion actually broke out, and, being one of the few white men who bluntly expressed the opinion that there was a sound basis for the half-breed grievances, he was set down as a sympathizer with the rebellion, which he was not. He was himself a victim of the uprising, the annual supplies for his store being warbound until the arrival of General Middleton's column at Humboldt. He personally accompanied the force from Qu'Appelle to Prince Albert. After the capture of Batoche, he interested himself in inducing the half-breeds and Indians to lay down their arms. He was first returned to Parliament in succession to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who was returned for both Saskatchewan and Quebec East at the general election of 1896 and relinquished the former seat.—Chesterfield in Family Herald.

A Bassano Fish Story.

One of the most ambitious fish stories of the season comes from Bassano, Alta., and has the advantage of being backed up by an actual photograph of the catch.

The fish was a sturgeon weighing one hundred and twenty-five pounds, and measuring six feet in length. It was captured in the Bow river in a pool just below the huge dam, which last month was officially opened by Sir Thomas Shaughnessy. The little prairie town of Bassano is eighty miles east of Calgary. — Canadian Courier.

June's Accidents.

The number of industrial accidents in Canada during June was 593, of which 299 were fatal. The latter included the 189 men killed at the Hillcrest disaster. Eleven other miners also lost their lives. In the steam railway service 17 were killed and 63 injured. Eleven were killed and 42 injured in the building trades and there were 15 fatalities and 58 men injured in the metal trades.

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

STORY OF LAST CANADIAN CONTINGENT

It was in October 30, 1899, that the First Canadian Contingent sailed from Quebec to take part in the South African war. It consisted of one battalion of infantry and was 1,500 strong. It had been gotten ready in sixteen days, and it included men from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It had been organized as the result of a great outburst of Canadian loyalty, and its organization is a landmark in the history of Canada and of the development of the Empire.

The sentiment which brought about this momentous action on the part of the Canadian Government had been growing all summer. It had received official expression when on the last day of July Sir Wilfrid Laurier moved resolutions expressing the sympathy of the House of Commons with the efforts of her Majesty's Imperial authorities to obtain for the subjects of her Majesty who have taken up their abode in the Transvaal such measures of justice and political recognition as may be found necessary to secure them in the possession of equal rights and liberties."

Sir Charles Tupper, the leader of the opposition, was absent at the time, but had been consulted by the Premier; and Sir Wilfrid read a letter from Sir Charles in which that veteran statesman gave his opinion that we were 'bound to give all the aid in our power to Her Majesty's Government in the present crisis." The resolutions were passed unanimously and the members rose to their feet and sang the National Anthem. Similar resolutions were passed at the same time by the Senate.

The next step in the development of public feeling was the receipt of a number of offers from militia officers throughout the country to raise units of various size for service in South Africa. These offers were forwarded to the Imperial authorities through the Governor-General, and played a part in later negotiations between the Canadian and the Imperial Governments. The offers included one from the present Minister of Militia and totalled in all some 4,600 men.

Late in September Sir Charles Tupper, who was in Great Britain, returned and put himself at the head of the movement for the sending of a contingent. He announced that if the Government would do so, they would have his support.

Public feeling from this time on crystallized rapidly. Through the columns of The Star and other newspapers' expression of opinion were received from all over the Dominion; and the country made it clear that the Government had a mandate to send troops to South Africa.

Offer of Troops Made.

On October 3rd the Canadian Military Gazette contained an article announcing that "if war should be commenced in the Transvaal the offer of a force from the Canadian militia for service will be made by the Canadian Government."

The next day the Toronto Globe contained an interview with the Premier denying the accuracy of this statement. He pointed out that the Militia Act authorized the Government to send the militia outside of the country for the defence of Canada, but added: "There is no menace to Canada, and, although we may be willing to contribute troops, I do not see how we can do so."

On the same day as the Military Gazette published its report Mr. Chamberlain telegraphed Lord Minto expressing "high appreciation of signal exhibition of patriotic spirit of people of Canada shown by offers to serve in South Africa.' 'He suggested that Canada might send four units of 125 men and asked Lord Minto to "inform accordingly all who have offered to raise volunteers."

This despatch referred to the offers made by individual militia officers.

On October 13th, ten days later, the Cabinet adopted an order in council containing an offer of 1,000 men and so advised the Colonial Secretary. This offer was accepted by the Imperial authorities; and the preparations for the despatch of the troops was begun at once.

There were only eighteen days before the contingent was to leave for South Africa. As a matter of fact they left one day sooner. In that period the regiment was enlisted and concentrated at Quebec. Half a company was brought all the way from the Pacific Coast. The very cloth out of which the uniforms were made was manufactured in the interval and made up into tunics. It was a task that taxed the stores of the Militia Department.

An example of the rapidity with which work was done is the preparation of the Allan liner Sardinian, which has been used as a cattle ship, for the conveyance of the troops.

Work was not commenced on her until October 21st," says Mr. Sandford Evans, in his book on the Canadian contingents, "and she sailed from Quebec, 175 miles away (from Montreal where she had landed) on the 20th. For the officers and non-commissioned officers, state rooms and saloons were erected. One-half the number of men were provided with hammocks and the other half with bunks. Special accommodation was provided for officers' baggage, men's kit-bags, helmets, accoutrements and rifles, which latter were placed in racks. For messing, tables and chairs were so constructed that they could be unshipped between meal times. A magazine had to be provided for the ammunition, and a Morris tube and revolver range erected. There were precautions, also, in the nature of a prison and a guard-room. On the spar deck there were built stalls for eight officers' horses. Electric light was installed, and special rooms erected for stores, steward's supplies, and the luxuries provided by the people of Canada. Extra refrigerators and water coolers were put in. Ship's boats were provided to allow a seat for every soul on board, and were properly fitted up according to the Board of Trade regulations. A life preserver was put in each man's hammock or bunk. A room was set apart for a hospital and dispensary, with berths, shelves, operating tables and other hospital equipment."

The Contingent Sails.

At ten minutes past four on the afternoon of October 30th, 1899, the 2nd Battalion, Royal Canadian Regiment, sailed from the Ancient Capital, The Governor-General, the Premier, General Hutton and Mayor Parent bade them farewell. As the vessel began to move the guns from the citadel boomed out a salute; and the bands on the deck and the crowds on the shore joined in the National Anthem.

This was the first of the contingents sent to South Arfica. In all the Dominion sent 7,300 men to the veldt and raised a thousand more to garrison Halifax, thus releasing the Leinster Regiment. Of those who went to South Arfica, 5,200 saw actual fighting, the last four regiments arriving after peace was proclaimed.

The first and second contingents, the second leaving early in 1909, were more especially the gift of the Canadian people. For these the Canadian Government paid the expense of equipment and of transport to South Africa. These contingents numbered 2446. The expenses of raising the rest of the troops who went to the veldt were borne by Lord Strathcona and by the Imperial Government. The total cost of the campaigns to the Canadian Government was $2,830,000. The Halifax garrison cost $834,000; and the first two contingents just under two millions.

The men who went in the first contingent received pay at the rates of the Canadian permanent force, 50 cents a day for private and correspondingly higher rates for officers. While in South Africa the British rates, a shilling a day, and the Canadian government made up the balance. The second contingent received mounted police pay, or 75 cents a day; and the Strathcona Horse the same. The latter regiments, organized by the Canadian authorities for the War Office, received pay at the British rates for irregulars in time of war, five shillings with allowances for privates, and seven and sixpense for the first and second class troops in the Canadian South African constabulary.

Casualties Not Heavy.

The casualties of the Canadian forces were not heavy. They were 22 killed in action; 136 died of disease or of accidental injury; and 252 were wounded.

The whole Canadian people were represented in the contingents. In the first contingent the companies were raised:

"A" in British Columbia and Manitoba, half in each province.

"B," at London, Ont.

"C" at Toronto.

"D" at Ottawa and Kingston.

"E" at Montreal.

"F" at Quebec,

"G" in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

"H" in Nova Scotia.

In the Second Contingent the first battalion was recruited as follows:

"A" squadron: 1st troop at Toronto; 2nd at Toronto and St. Catharines; 3rd, at Peterboro, Ottawa, and Montreal; 4th at London and Kingston.

"B" squadron: 1st troop at Winnipeg; 2nd at Portage la Prairie, Brandon, Yorkton and Winnipeg; 3rd at Montreal, Quebec and Cookshire; 4th at Sussex, N.B., St. John, N.B., and Canning, N.S.

The second battalion was recruited from the Northwest Territories.

The actual figures for the recruits from the different provinces are not available; but an approximate estimate is as follows:

British Columbia	900
Northwest Territories	1,100
Manitoba	800
Ontario	2,300
Quebec	1,050
New Brunswick	525
Nova Scotia	525
Prince Edward Island	150

The contributions of the chief cities to the first two contingents is fairly well indicated by the particulars given as to the raising of the units. The South African constabulary and the Strathcona Horse came chiefly from the west. In the 3rd, 4th, 5th and 6th regiments, C. M.R., Montreal was represented by 125, Toronto by 158, Ottawa by 182, London by 72, Hamilton by 64, Kingston by 22, Quebec by 31, St. John, N.B., by 83, Halifax by 82, and Charlottetown by 37.

A brief, but comprehensive statement of Canada's aid is given by Major C. F. Hamilton in his article on the military history fo Canada in "Canada and Her Provinces." It is as follows:

Canadian contingents proper: First Contingent, sailed October 30, 1899, returned in November and December, 1900. 2nd (special service) Battalion, Royal Canadian Regiment, 1 batt., 1,150 all ranks.

PREPARATIONS FOR WAR BY GERMANY DATE FROM EARLY PERIOD IN NEGOTIATIONS

Apologists for the German and Austrian governments have striven to fasten the responsibility for the war upon other powers. Certain technical details which have been published by the French newspaper, the Temps, go to prove that Germany meant war from the beginning. It will be remembered that the course of events was briefly as follows:

July 23, 6 p.m.—The Austrian ultimatum was presented to Servia.

July 25, 6 p.m.—The Servian reply was given and the Austrian minister quitted Belgrade.

July 28—Austria, after some hostile actions, declared war on Servia.

July 28 or 29.—Russia ordered a partial mobilization.

August 1—Germany declared war on Russia.

The Temps has shown that while these events were in progress and during the course of negotiations represented as showing Germany earnest in the cause of peace, active military preparations were in full swing in Germany.

On July 25—before the reply of Servia to the Austrian ultimatum was due—all leave was stopped for garrisons on the French frontier.

On the evening of the same day all bridges, viaducts and similar works near the Franco-German frontier were placed under military guard.

On the same day all the measures concerning the preparation of fortresses for war were put in application. Undergrowth was removed, wire entanglements set up, advanced batteries set in position, ammunition distributed, and telegraphic communications established. These measures were steadily continued from that date.

On the morning of July 26 orders were given to the railway companies to distribute their engines, rolling stock, etc., with a view to mobilization, and to clear the mobilization platforms.

In the evening of July 26 all men on leave were recalled and all troops engaged at the instruction camps or manoeuvre grounds returned to barracks.

On July 27 the work of local mobilization and commandeering began. The principal supplies establishments, in particular the most important flour mills, were occupied by troops.

On this same day, in advance of Austria's declaration of war, the German "covering troops" began to take up their position, and all frontier roads were barred. It may be explained that the "covering troops" are special corps stationed on the frontier, which are kept unusually strong in peace time, their duty being to repel any early attacks which might break up the railway system and otherwise hinder the concentration of the main body.

On the same day the telegraphic censorship came into force, and the German fleet was prepared for service.

On July 28, 29 and 30 the "covering troops" were brought up to their full effectives by the calling up of individual reservists, at least 125,000 men being so called up. Horses and motor cars were commandeered, and all along the French frontier, particularly in the neighborhood of Metz, the corps usually stationed at some distance were brought up into close proximity with the frontier.

The preparations for the war of the German government thus date from a very early period in the negotiations which preceded the outbreak of hostilities.—From the Department of Militia and Defence.

COMMANDS THE FRENCH NAVY

De La Peyrere a Man of Pluck — Completely Reorganized Service.

The French navy is under the supreme command of Admiral de la Peyrere. Acknowledged both at home and abroad as the most distinguished officer of the French navy, he has both in his capacity as chief of the Admiralty staff and as Minister of Marine, completely reorganized that service, eliminating the dead wood, abolishing hundreds of almost incredible abuses, consigning to the scrap heap battleships and cruisers that were out of date and paying particular attention to the development of submarine navigation.

His popularity among all grades of the service is very great, and when Minister of Marine he still further enhanced it on one occasion by an exhibition of personal pluck thoroughly in keeping with his character and antecedents. Learning that in consequence of the number of disastrous explosions in connection with the handling of the charges of the big guns, notably the terrible destruction of the ill-fated battleship Jena at Toulon, the sailors and officers had become convinced that it was almost as dangerous to stand behind the gun or anywhere near its breech as at its muzzle, he hastened to Toulon, went on board one of the battleships there, ordered it into the offing under the pretext of witnessing some experiments with the guns, then caused the ammunition to be brought up haphazard from the hold, and throughout the entire firing, extending over a period of several hours, made a point of standing in the immediate proximity of the breech of the gun so that if there had been any explosion he would have been the very first to be blown into eternity. He saw active service in France's naval conflict with China.

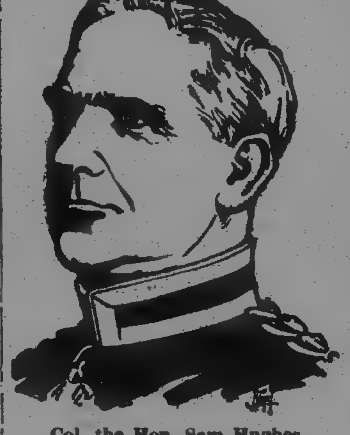
First War Correspondent

The first war correspondent according to a theory propounded by Sutherland Edwards appears to have been Homer who was sent by the editor of an Argos paper called the Chronos to describe the siege of Troy. Hostilities lasted only about seven weeks, when they came to an end the Greek chiefs were in no hurry to return to their wives. Homer was a good sort and as he drew a large salary and a handsome allowance for expenses from the Chronos, he readily accepted the scheme propounded by the wise Ulysses—to keep the war going in the columns of his paper so long as he could manage to write about it. His letters were too good not to publish and meantime the Greek chiefs had an enjoyable time at Troy and elsewhere. Re-issued in book form as "The Iliad," these early examples of war correspondence have enjoyed a wider circulation than was possible even in the columns of the Chronos.

IN THE SPOTLIGHT

Col. the Hon. Sam. Hughes

Experience and training count! If a man will but train himself for a certain position in life, there will come a time when his experience and training will prove of value. At the present time, Canada's War Lord is putting into practice the preachings and teachings which he promulgated for the past quarter of a century. Colonel the Honorable Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia and Defence, is a born fighter. He commenced his career as a school boy when he took the side of the Orange against the Green, with the result that both forces were changed to red. Later, he continued his warlike tactics on the lacrosse field, where he and a few of his cohorts did yeomen service in giving a true exhibition of Canada's national game with sufficient thrills and rough tactics included to make the spectators "sit up and take notice." However, these experiences were simply try-outs and preliminary canters to the real war-like career which was to be his later on. It is well known that an editor, especially if he be of the fighting kind, can get more excitement to the square inch than any other man living. Col. Sam hearing of this untried, but extremely attractive field, entered it and for years created sufficient excitement to put and keep Lindsay on the map. As editor of the "Warder" in that town, he engaged in more conflicts and staged more dramatic scenes than the citizens dreamed could take place in the whole world. As a little side issue, he entered the Militia and by means of hard work and self-assertion rose to the command of the 45th Battalion.



Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes.

Finding these occupations somewhat tame, "the fighting Colonel," entered politics and staged a perpetual Donnybrook Fair throughout North Victoria. He was elected to Parliament and has represented North Victoria and then Victoria for nearly quarter of a century. Then came the crowning episode of his life when the Boer War broke out in South Africa. The redoubtable Colonel owing to a mix-up with the Imperial authorities, was not favored with a commission, but he managed to get aboard the troop ship and sailed away to fight under the Southern Cross. The story of his doing and those of his man Turpin make interesting reading. Undoubtedly he contributed real service to the British cause and came home a more competent officer because of his experience on the veldt. We next hear of this warrior in conflict with certain British war officers who thought they knew how Canadian Militia should be handled. Between times our War Lord defended the Ross Rifle and out-flanked and routed its critics. He has also indulged in lawsuits with belligerent editors, denounced his critics in season and out of season, and generally speaking has occupied the centre of the stage from the time he became Minister of War until the present.

Colonel Sam Hughes has spent a lifetime in war or preparations for war. It makes little difference whether he was defending the Orange against the Green, swatting his opponents with a lacrosse stick, writing fiery editorials, campaigning along the back concessions, fighting on the floor of the House, or warring with the Boers on the South African Veldt, his life has been one long joyous conflict. Colonel Sam can smell the conflict from afar and its very breath is sweet to his nostrils. At the present time, when he is fighting for King, Country and the integrity of the Empire, he is at his post. His long experience, his thorough knowledge of military matters, his enthusiasm and thoroughness will all prove big factors in making for success. No matter how men may differ with him politically or on personal grounds, there is a general feeling among the Canadian people at the present time that he will play his part courageously. Canada today needs a man who is familiar with military matters, who is not afraid of work and responsibility and who can not only give orders but take the initiative and lead his men, if necessary. Colonel Sam Hughes is an efficient officer and while he has been and is severely criticized for his pro-militarism, much will be forgiven him in the present hour of need. It is undoubtedly true that no man is so much in the limelight as our War Lord. If the limelight refuses to focus upon him, he is apt to create some calcium or make a war of his own. Canadaians generally will say, "Good Luck to the Honorable Sam!" and hope that in his encounter with the Kaiser—his only other rival as a real War Lord—that Colonel Sam will come out on top. He is a bonnie fechter! Here's to his success!—Journal of Commerce.

A good treatment for unduly moist hands is to bathe them frequently in warm water to which a little alum or vinegar has been added.

War Service

First—No extra premium will be charged on policies now in force on the lives of any policyholders of the Canada Life Assurance Company who may engage in military or naval service, in or outside of Canada, irrespective of whether such policies provide for an extra premium or not.

Second—In the event of any policyholder not having paid any premium falling due during his absence, the Company will keep his policy in full force and effect during his term of service abroad, the unpaid premium being treated as a loan upon the policy.

Policyholders should notify the Company upon entering foreign service.

About Zutoo Tablets

"I have been a sufferer from headache since childhood and have used all, or nearly all, of the so-called "cures" on the market. Some months since my attention was called to your Zutoo Tablets and I have been using them ever since with the most gratifying results, I find they cure a "sick" or "nervous" headache in a few minutes and leave no bad effect. My family use them whenever needed with equally good results, I have frequently given them to friends who were suffering from headache and they never failed to give quick relief. I find them a good remedy for "sour" stomach as well as headache. I always carry them in my grip on the road and would not be without them at any cost."

MANY VALUABLE SPECIALS ON PETERBORO PRIZE LIST

The Dates For Annual Exhibition Are September 17, 18 and 19, and Record Is Looked Forward To.

From general appearances, the twelfth Peterborough Industrial Exhibition, to be held September 17, 18 and 19, will surpass all previous records, more especially in regards to the prizes offered. Several former exhibitors claim the 1914 prize list is away ahead of other lists of local fairs.

The fact that the average exhibitor is more pleased with the possibility of obtaining a cup than cash prizes has caused the directors to put forth greater efforts and have as many cups as posible. Among the special prizes are found no less than eight valuable silver cups, while the cash prizes are of large amounts. Numerous new competitions have been placed on the list, all for the purpose of making this year "the year for exhibitors."

The yearly prize list is now ready for mailing, and prospective exhibitors may procure them by applying to the Secretary-Treasurer, F. J. A. Hall.

The following is the list of special prizes:

HORSES.

Silver Cup, valued at $10.00, presented by Roland Denne, Esq., for the best heavy draught mare, any age or breed. To be shown on halter. Cup to be won three times by the same exhibitor.

Three-year-old filly or gelding. 1st prize, $5 cash, donated by V. Eastwood, Esq., manager of the Royal Bank, Peterborough.

Two-year-old filly or gelding. 1st prize, $5 cash, presented by Messrs. Davis, Thompson & Company.

A special prize of $5 cash donated by Messrs. William Roberts & Son, for the best general purpose mare. Entry fee, 50c.

Two-year-old filly or gelding. 1st prize, $5 cash donated by G. C. Wainwright, manager of the Bank of Ottawa.

Special prize, silver cup, valued at $10, donated by the Cressman Company, Limited, for the best carriage horse, any age, in harness; cup to be won three times by the same exhibitor.

One-year-old filly or gelding. 1st prize, $5 cash donated by the Toronto Loan and Savings Company.

Special prize, silver cup, valued at $10, presented by F. S. Redmond, Esq., for the best roadster, trotter, in harness, any age; cup to be won three times by same exhibitor.

Best filly or gelding, best suited for road purposes, presented by W. H. Dunsford, Esq., manager Canadian Bank of Commerce. Entry fee, 50c—$5.

Best lady rider; first prize, $5 cash presented by W. R. Travers, Esq., manager Bank of Montreal, and $3 by the Society.

Best lady driver; 1st prize, $5 cash presented by R. W. Travers, manager Bank of Montreal, and $3 by the Society.

Best single four-wheeled turnout; horse, harness and vehicle to be considered; the driver to be acompanied by a lady; horse 50 per cent., carriage and appointments, 50 per cent. First prize, $8 cash by the Society, and silver cup, value $10, presented by Messrs. Richard Hall & Son. Cup to be won three times by the same exhibitor. Third prize, Daily Examiner for one year.

Best pony turnout, pony 11½ or over; pony to count 60 per cent., outfit 40 per cent. First prize, $5, donated by the Bank of Nove Scotia.

For the best trained foal of 1914, trained by a boy of 16 or under. Prize, $2 cash, offered by C. E. Moore, Esq.

A cup valued at $25, presented by W. G. Morrow, Esq., manager Toronto Savings and Loan Company, for the best carriage horse exhibited. Cup to be won three times by the same exhibitor.

BEEF CATTLE.

For the best Durham bull, any age, cup valued at $10, presented by J. H. Garbutt, Esq., president. Cup to be won three times by the same exhibitor.

DAIRY.

For best ten pounds of butter in prints. First prize, china dinner set, 102 pieces, value $10, donated by R. J. Soden, Esq., books and stationery, 369 George street.

CHEESE.

Prizes made up of $15 cash donated by the Peterborough Cheese Board; $3 cash, donated by G. A. Gillespie, Esq., and the balance by the Society.

Cool cured cheese (for shipping) not less than 50 pounds, second half of July make—$6, $4, $3.

Cheese must be entered in the name of the factory in which it is made, by the manager, each factory being allowed to make only one entry.

Special prize of a cup, value $20, donated by Mr. R. W. Ward, Dairy Inspector, for the highest scoring cheese (not less than 50 pounds), first half of August make.

The De Laval Dairy Supply Company offer a special prize of a silver trophy cup, valued at $20, for the best dairy cow of any breed exhibited at this exhibition. Cup to be won three times, when it becomes the property of the winner.

POLICE LOOK FOR TWO SWINDLERS

Reward of $400 is Offered for Their Arrest

All the Ontario police have receive a circular from the United States police offering $400 reward for the arrest of Clay Wilson, alias H. G. Mason, and Doc Baggs, alias Robt. S. Prentiss. Two hundred dollars is the reward in each case. They are wanted for a mining swindle of $15,000, perpetrated in Dayton, Ohio, in 1909.

They were sentenced in 1911 to three years in the penitentiary.

Wilson has three gold capped upper front eeth, a horizontal scar three-quartrs of an inch long one and a half inches above the left wrist, a red dot on the right temple and a slight cast on the right eye. He was born at Fairfield, Ohio, in 1854. He is six feet tall, weighs 200 pounds, and is heavily built. His hair is dark mixed with grey, and his gray-blue eyes have a slight tinge of yellow. His complexion is brownish-yellow.

Baggs is described as having one upper right side front tooth gold capped, a V-shaped cut on the left index finger, an oblique cut scar on the left thumb. The right index finger is amputated at the first joint. Baggs was born at Oneida, N. Y., in 1840. He is five feet seven inches in height, weighs 150 pounds, built medium slender, has gray hair and bald on top. His eyes are hazel, slate-blue, and is of medium light complexion.

CLYDESDALE

Special Correspondence.

Mrs. Allan Caldwell's home was the centre of attraction on Saturday 15th, the celebration being their daughter Madeline's birthday. A number of guests from around were present and after having spent a pleasant afternoon in games and amusements of different kinds, a very dainty lunch was served. After wishing their hostess many happy returns of the day they left for their homes.

Rev. Mr. Brown of Warsaw conducted the service in the Presbyterian Church on Sunday last.

Mrs. H. McCaskie and her little daughter Edna who have been visiting friends in this vicinity for the past three months has returned to her home in Belleville.

Mr. Albert Cadwell has returned from a two weeks' vacation in Galt and the surrounding country where he visited his parents and other members of the family.

Mr. Dennick's auto passed through the village on Monday last.

Crowd Was Enthusiastic.

It was a very enthusastic audience that assembled, last evening, to hear the weekly concert of the 57th Regt. Band, the numbers, which were all patriotic, were enthusiastically applauded, especially Rule Britannia, and the Maple Leaf.

Canada's Big Telescope.

The 72-inch reflecting telescope now under construction for the Canadian Government, a description of which was recently published in these columns, is to be located on Little Saanich Mountain, near Victoria, B.C. This site was chosen after prolonged investigation of atmospheric conditions in different parts of the Dominion, and despite the fact that its selection entails much additional expense for the purchase of land, the construction of a road and other preliminaries, as compared with other sites that were under consideration.

Mr. Stephen's Charity.

The Rothschilds' benefactions are now closely approached by those of Lord Mount Stephen, who built up an enormous fortune out of the development of the Canadian Pacific Railway and other ventures. It is understood that he gives away about $250,000 a year, and that he has enriched charity by at least $5,000,000.

OBITUARY

MRS. O. P. BUTLER.

We regret to learn of the death of Mrs. O. P. Butler, which took place at Marmora on Monday last. She had been in her usual health, and on Sunday evening was calling on a near neighbor, when she was taken suddenly ill, and died on Monday soon after noon. Mr. Butler was in Peterborough and did not arrive home until a few minutes after her death. Mrs. Butler was well known in Stirling, being a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Wheeler, and had lived here many years after her marriage, previous to going to Marmora. The immediate cause of her death was an appoplectic stroke. She was about 51 years of age, and besides her husband leaves a family of two sons and three daughters to mourn her death, all married except the youngest daughter, who was living at home. The two sons and one daughter are living in Toronto, and one daughter at St. Catharines. Her aged parents and one brother and sister reside in Stirling, and one sister, Mrs. W. J. Butler, lives in Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, and one brother, Harry, in Chicago. These all have the sincere sympathy of the community in their sudden bereavement.

The funeral took place to-day (Thursday), interment being made in Stirling cemetery.—Stirling News Argus.

SAYS COUNCIL'S ACTION IS PALTRY AND NIGGARDLY

Woodstock, Aug. 22. — "Paltry" and "niggardly" were the terms applied by Lieutenant Colonel John White to the action of the city council in fixing the amount to be given the Woodstock members of the Canadian Contingent at $5 and at the same time failing to consider the suggestion made that the lives of the soldiers be insured.

"I consider that the city council has not risen to the occasion in ths matter," said Col. White. "The aldermen should have least been called together in a meeting and discussed the matter. If the council will not consider the matter the citizens should get together in public meeting and discuss it independently of the members of the council and I am not so sure that this will not be done. This is a matter the general public ought to have the opportunity of discussing particularly when their representatives refuse to take the initiative.

One way to keep books is not to lend them. It is just the opposite with money.

FEW CAMPERS LEFT DOWN THE RIVER

In taking a paddle down the Otonabee River, these nights, one is struck with the surrounding loneliness on all sides. With the heavy rain of the last few days, it has dampened the ardor of the most optimistic campers, and the thoughts of the approaching "September morns" have caused quite a few to change their place of abode. Of course there are a few of the dyed-in-the-wool variety who will be there till a flurry of snow chases them home.

WAR TAX ON BRUSSELS

Germans Make Demand of $40,000,000

City Treasurer Declares That They Will Not Get it—German Advance Continues Westward Along the Meuse and Namur Has Been Attacked

PARIS, Aug. 22.—An official statement issued last night says:—

"Namur, a strongly fortified town in Belgium, is partially invested. Heavy artillery opened fire toward noon. The westward movement of the German columns continues on both banks of the Meuse, outside the range of the action at Namur.

"German cavalry forces passed through Brussels yesterday, going westward. They were followed later by an army corps.

"A war tax of $40,000,000 has been levied on the city of Brussels by the German general.

"The retreat of the Belgians continued to-day without incident."

No French territory is occupied by the enemy, except a piece of enclosed land at Audun-le-Roian, in the Departments of Meurthe and Moselle.

Communication Interrupted.

LONDON, Aug. 22. — Telegraphic communication between England and Brussels was entirely interrupted yesterday, and no despatches were accepted for any place in the Belgian provinces of Limburg, Liege, Namur, Luxemburg, Brabant or Antwerp, except for the city of Antwerp.

According to the despatches received at the Belgian Legation here, the Belgian army retired on Antwerp in good order, and is "now ready to cooperate with the allies."

There is no confirmation of the report that the allies had recaptured Tirlemont, forcing the Germans to retire after losing heavily.

The correspondent of The Times at The Hague telegraphing yesterday says: "The preparations for the defence of Antwerp extend over an enormous area. All classes in the city are joining in the work day and night, but there is no sign of panic or confusion.

"The gates driven through the walls by a peace-loving people are closed while this work of preparation goes doggedly forward. Antwerp itself offers a strange contrast. At almost every window appear English, Belgian and French flags, giving a festive air to the city which is preparing to resist to the last gasp."

Great Battle Preparing.

PARIS, Aug. 22.—The Petit Parisien's review of the war situation today says: "A great battle is preparing. Belgium is to be the theatre of the most formidable shock in history, the duration of which escapes prophecy.

"Repulsed in the south at Dinant by the French, the Germans have been making since Tuesday a vigorous offensive movement towards the north, which on Wednesday forced the Belgians after a fine resistance to fall back on Antwerp. The Berlin Government will claim a triumph whereas from a strategical point of view the movement was of mediocre importance.

"The French armies also have taken up their respective positions, and it is certain that our general staff is far from being taken unprepared by our adversaries' tactics. The staff had long foreseen them and is prepared to deal with them under the best auspices."

They'll Never Get the Tax.

LONDON, Aug. 22. — The Chronicle's correspondent, Dr. Saroiea, at Antwerp, says: "The Germans have demanded a war imposition of $40,000,000 from Brussels. The treasurer of the city, M. Hallet, informs me that 'no possible coercive measures will give them even a fraction of that sum'."

The Kaiser's levy on Brussels means $55 per head for every man, woman, boy and girl in the city.

ROBBED THE DEAD

Eighty-three Germans Will Be Court Martialed.

PARIS, Aug. 22. — Eighty-three German prisoners, accused of robbing the dead on the field of battle, arrived yesterday at Clermont Ferrand, capital of the department of Puy-De-Dome, where the police had great difficulty in restraining the population from attacking them.

When arrested in the vicinity of Muhlhausen many jewels, a number of wedding rings and large sums of money were found on the Germans. It is alleged that these valuables were stolen from the bodies of officers and soldiers.

The German prisoners will appear before a court-martial to be held by the thirteenth army corps. They were transported to Clermont Ferrand, handcuffed in fours on several trucks bearing the imperial eagle. It is charged that they wore Red Cross insignia to facilitate the robberies on the battlefield.

Kaisers Expectations Blasted.

LONDON, Aug. 22.—Thursday was the date when, according to the forecasts of their own and many other military writers in Europe, the German troops were due to appear before the walls of Paris.

According to French official advices, it is the Germans intention to pass their main army into France by the Brussels road. The Germans themselves are naturally silent, but there is no reason to doubt they are quite as well aware of the difficulties of this route as are their opponents.

RUSSIANS TAKE LYCK.

St. Petersburg Despatch Reports Capture of Prussian City.

ROME, Aug. 22.—An official despatch received here yesterday afternoon from St. Petersburg states that the Russian main army has crossed the German frontier and occupied the City of Lyck, in east Prussia, as the result of the fighting on the 18th and 19th instants.

The Grand Duke Nicholas, the commander-in-chief of the Russian army, is personally directing the operations of the army corps which is now invading Germany.

Lyck is a city of nearly 12,000 inhabitants, and is an important railroad junction. It lies about twelve miles from the Russian frontier.

Captain Refused Parole.

HAVANA, Aug. 22.—The captain of the British freight steamer Hostilius, from Montevideo by way of Cienfuegos, reports that when 700 miles east of Cienfuegos, she was stopped by the German cruiser Dresden, which signalled a demand that the captain and crew give their parole not to serve against Germany in the present war.

The captain of the Hostilius signalled his refusal, and the Dresden proceeded on her course without further molestation of the freighter.

Foreign Correspondents Threatened.

LONDON, Aug. 22.—The Amsterdam correspondent of The Chronicle, telegraphing yesterday, said that Antwerp was being put in a state of defense and being provisioned for a siege.

He adds that it was stated at the office of the general staff on Thursday that all foreign correspondents found in Belgium after Thursday night would be shot.

SKATING ON THIN ICE.

A Sober Reflection in the Wake of a Stroke of Diplomacy.

TWO Scotchmen with a thirst counted up their joint possessions and found that they could just cover the price of a drink of whisky. They went into the nearest saloon and ordered one drink, Sandy putting down the money for the same. Then arose a discussion as to how it could be disposed of to the best advantage. It was no Alphonse and Gaston discussion Each was disposed to stand on his own right, while at the same time admitting the claim of the other.

At the critical moment a stranger entered the saloon. With a wink of his eye at his companion Sandy turned to the newcomer and said, "Will you have a drink with us?"

Supposing that the others had had a drink before his entrance, the stranger said heartily, "I will," and emptied the glass.

There was an uncertain pause for a moment, and then the third man said. "Come on, boys, and have one on me."

They had it. As they went out Sandy wiped his mouth and said, "See, mon. It worked."

"Yes," was the reply, "but, oh, what a risk!"—Chicago News.

Not Worth Paying For.

Ed and Joe were walking along a country road one hot day and became very thirsty, but could not find any water. Coming at last to a farmer's house and noticing a woman standing in the door, they went up to her and requested a drink of water.

She said, "We haven't had any rain for three weeks, and the well is dry."

"Then please give us a drink of milk."

The woman replied that the milk was all taken to market, but added that she had some buttermilk stored away and would give the thirsty travelers a drink of it.

After quenching their thirst with buttermilk they offered to pay the kind woman for it, but she refused the money, saying, "I was going to give it to the pigs anyway."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Power of Habit.

Mrs. Tucker gave some food to a tramp one morning, and as he was eating it she noticed a peculiarity.

"Why," she asked, "do you stick out the middle finger of your left hand so straight while you are eating? Was it ever broken?"

"No, ma'am," replied the tramp, "but during my halcyon days I wore a diamond ring on that finger, and old habits are hard to break." — National Monthly.

"I told Uncle Simon that he was getting too old and feeble to attend to business."

"Did he take it kindly?"

"He threw me out of the office."—Boston Post.

Located.

"What do you consider the chief end of man, Billups?" asked Barrowdale.

"Well, in these days of the tango," said Billups, "I should say that man's chief end was his feet."—Judge.

Miss Pert—Dreadful idea. There are not enough men to go around as it is.

LOCAL MARKET

The market this morning was largely attended. The fowl and fruit was very plentiful indeed, but there was not much difference in prices than that of a week ago. Chickens were somewhat cheaper. There was no hay offered for sale.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 21.—Trading was quiet today, there being little or no speculative business. Prices were stronger, Liverpool cables being firmer than expected and American markets also showing strength, causing a feeling that wheat would be worth more money. Opening prices in wheat were ¼c lower to ⅜c higher, and the range to noon was ½c to 1⅝c higher.

Cash grains closed: Wheat, ¼c to ½c lower, the prices being for new crop. Oats unchanged to ½c higher. Barley unchanged to 1c higher, and flax 5c to 5½c lower.

Inspections Thursday, 90 cars, against 80 last year. In sight today, 75 cars.

Fifty-two cars new wheat were inspected today.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 21.—A feature of the local grain market today was the stronger feeling in the market for oats. Prices scored a further advance of 1c per bushel, which is attributed to the limited supply available on spot and the small quantities offering from the west. The demand is fair for car lots. A firm feeling prevails in the flour market, with a good trade passing. Millfeed is active. Rolled oats have advanced 5c per barrel. There was a firmer feeling in butter today, and finest creamery sold at the auction sale at 27⅝c. There was quite a bit of excitement in the cheese market owing to the increased demand from English buyers at higher prices, which created keen competition between buyers at the boards in the country. Prices scored a sharp advance.

Demand for eggs is good. All grades of refined sugar were advanced 70c per 100 pounds.

TIRLEMONT RETAKEN.

British Office Announces Victory For the Allies.

LONDON, Aug. 22.—The German forces were signally defeated yesterday at Tirlemont by the allies. The war press bureau states that the Germans suffered heavy losses and were forced to abandon Tirlemont.

Recapture from the Germans constitutes a strong counter blow by the allies to offset whatever advantage the enemy may have gained in occupying Brussels and forcing the Belgians to retreat to Antwerp. Tirlemont is to the east of Brussels and southeast of Louvain.

Military experts declare that, with Tirlemont lost, the Germans are in grave danger of having their forces in northern Belgium cut off from their main army, now between Huy and Namur.

With Holland mobilizing to enforce respect for her neutrality, the Germans must guard against attack from the rear, while the allies at Tirlemont are in position to seriously hamper a retreat to Huy.

Important concentration of troops of the allied armies is under way in Belgium to-day, the French War Offices announces.

The statement issued in Paris further asserts that no French territory is now occupied by the enemy except a piece of enclosed land at Audun-Le-Roman, in the department of Meurthe-Et-Moselle.

France admits that German forces continue to pass the Meuse near Huy.

Having forced the Belgians to retreat to Antwerp, the Germans yesterday bombarded Namur with heavy siege guns and attacked the French lines at the French border.

Advices by wireless at Amsterdam picture Berlin as delirious with joy at the announcement of the occupation of Brussels.

MAY WAR ON AUSTRIA.

Japanese Siege of Kiao-Chou Involves New Complication.

TOKIO, Aug. 22.—Japan is again confronted with another international problem that may result in the Japs declaring war on Austria. An Austrian man-of-war is now bottle up in the German port of Kiao-Chou. Cruising off the port awaiting her are English ships.

If the Japanese fire on the German fleet bottled up in the harbor with the Austrian man-of-war, the Austrians will have to take to the sea and engage the British or remain in the zone of fire. From indications to-day, it seems apparent that the Austrians will take sides with the Germans and assist in their defence. This act in itself would be a causus beli.

But the Government here is fully alive to the situation, and is prepared to war with Austria if it is necessary. Japan is ready to strike Germany, and only a complete backdown by the Kaiser at Kiao-Chou can prevent an addition to the international warfare in which nearly the entire world is engaged. The ultimatum expires Sunday.

The Tango Coiffure.

The tango coiffure is the latest in the perfectly coifed head. It is a decidedly simple effect and yet at the same time a charming one. Waved hair is combed back straight from the forehead, with a slope upward, and rolled in the prevailing invisible chiffon. Ears are again a la mode, sometimes the lobes exposed or merely the tip glimpsed through curls caught high at the side of the head. There is not any fringe across the front of the forehead, but curls drop at the sides, sometimes in clusters of three and again in one full ringlet falling low. One single ringlet always accompanies the tango coiffure on each side of the face.

WORRY CAN KILL

Science Proves That Fretting Frequently Costs Life

We have often heard that worry can kill even the nine-lived cat, but we have only half believed it, and until now we have had no scientific proof that it was so.

Medical science has recently confirmed the fact and explained how worry commits its murders. It has reached the conclusion that in many instances of what has been regarded as lunacy, and from which the victim finally dies, the case has simply been one of acute worry. Instead of the person dying of mental breakdown he has worried himself to death.

Worry medical science now defines as the dominance of one idea, usually that of fear. There is a fear of some existing condition or dread of what may happen. The idea crowds all others from the mind, or permits them only the feeblest and occasional activity. The most terrible tyranny is the tyranny of an idea.

This one idea pounds hammer-like upon one set of brain cells. It overstimulates them, causing an unusual flow of blood to those portions and a dearth of it to other parts of the brain. This would not be serious if it happened only now and then, for every brain cell should be replenished by more than the usual flow of blood at times to keep it properly fed and nourished.

But a constant overfeeding of these cells causes a congestion there. The cells become more and more distended. The worry grows more and more acute. The pounding of the blood against the sides of the cell acquires a hammer-like violence. The sides of the cells wear thin. A cell bursts. There is a so-called "clot on the brain." Death follows.

The cure of the worry that kills is prevention. Refuse to worry. Do your best, and, having done this, decline as positively to fret about the results as you would decline to drink a draught of poison. Worry comes as an occasional visitant to everyone, but as we shut our doors to unwelcome visitors, so we close the portals against the entrance of worry. Admitted, it ceases to become a visitor—it is a habit, and a habit that destroys. The action of worry upon the brain cells is most like the constant dropping of water upon a stone. At first it makes not the slightest impression upon the stone, but in time it wears it away. The cells of the brain are of more delicate tissue, and the steady wear and tear of the extra blood supply in time quickly wears them out.

Or, according to medical science, it is as though a garment worn day after day without change soon falls into tatters. Examinations of the brain after death have shown a group of nerve cells at the crown of the head that have perished in the same way the nerve of a tooth dies. While every other brain cell seems to be in ordinary condition this group has shrunken. It is a curious coincidence, and science says a consequence, as inevitable as effect after cause, that the hair on the portion of the scalp just above this brain area is the first to grow gray, and an excess of blood in any portion of the brain causes the scalp above that portion to be overheated.

Thousand German Prisoners.

PARIS, Aug. 22.—A despatch to the Havas Agency from Dunkirk, France, says a train bearing a thousand German prisoners, guarded by Belgian soldiers, arrived there yesterday. The Belgians, with their captives, embarked on a French steamer which sailed for an unnamed French port. Two other trains carrying prisoners were following, it was said.

Truth crushed to earth by a steam roller in a paving contract finds it hard to rise again.

Justifiable.

"Why did you beat Dobson so terribly?" said the judge, indicating the bebandaged figure of the plaintiff.

"I asked him why a horse had run away, your honor," explained the prisoner, "and he told me that it was because the animal had lost its equinimity."

"H'm," said the judge. "Discharged."

Concession.

"Don't you think men ought to have a voice in a political campaign?" asked Mr. Meekton.

"Certainly," replied his wife. "Every glee club should have a few bass voices in it."

War Courage

MANY a man in Canada, willing to go a-warring across the seas, is unwilling to fight at home—against the shadowy foes of bad times or of business depression.

This is a time in Canada when Canadian business men should fight—fight to capture new trade and to hold old trade. To stop one's advertising is to withdraw a powerful offensive and defensive force, and to expose one's business without a guard.

If the courage of manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers—the generals and captains of trade and industry—fail, the courage of the nation will ebb.

STALLINGS PICKED HIS RECRUITS FROM BARROW'S CIRCUIT

No Less Than Eight of Them Were Former Players In the International League

Along with the lauding of Gen. George Tecumseh Stallings and the distribution of bouquets to the Big Chief's band of Boston Braves, which has been precipitated by the amazing climb the Beantown Indians have made in the National league, it must not be overlooked that the International league holds no little place in the Braves' great achievement.

Of course, this isn't meant to grab away from Stallings and company any of the credit due them, but it is nevertheless true, and right here the fans are admitted on the ground floor in regard to a few facts that have been largely overlooked.

One of the most important is that not drawing their semi-monthly stipend from the Boston National league club are no less than eight players who have at some time during their career, the majority of them within the last two years, battled in the International league. This bit of information may be a little surprising to some, but those dyed-in-the-wool fans who practically exist on baseball dope during the summer will be quick to recognize the names.

Here they are: Catcher "Hank" Gowdy, Catcher and Chief Coach Fred Mitchell, Outfielder Leslie Mann, Outfielder Joe Connolly, Outfielder Josh Devore, Third Baseman Charley Deal, First Baseman Charley Schmidt and Pitcher Dick Rudolph. The first three named have been with Buffalo. Devore and Gowdy, who played such a prominent part in the recent series with the Giants, are New York National discards. It certainly must have been a bitter pill for John McGrawt to watch that trio he formerly had under his wing lambasting his Giants.

The "Recruits."

To begin with, Joe Connolly was with Montreal in 1912, part of which season he was forced to sit on the bench and watch Eddie Russell, the Buffalo boy, who at the time was going good, cavort around the centre field. He later got into the game and stuck. Washington took him over, but Griffith thought he wasn't good enough and sold Joe to Boston.

Leslie Mann was a Bison for a part of the season of 1913, but was sold to Stallings before he could be looked over. He was een, however, in an exhibition game that the Herd trimmed the Bravs, an dhe shwed that he is lightnig fanst and has a whp that s true.

Josh Devore is a product of the old Eastern league. It was about seven years ago that he was with Newark and was grabbed up by the Giants. He has been hunted about the National league, until Stalling reached ou and grabbed him. He was just the man needed for the Boston outfield.

Charley Deal was with Providence part of the season of 1193. He was sent there from Detroit.

Of course, we all remember Charley Schmidt. He was originally a pitcher with Baltimore, and because of his size and great batting ability, Dunn decided to try him out at first base, and he has been playing that position ever since. He was with Rochester last year.

Hank Gowdy is one player who will long be remembered by the fans. Big and always good-natured, Henry played a wonderful game as a member of the Bisons last year.

Then there is Catcher Fred Mitchell, whom Stallings took from Buffalo. Like Charley Schmidt, Fred was also a pitcher, and when he took on weight so fast that he couldn't rid himself of it, he donned the mask a nd pad. Rochester secured him from the New York Highlanders, and he came to Buffalo. Stallings needed just such a man to brace up his young twirlers and he secured Fred.

Concerning Rudolph.

And now we hear about Dick Rudolph, the sweet little twirler who grew so sore against Toronto that he jumped and threatened to quit the game unless sold to a major league club. Stallings heard of it and made an offer that was accepted. Dick was a whirlwind in the International league.

What is regarded as Rudolph's best exhibition in the Barrow circuit was the 19-inning struggle at the East Ferry street ball lot on June 11, 1912, in which Toronto beat Buffalo 4 to 3. It was a pitching battle between Fred Beebe and Dick Rudolph, and 8,000 people saw it. Toronto tied the score in the fourth inning, and for the rest of the game until the Leaves put over the needed tally in th nineteenth the board carried nothing but ciphers.

All of which makes it look pretty good for the class of ballplayers turned out in the Barrow circuit. And, best of all, these boys are now toiling for a leader who spent many successful years managing teams in the old Eastern league and the present circuit.

SCHETTLER HAD IT EASY

Reisling's Indians Failed to Score

London, Aug. 22.—Schettler, the former Philadelphia National leaguer, pitched for Peterboro yesterday, and London was beaten by a 3 to 0 score. The Blountmen, because of Schettler's able hurling, had little difficulty in pinning the shutout on the Indians. Hammond, twirling for London, was hit freely whenever the Petes needed swats in their runmaking. Score :—

COMMENT

As You Like It

The Ottawa Baseball Club, with a view to strengthening for the critical series at London next week, has purchased Pitcher Fred Bramble from the Fort Wayne Club, of the Central league. The price has not been made public. Bramble will report to the Ottawas at London next Monday, and will be used against Doc Reisling's club. He was with Berlin last year, and Fort Wayne drafted him.

Bramble has won a number of games this year in the Central league. The Ottawas have been negotiating for him all season, and yesterday Manager Shaughnessy made an offer which President Varnell, of the Fort Wayne club, saw fit to accept. Shaughnessy thus has five first-class pitchers for the crucial series on the road, viz., Shocker, Kubat, Gero, Bramble and Roberts.

Ray Caldwell's leap from the Yankees takes from Frank Chance one of the best twirlers in the American league. It isn't any wonder that Caldwell jumped, for he was the best player in baseball. In all, Chance took back $900 of "Sim's" salary this season, tearing it off in fines.

No one has ever been able to control Caldwell. Chance thought he could, in fact had Ray in hand for part of the season, but when the pitcher began to be a steady winner, he flew off the handle again.

His last fine was $300, for not reporting at the hotel at Boston before midnight. Just before this he had been plastered with a $100 deduction from his salary, for getting lost in St. Louis for a day.

But despite his erratic behavior, Caldwell has made a wonderful record in the league this season. He has won 18 and lost 9 games for a seventh place club. He has pitched .667 ball for a team that rarely gave him many runs, and rarely accorded him sensational support.

There is hardly a pitcher in baseball who has ever worked 200 points better than his club, but Caldwell has done this. No doubt he thought that is excellent work earned him a little latitude in training.

Probably he felt himself misused in being assessed constant fines, and the last wallop of $300 was too much. Chance, unquestionably, also believes that he has been badly treated by Caldwell. He rules his club with a heavy hand, but the majority of players do not take unkindly to this. Caldwell was an exception, found the discipline too strict, and left Chance without his only reliable twirler.

Good Riddance.

It was down on the island of Coney
A youth bet his roll on a pony.
When he lost every scad
He remarked, "I am glad,
For the money I wagered was phony."

The Dear Departed.

There was an old chap in Salina
Who married a widow named Dinah.
She talked of her dead
Till it went to his head,
And now he is living in China.

The Humorous Spinster.

There was an old maid in New York
Who always ate soup with a fork,
And when she was done
In a spirit of fun
She plugged up her throat with a cork.

People Will Talk.

There was a young man of Key West
Who put on his shoes and his vest.
Said his two maiden aunts,
"If you don't wear your pants Folks will say you're not stylishly dressed."

—Walt Mason in Judge.

Bad Memory.

Mr. Cox, a hotel proprietor, had had among the negro servants a woman named Esther Dodge, and this name continued on the payroll long after Esther had taken unto herself a better half.

One morning Mr. Cox called Esther to him and suggested a change on the payroll by giving the woman the name she had a right to be known by.

The woman listened quietly to the proposal and then turned to go.

"Why, Esther," said her employer, "I do not know your name. Just tell it to me before you go."

Esther stood for some little time in an attitude of profound thought, her dusky hand across her swarthy brow, and at last exclaimed:

"My lands, boss! I jest can't 'member dat nigger's name nohow!"—National Monthly.

Stung.

"I would like to get a warrant for a man for obtaining money under false pretenses," announced the angry man.

"What is the trouble?" asked the clerk.

"A fellow sold me a half interest in a petticoat factory," replied the angry man.

"Well, what is the matter with petticoats?" asked the clerk.

"There ain't no such animals," replied the angry man.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

As He Told It.

A marine was testifying about the explosion of a gun on a war vessel—an explosion which had sent him to the hospital for some months.

"Please give your version of the explosion," he was asked.

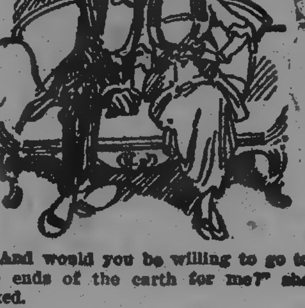
"Well," he said, "I was standing beside the gun, there was an awful racket, and the doctor said, 'Sit up and take this.'"—Current Opinion.

Silly Hotel Building!

"I can give you that room with bath," said the southern hotel clerk, "but it'll be hot. The building runs around that way"—

"Hasn't your building," asked the prospective guest painedly, "any more sense than to run around that way in hot weather?"—Rocky Mountain News.

How He Loved Her.



"And would you be willing to go to the ends of the earth for me?" she asked.

"I'd do anything for you," he assured her. "I'd even go to church some Sunday when the automobiling was good, if it would make you happy."—Philadelphia Press.

Matter of Duty.

"Is your wife going to wear her diamonds to the opera?"

"Of course," answered Mr. Cumrox. "We can't all appreciate music, and we ought to try to make opera interesting even for those who go merely to look on."—Washington Star.

GREER—BARR.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at the First Methodist Episcopal Church by the Rev. W. T. Kerr, on Wedneseay, August 12, at 4.30 p.m. when Bertha Gwendoline, youngest daughter of the late Mr. Alex. and Mrs. Barr, formerly of Kinmount, Ontario, became the bride of Joseph Greer, Prince Rupert, B.C. The bride, who entered the church on the arm of her brother, Mr. R. H. Barr, was becomingly attired in cream silk crepe de chine, elaborately trimmed with lace, and wore the customary wedding veil. She carried a shower bouquet of bridal roses and sweet peas.

The bridesmaid, Miss Margaret Manary, cousin of the bride, was attired in pale blue chiffon, and carried a bouquet of pale pink carnations. Mr. Ford Tucker ably assisted the groom. Music was rendered by Mr. Carroll Day. After the ceremony a wedding dinner was served in the hotel Benson, after which the happy couple left on the 8.15 train for California on their honeymoon, accompanied by the west wishes and congratulations of their numerous Portland friends.

On their return north Mr. and Mrs. Greer will reside in Prince Rupert, B.C.—Portland Morning Oregonian.

How Hungarian Women Will Fight Beside the Men

Women will be seen on the battlefields of Europe, if the fighting between Austria-Hungary and Servia and Russia becomes general. Since the men of Hungary have been called to the war, the women of that kingdom not only are protecting the homes, but many of them have followed the men to the armed camps.

The women of Hungary are brave and fearless. They say that if necessary they will fight again, just as they did in the revolution of 1840, when they went to the front as officers and soldiers, and stood shoulder to shoulder with their husbands, fathers and brothers.

One of the favorite stories which Hungarian women tell again and again to their children, is that of the capture of Fort Egri, and how Dobo Katica, wife of the chief whose territory was being besieged by the Turks, led the women against the invaders.

She rode out into the centre of the town and called the women together, asking them in the name of their country to arm themselves and follow her. They all disappeared on the instant, and Dobo Katica was afraid for a while they were not brave or patriotic enough to fight. But soon they returned, armed with pitchforks, clubs and stones, and followed her to where the Turks were climbing up a rope ladder to the fort, which stood on a cliff.

The women heated tar in pitchers and poured the boiling stuff down on the Turks, also pelting them with the stones and jabbing them with pitchforks. Dobo Katica climbed halfway down the ladder and herself took the red flag from the leader of the Turks.

In every war in which Hungary has been engaged, the women of the nation have fought alongside the men. In Austria-Hungary the women of every class, high and low, rich and poor, are treated with respect and equality. Men consult their wives on business deals; husband and wife are equal partners in their possessions.

Hungary is one of the nations of Europe where there is no movement for equal suffrage. The women have so long been used to absolute equality in the home, in business and in industrial affairs that apparently they have no time to want the ballot.

COMING BACK TO HAT DEAR OLD FATHER WORE

High Crowns Are Conspicuous in the Fall Styles

With the approach of September, the straw hats which have afforded protection against Old Sol during the past few months must sink into oblivion. On and after September 1st a true friend will smash his pal's straw hat if the latter appears in public with it, and in doing so does him a favor.

These past few days local hatters have received the majority of their Fall goods, and today a local dealer pointed out to a Review scribe the points in which this Fall's styles differ from those of last year. The soft hats have the high crown with a telescope effect and the rim dipped at the front. The stiff hats are likewise featured with a high crown, but the rim is decidedly narrow, with a tendency to curl rather than lay flat. At first glance they look a great deal like a style of "cady" worn when father was married.

The caps are coming back to the tight-fitting crown, but the large old country peak is still popular. Checks and light colors are still in evidence. The price of hats has not increased any over former years.

THE RITES OF ABSOLUTION

Great Ceremony Accompanies Service at Vatican

ROME, Aug. 22. — Borne by red uniformed members of the Sodality, who, when he was alive, carried him in the Sedan Gestatoria chair, the body of Pope Pius X., dressed in pontificial robes and mitre, and with the other emblems of his sacred office lying beside it, was taken yesterday to the Chapel of the Blessed Sacrament in St. Peter's, where the solemn rites of absolution were performed.

Thousands of persons previously had visited the throne room, where the body lay, to look upon the face of the dead pontiff, and many of them wove themselves into the great procession from the throne room to the chapel. The procession was headed by the bearers of the massive silver pontificial cross, and twenty cardinals and patriarchs, archbishops, bishops, priests and papal and court chamberlains, and members of the Swiss Noble and Palatine Guards, in their multi-colored uniforms. The scene was an impressive one. Under the flare of the candles in the chapel could be seen the tear-dimmed eyes of prelate, priest, layman and papal guard. Especially affected were the bearers of the body of the Pope.

The burial of Pope Pius will be absolutely private. This was decided upon yesterday.

The contents of the will of Pope Pius became known yesterday. The testament is dated 1911 but has codicils made in successive years. To the members of his immediate family he leaves $20,000, which was presented to him some years ago, and $2,400 to his nephews. Both bequests are made subject to the approval of his successor. In the will is the following phrase: "I was born poor, and lived poor, and I wish to die poor."

TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL

Notes by Official Scribe.

Another good attendance of delegates has to be recorded at this week's meeting of Peterborough's Trades and Labor Council. J. J. Hartley presided.

Mr. Burnham wrote a letter, mentioning the fact that Sir Robert Borden was thankful for the council's suggestion of an embargo being placed on foodstuffs during the national crisis, and the matter was being attended to without delay.

The specifications for Peterborough's new public buildings were reported as being in our midst, and a committee was named to examine and report.

The recent handing over of the Clayton picture houses to a committee of the council for one day, resulted in the gathering together of the sum of $5, which will be handed over to the Daughters of the Empire for patriotic purposes.

A hearty send-off was given Representative Phipps, of the Carpet Weavers, who has answered his country's call and is leaving for Val Cartier with his comrades of the 57th.

The Labor Day committee reported progress, but found a difficulty in finding judges for the baby show. Finally J. H. Burnham, M.P., G. A. Gillespie, M.L.A., and Mayor Buller were chosen for this arduous work.

Next meeting, Sept. 2.

TURCOS, FAMOUS FIGHTERS WITH THE FRENCH FORCES

The announcement made that detachments of the Turcos, the famous fighting native Algerian troops of France, are accompanying the French forces invading Alsace discloses the determination of France to make use of the splendid regiments of native troops from her colonies. Once before, in 1870, in the hour of her need, France called upon the Turcos, and they fought and died through the bitter winter of 1870-71, for the Tricolor.

The regiments known affectionately to France as the Turcos are the tirailleurs Algeriens, dusky Algerian infantrymen, splendid fighters, well-disciplined and always in the pink of condition from their continuous border fighting. Nine regiments of these fierce Algerian fighters has France at her back, some 20,000 fighting men, who have provided their valor in every campaign in which they have been engaged since they were organized, nearly a century ago.

Famous Fighters.

The Foreign Legion is made up of two regiments of six battalions each, an effective force of 9,800 men, fully thirty per cent. of whom are Alsatians who will not serve in the German army. Another 20 per cent., it is estimated, are Germans, most of them deserters from the German army's rigid rule. The rest is made up of adventurers from all over the world, many of them men who have nothing to live for and who want to die "with their boots on."

No questions are asked of the prospective recruit in this corps. If he can pass the physical examination that is all that is necessary. The history of the Foreign Legion is one of the most glorious chapters in French army records.

Organized in 1831.

The Foreign Legion was organized on February 4, 1831. Some of the many campaigns in which it has won renown are the years of fighting against Ab-del-Kedir; the Carlist revolution in Spain, when the Legion was rented to Queen Isabella of Spain by Louis Philippe; in the Crimea, in the Austrian campaign of Napoleon III., in Mexico, where the regiment "upheld the honor of France" in a campaign that was otherwise disastrous to the French arms, and last, but not least, the Franco-Prussian war of 1870.

In the last named the Legion was almost annihilated at the battle of Artenay, when, with the Turcos, it covered the retreat of de la Motterouge's Army of the Loire and saved it from destruction. At Tonkin and in the later French colonial campaigns the Legion gained more distinction.

Seasoned Wariors.

There are four regiments of zouaves in the Nineteenth Army Corps, 13,500 men, and five battalions of African light infantry, 4,600 strong. The Chasseurs d'Afrique are 5,000 strong, six regiments of five squadrons each. The saphis, Bedouin horse, who have also met the Germans once before, number 3,500 men, in four regiments.

All in all, the above-mentioned troops form a field force of 60,000 men, exclusive of engineers and artillery, seasoned campaigners, who are always "spoiling" for a fight, and in whom the spirit of the "revanche" burns as strongly as in the other French troops. It was only sheer weight of numbers that ever made African troops of France draw back in 1870, and when they did their opponents were only too glad to see them go or to follow closely their snarling, defiant retreat. It will take a lot of fighting to check the ardor of those French-African troops of today.

70,000 Black Fighters.

Of native troops outside of those in the Nineteenth Army Corps France has many fine soldiers in the tirailleurs senegalais, the big black fighting men of Senegal, who created such a sensation in Paris a year ago, when they made their first appearance there. There are seven regiments and six separate battalions of them; three regiments of tirailleurs malgaches and one regiment of tirailleurs annamites. In all, there are 40,000 native troops in the colonial army of France, outside of Algeria, which is included in the so-called metropolitan army. A grand total of 70,000 dusky-skinned African warriors could be summoned by France to her aid if necessary, including turcos, saphis, tirailleur and native artillerymen.

Merge Canadians Into British Regiments

Ottawa, Aug. 22.—It is understood that there is to be no commander of the Canadian expeditionary force but that the regiments which are now being assembled at Valcartier will be absorbed into the British army.

The regiments are all brigaded with British regiments and it is reported that the executive of the army council has come to the conclusion that the most effective work can be done by associating the British line regiments and the overseas regiments in the campaign.

While there has not yet beet a final decision this disposition of the Canadian force is being most seriously considered.

AMERICAN PRESS ON THE WAR

Peace Through War.

Rochester Post-Express:—"If militarism is to receive its death blow this year it is probably necessary that all the giant powers shall take part in the contest. Europe has been spending nearly two billion dollars a year in preparation for this war, and it will cost ten times as much if it lasts twelve months. An indecisive clash and a patched-up truce would leave the nations more determined than ever to increase their armaments. But if all of them are brought to the brink of bankruptcy and the financially weaker powers are forced to repudiate their debts, as is not unlikely, no more huge fleets will ever again be built, and giant standing armies will not be seen again."

The "Mad Mullah" of All Europe.

New York Journal of Commerce:—"Those rulers who are responsible for bringing on the war that is to ravage Europe in this year of our Lord 1914, deserve to meet with a terrible retribution. Foremost of these is the Emperor of Germany. Without his instigation or assured backing Austria-Hungary would not have ventured upon its brutal attack upon Servia in the face of certain resistance from Russia. Back of it all was a fiendish plot in which the Kaiser was the supreme figure, and he seems to have flung all scruples to the winds and became the "Mad Mullah" of Europe. After all these years of preparation, under the pretense of maintaining peace, the war may have become inevitable, and what the Kaiser has done is to seize this occasion to precipitate it when he alone was ready."

The Man to Blame.

Baltimore News:—"With one accord the world outside Germany and its ally, Austria-Hungary, fixes the blame for the tremendous catastrophe of a general European war upon Emperor William of Germany. Whether he miscalculated the determination of Russia to protect Servia from Austrian invasion, or whether he believed 'the day,' to which we are told the German navy drinks its toast, had come when Germany could challenge English supremacy upon the seas, the world believes he could have held Austria in check and refused to do it."

The Kaiser Should Have Explained.

Brooklyn Eagle:—"When the Kaiser said that envious people on all sides were compelling him to make his 'just defence,' and that the sword was being forced into his hands, he should have told who the people were, and what the force applied. When he spoke of his efforts to maintain peace, he should have told the world when and where they were made, for the world knows nothing of them—it has yet to be enlightened. When he said that he would show the nations of the earth what it meant to provoke Germany, he should have stated what the provocation was and by whom projected, for the nations have not heard of it."

The Real Reason.

New York World:—"Suddenly this vast fabric woven by peace and industry and skill and science is torn in two. All the machinery of progress is stopped by the hand of autocracy. The Kaiser plunges Europe into the most devastating conflict known to human history, and every civilized country reels under the shock. And about what? Ostensibly because Russia had answered Austria's wanton war against Servia by mobilizing troops on the frontier in order to protect her own interests. In reality because the reactionary party of Germany was determined to invite a general European conflict in order to stay the advancement of political reforms. In the very vanguard of the twentieth century in most respects, Germany has struggled back into the seventeenth century politically."

CARD OF THANKS.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Mitchell beg to thank and to extend their heartfelt thanks to the many friends and acquaintances for their sympathy and kindness in the recent death of their son, Albert John Mitchell.

FIREMEN SHOULD BE INSPECTORS

Fire Chief Tremblay, of Montreal, is asking for 68 new firemen, one-half of whom will be required to carry out the special system of fire inspection which it is desired to put into effect without delay. An extra man is to be attached to each station for the work of inspecting the buildings of each district. The work would be kept up constantly, the men taking the inspection duties in turn. This is decidedly a step in the right direction.

A considerable part of the firemen's time seems to be consumed by fatiguing games, such as dominoes and checkers, or the armchair exercises practiced in front of fire halls. Too great attention to these pastimes tends toward mental inertia and physical avoirdupois.

Let part of the fire-fighting force teach the methods of prevention. Prevention will save property for the householder and work for the firemen. Moreover, it may save both their lives.—Industrial Canada.

RECEPTION TO "INFAMOUS PROPOSAL" OF GERMANY IN THE BRITISH HOUSE

ASQUITH SPEAKS IN BLUNT TERMS OF "INFAMOUS PROPOSAL."

(From the London Daily Mail.)

Not for a century has a Prime Minister stood forward to deliver the mind of this country to a great Continental Power in terms such as those which Mr. Asquith addressed to Germany.

He flung aside the guarded and smooth sounding phrases of diplomacy and spoke out with the words of a plain, blunt man when characterizing the terms on which Germany sought to seduce us from our plighted word to Belgium.

"An infamous proposal," he thundered, with blazing eyes and the crash of his fist upon the brass-bound box, and a tempest of cheering supported him.

English papers received here today contain full accounts of the inception of the war crisis in London and the United Kingdom generally. Particularly do they feature the speech of the Premier, Right Hon. H. H. Asquith when he announced the appointment of Lord Kitchener as War Lord and asked for a contribution of £100,000,000 for war purposes and authority to increase the standing army by 500,000 men.

Referring to the unsuccessful efforts of Sir Edward Grey, the Foreign Secretary, to promote peace, the Premier said:

His Tribute to Grey

"If his efforts on this occasion have unhappily been less successful, I am certain that this House and the country, and I will add posterity and history,—(cheers)— will accord to him what is, after all, the best tribute that can be paid to any statesman; that never derogating for an instant by an inch from the honour and interests of his own country, he has striven as few men have striven to maintain that greatest of interests of all countries — universal peace." (Loud cheers.)

Buy Our Neutrality.

Referring to the diplomatic papers of Sir Edward Goschen to the German Chancellor, the Premier continued:

"The terms upon which it was sought to buy our neutrality — (cheers) — are contained in the communications made by the German Chancellor to Sir Edward Goschen on July 29.

"Let me come to what in this matter to my mind has always been a crucial and almost the governing consideration, namely, the position of the small states. (Loud cheers.) The German Chancellor said:

" 'As regards Holland, so long as Germany's adversaries respected the integrity and neutrality of the Netherlands, Germany was ready to give His Majesty's government an assurance that she would do likewise.'

" 'It depended upon the action of France what operations Germany might be forced to enter upon in Belgium, but when the war was over Belgia integrity would be respected if she had not decided against Germany.'

"Let the House observe the distinction between these two cases. In regard to Holland, not only independence and integrity, but neutrality; in regard to Belgium, no mention of neutrality at all, but an assurance that after the war came to an end the integrity of Belgium would be respected.

Vindicate Great Britain.

"What does that amount to? Let me just ask the House. I do so not with the object of inflaming passion, and certainly not with the object of exciting feeling against Germany, but I do so to vindicate and make clear the position of the British Government and of Great Britain in this matter. What did that proposal amount to?

"In the first place it meant this, that behind the back of France, which was not to be made a party to these communications at all, we should have given, if we had assented to them, free license to Germany to annex, in the event of a successful war, the whole of the extra-European dominions and possessions of France. What did it mean as regards Belgium? Belgium, when she addressed, as she did address in these last days, her moving appeal to us to fulfill our solemn guarantee of her neutrality, what reply should we have given? We should have been obliged to say that without her knowledge we had bartered away to the Power that was threatening her our obligation to keep our plighted word. (Loud and prolonged cheers.)

Pathetic Appeal.

"Sir, the House has read, and the country has read, in the course of the last few hours, the most pathetic address by the King of the Belgians to his people. (Cheers.) I do not envy the man who could read that appeal with unmoved heart. (Cheers.) The Belgians are fighting; they are losing their lives. (Loud cheers.)

"What would have been the position of Great Britain today in the face of that spectacle if we had assented to this infamous proposal? (Loud and prolonged cheers.)

Betrayal of Friends.

"For the betrayal of our friends and the dishonour of our obligations what were we to get in return? We were to get a promise — nothing more — (laughter) — as to what Germany would do in certain eventualities — a promise, be it observed, I am sorry to have to say it, but it must be put upon record a promise given by a power which was at that very moment announcing its intention to violate its own treaty obligations — (cheers) — and inviting us to do the same.

Covered With Dishonour.

"I can only say if we had even dallied or temporized with such an offer we, as a government, should have covered ourselves with dishonour. We should have betrayed the interests of this country of which we are the trustees. (Cheers.)

"I am entitled to say, and I do say, on behalf of this country,—I speak not for a party but for this country as a whole—(cheers) — we made every effort that a government could possibly make for peace. This war has been forced upon us.

Sense of Responsibility.

"And what is it that we are fighting for? No one knows better than the members of the Government the terrible and incalculable sufferings, economic, social, personal, political, which war, especially war between the Great Powers of the world must entail.

"There is not a man among us sitting on this bench in these trying days—more trying, perhaps, than any body of statesmen for a hundred years has had to pass through—who has not during the whole of that time had clearly before his vision the almost infinite suffering which war, even in a just cause, must bring about not only to those who are living, but to posterity and to the whole prospects of European civilization. Every step we took, we took with that vision before our eyes and with a sense of responsibility which it is impossible to describe.

In a Just Cause.

"Unhappily, if in spite of all our efforts to keep the peace, and with that full and overpowering consciousness of the result of the issue to be decided in favor of war, we have thought it to be the duty as well as the interest of this country to go to war, the House may be well assured it was because we believe — and I am certain the country will believe —we are unsheathing our swords in a just cause. (Loud general cheers.)

"If I am asked what we are fighting for, I can reply in two sentences:

"In the first place, to fulfill the solemn international obligation, an obligation which if it had been entered into between private persons in the ordinary concerns of life, would have been regarded as an obligation not only of law, but of honor, which no self-respecting man could possibly have repudiated. (Loud cheers.)

"I say, secondly, we are fighting to vindicate the principle which in these days, when material force sometimes seems to be the dominant influence and factor in the development of mankind—we are fighting to vindicate the principle that small nationalities are not to be crushed, in defiance of international good faith, by the arbitrary will of a strong and overmastering power. (Loud cheers.)

Clear Conscience.

"I do not believe that any nation ever entered into a great controversy —and this is one of the greatest in the history of the world—with a clearer conscience and stronger conviction that it is fighting, not for aggression, not for the maintenance even of its own selfish interest, but it is fighting in defence of principles, the maintenance of which is the vital civilization of the world, possibly with the full conviction, not only of the wisdom and justice of the obligations which lay upon us to challenge this great issue. (Cheers.)

Kitchener's Patriotism.

Speaking of the appointment of Lord Kitchener as secretary for war, Mr. Asquith said :

"I am very glad to say that a very distinguished soldier and administrator, in the person of Lord Kitchener —(loud cheers)—with great public spirit and patriotism that everyone would expect from him, at my request stepped into the breach." (Renewed cheers.)

Mr. Law Supports Him.

Mr. Bonar Law, leader of the opposition, in expressing the views of "a large section of the House," said:

"There are two things which I desire to impress upon the committee. he first is that we have dreaded war, and have longed for peace as strongly as any member of this committee; and the second is that in our belief we are in a state of war against our will, and that we, as a nation, have done everything in our power to prevent such a condition of things arising. (Cheers.)

"Not Our Folly."

"It is due to human folly and to human wickedness. (Cheers.) But neither the folly nor the wickedness is here. (Loud cheers.)

"But we are fighting also for the whole basis of the civilization for which we stand and for which Europe stands. (Cheers.)

No Napoleon Yet.

"This is no small struggle—it is the greatest, perhaps, that this country has ever engaged in, and the issue is uncertain. It is Napoleonism once again. Thank heaven, so far as we know, there is no Napoleon. (Cheers and laughter.)

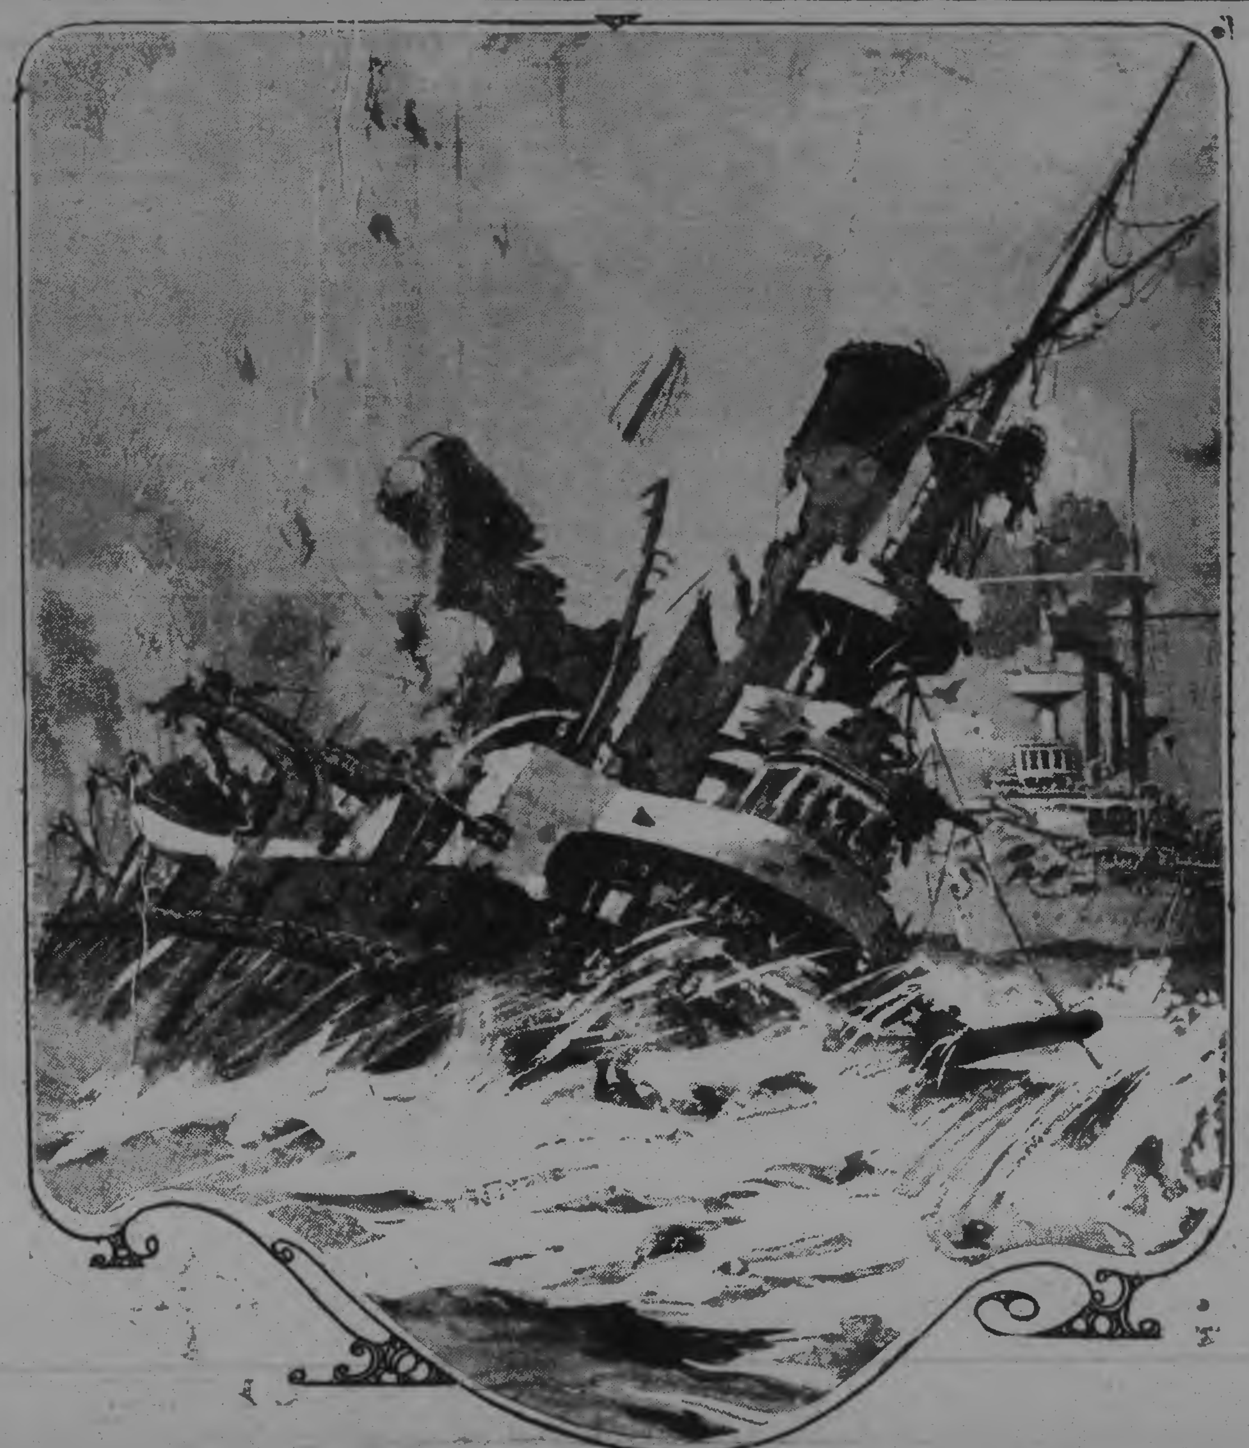
"God Defend the Right."

"Well, I can say this: Whether we are wrong—the whole House agrees with it, I am sure—that this is a burden which the right hon. gentleman can carry with a good conscience —(cheers)—and that every one of us can put up unhesitatingly this prayer: 'May God defend the right.' (Loud cheers.)

Serve the Government.

"This is an affair of the nation. (Cheers.) Everyone should desire to help. There will be a great deal of work which cannot be done by the government. I am glad that the Prime Minister has already asked the co-operation of my right hon. friends, Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Walter Long. (Cheers.)

"I am sure I speak, not for this front bench only, but for the whole of our party—(opposition cheers)— when I say that the government has only got to requisition any one of us and we will serve them and our country to the best of our ability." (Loud cheers.)



Near to the Death — A terrific battle as it would appear between two Dreadnoughts in the North Sea.

Cold Comfort.

There is a certain hotel up in British Columbia that has a reputation for being reasonably cold. It is a frame structure, and the walls are thin and shaky. One morning during a blizzard two guests who had been there the night before came out of their rooms on opposite sides of the hall. The first man said:

"Whew! I'm nearly frozen! I never was so cold in my life. I slept with all my clothes on and everything else piled on me, but I'm frosted through!"

"Same here," said the other. "I was on the windward side of this hut. I put on my buffalo coat over my clothes, but I don't think I'll ever get warm."

They went down to the hotel office. There, huddled over the stove, was a stage driver who had lost his way and been out all night. His hair and whiskers were lumps of ice. His fur hat was frozen to his head. He shivered and shook with the cold, though he was practically sitting on the stove. He looked like a human icicle. The two guests looked at him for a minute. Then one of them asked:

"Which room did you have, partner?"

Achill Island.

There are few people who once having seen the island of Achill can forget its beauty. The island lies close to the west coast of Ireland. When the skies are blue, mountains green and smiling, bogs clad in purple and pink heather and the whole picturesque island in sunshine, the place is a wonderland.

Poor Woman.

"I have to laugh every time I see that man."

"He can't help his looks."

"I know, but his wife thinks every other woman is trying to lure him away from her."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Most people fancy themselves innocent of those crimes of which they can not be convicted.—Seneca.

A CAVALRY CHARGE

Thrilling Description by Novelist's Master Pen of Frenzied Dash.

The following description of a cavalry charge in the Franco-Prussian war is reprinted from Emile Zola's novel, "The Downfall," by permission of the publishers.

The command ran along the line: "Keep touch of knees! Keep touch of knees!" in order to keep the men closed up and give their ranks the resistance and rigidty of a wall of granite, and as their trot became swifter and swifter and finally broke into a mad gal'op, the chasseurs d'Afrique gave their wild Arab cry that excited their wiry steeds to the verge of frenzy.

Onward they tore, faster and faster still, until their gallop was a race of unchained demons, their shouts the shrieks of souls in mortal agony; onward they plunged amid a storm of bullets that rattled on casque and breastplate, on buckle and scabbard, with a sound like hail; the earth shook and trembled, leaving behind it, as it passed, an odor of burned woolen and the exhalations of wild beasts.

At five hundred yards the line wavered an instant, then swirled and broke in a frightful eddy that brought Prosper to the ground. He clutched Zephyr by the mane and succeeded in recovering his seat.

The center had given way, riddled, almost annihilated as it was by the musketry fire, while the two wings had wheeled and ridden back a little way to renew their formation.

It was the foreseen, foredoomed destruction of the leading squadron. Disabled horses covered the ground, some quiet in death, but many struggling violently in their strong agony; and everywhere dismounted riders could be seen, running as fast as their short legs would let them, to capture themselves another mount.

Many horses that had lost their master came galloping back to the squadron and took their place in line of their own accord, to rush with their comrades back into the fire again, as if there was some strange attraction for them in the smell of gunpowder.

The charge was resumed; the second squadron wen forward, like the first, at a constantly accelerated rate of speed, the men bending upon their horses' necks, holding the saber along the thigh, ready for use upon the enemy. Two hundred yards were gained this time, amid the thunderous, deafening uproar, but again the center broke under the storm of bullets; men and horses went down in heaps, and the piled corpses made an insurmountable barrier for those who followed.

Thus was the second squadron in its turn mown down, annihilated, leaving its task to be accomplished by those who came after.

When for the third time the men were called upon to charge and responded with invincible heroism, Prosper found that his companions were principally hussars and chasseurs de France. Regiments and squadrons, as organizations, had ceased to exist; their constituent elements were drops in the mighty wave that alternately broke and reared its crest again, to swallow up all that lay in its destructuive path.

He had long since lost distinct consciousness of what was going on around him, and suffered his movements to be guided by his mount faithful Zephyr, who had received a wound in the ear that seemed to madden him.

Beneath the fire, that became constantly more murderous as they drew nearer, the survivors in the wings wheeled their horses and fell back to concentrate their strength for a fresh onset.

Finally it was the fourth squadron, which, on the fourth attempt, reached the Prussian lines. Prosper made play with his saber, hacking away at helmets and dark uniforms as well as he could distinguish them, for all was dim before him, as in a dense mist. Blood flowed in torrents; Zephyr's mouth was smeared with it, and to account for it he said to himself that the good horse must have been using his teeth on the Prussians.

The clamor around him became so great that he could not hear his own voice, although his throat seemed splitting from the yells that issued from it.

But behind the first Prussian line there was another, and then another still. Their gallant efforts went for nothing; those dense masses of men were like a tangled jungle that closed around the horses and riders who entered it and buried them in its rank growths. They might hew down those who were within reach of their sabers; others stood ready to take their place, the last squadrons were lost and swallowed up in their vast numbers.

To Save Antelope.

The rescue and perpetuation of the rapidly disappearang prong-horned antelope is to be undertaken by the Government. To this end it enlisted the services of Ernest Thompson Seton, the naturalist, and Maxwell Graham, chief of the zoological division at Ottawa, who have outlined a scheme which promises success.

This proposes the establishment of three fenced parks for antelope in different parts of their favorite range, on areas not desirable for agriculture and in regions that still contain wild antelope.

The first step was to outline the ancient and present range of the antelope, then to ascertain the probable number at large. The combined evidence of many game wardens and mounted police shows that there are yet between 1,000 and 1,500 antelope still at large in the Canadian northwest.

Prior to the hard winter of 1906 and 1907, there were at least ten times as many; but that long, fierce spell of frost and deep snow killed them off by thousands. In the spring when the driving remnants were making their way north over the frozen Saskatchewan, the rotten ice gave way, according to one ranchman, and over 500 were engulfed on one occasion, as he watched them from the bank.

Wool Industry Grows.

The fact that fifty thousand pounds of wool, worth $9,000, has just been sent in one shipment from Saskatchewan is merely another instance of the awakening of live stock interest in the West, and an example of the benefit to be derived from the farmer working along co-operative lines. Last year the small wool growers obtained prices ranging from 8 to 10 cents for their clips; this year the price is practically doubled. In addition to these small producers the large flock owners have also availed themselves of the opportunity.

Alberta wool growers in considerable numbers are selling their wool through the Saskatchewan Government agency; and in addition, the clip of a large flock of mohair goats is being sold by the branch on behalf of ranchers of Debourne, Alberta.

WELL-EQUIPPED FORCE IS THE SERVIAN ARMY

Little Country Has About the Same Population as Canada But Every Man Must Carry Arms.

Under the defence law of Servia, service in the army of that country is for twenty-four years, namely, ten years in the first category or active army, seven years in the second category or reserve army, and seven years in the third category or garrison army. The active army is the Regular Army, in which color service lasts for two years, followed by eight years in the reserve of the active army; this army has "cadres" with a reasonably strong peace establishment, like other regular armies. The reserve army has virtually no peace establishment. The garrison army likewise has no peace establishment, and it is only formed in time of war.

Servia, as it existed before the recent extension, is divided into five divisional districts, each producing one division of the active army and one division of the reserve army;; the divisional headquarters are respectively at Belgrade, Valjevo, Kragujevatz, Zajecar, and Nish. An active division on a war footing consists of sixteen battalions, four machine gun companies, a cavalry regiment of four squadrons, and nine field batteries, besides engineers and departmental corps. The active army further includes a cavalry division of sixteen squadrons and two horse artillery batteries; it also includes six field howitzer batteries and nine mountain batteries, besides garrison artillery, railway troops, and so forth. Each of the five divisions of the reserve squadrons, and nine field batteries; the reserve army also includes seven mountain batteries, and possibly some field howitzer batteries. Adding in certain reserve units, not directly available as portion of the field army, the active and reserve armies on a war footing consist altogether of 186 battalions, 47 squadrons, and 122 horse, field, mountain, and howitzer batteries, making up, with engineers, garrison artillery, and departmental troops, a total of about 280,000 men. The garrison army would probably represent about 60,000 more.

The newly-acquired territory has been divided up into five divisional districts with their headquarters at Uskub, Novibazar, Pristina, Istip, and Monastir.

The Servian infantry is armed with the Mauser, the huge captures from the Turks having probably provided enough to arm all the troops available. The batteries mostly have the Schneider Canot gun, but it seems likely that some of the batteries of the reserve would be armed with Krupps captured from the Ottoman forces; they had older guns in 1912. The field howitzers are quite up-to-date, at least in the active army. As far as weapons are concerned the Servian military forces are in fact in a very efficient condition.

Favors Home Fighting.

An Ulster Irishman employed on a Montreal morning newspaper is a determined anti-Home Ruler, while a pugnacious little Irish Catholic engaged on a rival paper is an equally ardent advocate of the Nationalist cause. The two met one evening on an assignment, and become involved in a heated argument over the merits and demerits of Home Rule. As they reached the outer air, the Ulsterite remarked: "Well, I sail next week for home, and all I hope is that the fighting isn't all over before I get there."

"Is that so?" replied the Redmondite, as he pulled off his coat. "Well, if all you want is a fight, you don't need to go to Ireland for it."

After a brief but bloody battle, the issue was declared a draw, but the incident prompted a fellow reporter to make a timely suggestion. "If so many of these Catholic and Orangemen are eager to fight for or against Home Rule," he said, "why should they go to the trouble and expense of an ocean trip? Why not let them organize and fight it out right here in Canada, and cable the result over to be included in the final score?"

A Bit of Blarney.

An Irishman who was begging in the street was asked by a lady how it was that such a fine, strong man as he should be asking for alms. With native blarney he replied:

"Lady, begging is the only profession I know in which a gentleman can address a beautiful woman without having an introduction."

The remark was quite profitable.—London Answers.

A SINGULAR CUSTOM

And How it Was Illustrated by a Russian Countess

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

A ball was in progress in the Winter palace at St. Petersburg. There were few persons in the resplendent throng who were not titled, and in Russia even a prince cannot hold his position in the court circle without complying with a number of requirements. Among the few at the ball without the prefix to the name of count, baron, duke or even general, without gold lace or a string of decorations on the breast, but in plain black evening dress, was Adelbert Wyman, an attache to the American legation.

If Wyman was bereft of artificial plumage nature had endowed him with an attractive personality. He was finely built, being tall and proportioned for an athlete, while his countenance bespoke a manly spirit within. Having inherited a fortune and work not being a necessity with him, he had adopted a profession in which money making had no part and which to him seemed full of interest—diplomacy.

Wyman had prepared himself for his career by the study of international law and more especially of several foreign languages, Russian among the number. He was therefore enabled to chat in her native tongue with a young Russian girl, with whom he danced several times at this imperial ball. The Countess Olga Ivanovna was one of those women of the north whose complexions are fair, whose eyes are blue and whose hair is flaxen. Notwithstanding the fact that she was noble and her companion was a commoner, she seemed to be pleased with him. Indeed, there was something unique in that unadorned figure among hundreds of men most of whom relied for admiration on their velvet clothes, tinsel and the medals strung on their breasts. Some of them were misshapen, some had homely faces, and all were dressed as if for a play. Wyman alone was unadorned.

"How do you like Russia?" asked the countess. All visitors are asked this question and if they are well bred usually reply that they like the country they visit very much. Wyman's reply was that the country interested him. When asked why, he said that it was in the marked difference to what he had been accustomed.

"In what way?" asked the girl.

"First, with you Russians everything points from the people to the government, while with us everything points from the government to the people. In other words, here the people seem to be for the government, while with us our government is for the people. But it is the many singular customs in the different parts of your great empire that especially interest me, the pronounced varied types of your people. I have read that in a certain province dowryless girls are raffled for as wives, the money paid in for chances being given for a marriage portion."

"There is a more singular custom than that," added the countess. "In a certain part of Russia the girls propose to the men. If a girl wants to marry a man she goes to his house. If he refuses to marry her he is regarded as insulting her and her family, and they take revenge upon him."

"The privilege of proposing marriage," said Wyman, "accorded to the man is a mere custom. For my part I see no reason why a woman should not be as free to ask a man to marry her as that a man is free to ask her to be his wife."

"Do you really mean that?" asked the countess, looking up at Wyman archly.

"I certainly do. But you must not take me in that respect as representing my countrymen. I like to think for myself and am not a slave to customs."

The two parted at this point, but just before the ball closed they met again.

"We go next week to our home in the province of Viatka," she said. "If you will make us a visit there I think I can show you some more of our odd customs. The people about us have some very singular ones."

"I assure you I feel highly honored by the invitation and shall accept it with much pleasure."

In time Wyman received a formal invitation to visit Count Ivan Ivanovna's estates in Viatka. A time was set for his coming, but none for his departure. This surprised him, for it is usual among most entertainers in high life all over the world to invite their guests for a definite period. The American was cordially received by the young lady's family and a suit of rooms placed at his disposal. He had not before met any of them except Olga, and he seemed to be considered her especial guest. At any rate, she took upon herself his entertainment, driving him about herself, showing him the people, how they lived, how they worked and how they reared their children. Wyman was much interested in it all and more especially in the ignorance of not only the children, but of their parents.

"But you have not shown me," said Wyman one day when they were out together, "any of those singular customs you spoke of when in St. Petersburg."

"You must be patient," was the reply. "You Americans are always in haste. If you are to be a diplomat you must get rid of that American trait."

A couple of weeks passed. Olga Ivanovna showed no disposition to part with her visitor, nor did he care especially to return to the city. There were no intricate questions between the United States and Russia to render his attendance on his chief necessary, and he was not recalled. He occupied his time during the day in studying the Russian people under the guidance of his fair hostess, and the evenings did not seem long enough, since he invariably spent them in her company.

If Wyman thought of what might come of this association it certainly did not occur to him that a family whose nobility might be traced back for centuries, which was in high favor with the czar, would consent to admit a commoner like himself into its charmed circle by giving him one of its members to wife. Nor did he suspect that Olga Ivanovna would stoop to ally herself with him. He was happy, and he was young, and young persons are not given to looking to a point where their happiness may come to an end.

One evening Olga showed a well defined symptom that the little god had claimed her as one of its victims. He parting with the American was accompanied by an intensity of feeling not before definitely displayed. Wyman went to his rooms wondering. Could it be that, yielding to love, this highborn beauty would surrender to an untitled man from the other side of the globe?

The next morning Olga told her guest that there was to be a singular ceremony in the line of what she had promised him. He was delighted. Olga would take part in it. Would he like to do the same? Certainly. What was it like? There would be racing. She would be dressed in running costume. If he intended to take part he would better dress for the same purpose. Capital! He had been a sprinter in school and afterward in college. He had several cups at home he had won on the cinder path.

An hour later Olga appeared attired in a dress the skirt of which came only to the knees. Wyman had no sprinting costume with him, so he appeared simply in a pair of white flannel trousers and shirt. Thus arrayed, the two sprang into a phaeton which stood at the door, and Olga drove to a field on which was a crowd of people. At one end of the open space was a tent. Olga drove to a point near the canvas, and both she and her guest alighted. Olga went into the tent for a few moments, where she divested herself of her jacket and came out ready for a run.

Wyman saw no one else prepared for racing and noticed that he and Olga seemed to be the center of attention. While he was wondering what it all meant, Olga, who had walked a short distance from him, turned, beckoned to him and then darted away over the field.

Wyman ran after her. There was the same excitement, the same cheers, the same shouts, as when he had won cups in America. He was surprised to see that Olga was running very swiftly. Gallantry at first caused him to moderate his pace, but it was not long before he realized that if he was to catch her he must do his best.

The space to be traveled was 200 yards, and to win Wyman must catch the fugitive before reaching a goal at the other end of the field. He was at first so dilatory that when Olga had made half the distance it seemed he would lose. And so he would have lost had not Olga in the next quarter slowed her pace. Within a hundred yards of the goal she ran so slowly that Wyman had no difficulty in catching her. He put his hand on her shoulder, and she fell back into his arms amid a vociferous approval of the onlookers.

Having recovered her breath, she slipped her arm through his, and they walked back together to the starting point. Out of the tent came a priest and advanced toward them. Olga raised her hand in protest.

"No, no, father. This is not a real wedding. This gentleman wished to see some of our customs, and I thought I had best show him one of our wedding ceremonies and arrange that he should be a part of it, but your services will not be required."

Wyman stood looking at the speaker wonderingly. The excitement of the chase was upon him. Moreover, a delightful suspicion flashed in his mind that there was something more in this ceremony than to show him a custom of the country.

As for the crowd, it showed signs of dissent. There were cries of "A wedding, a wedding!" But the countess, who was much beloved by the people, stilled them.

"For my part," said Wyman, looking at Olga with eyes that expressed far more than his words implied, "I think the people are right. We should not disappoint them."

At this the cries were renewed, and this time Olga found it impossible to still them. She gave Wyman a questioning look, then dropped her eyes. Wyman struck while the iron was hot and signaled to the priest to advance and perform the ceremony. Olga yielded, and the two, having been made one, were escorted to the bride's home by a singing, shouting populace.

Wyman returned to the embassy at St. Petersburg, and it was announced to the world that the secretary of the American legation and the Countess Olga Ivanovna were betrothed. Not long afterward they were married in presence of the imperial family, and there were few persons at the capital who knew that this was a supplementary ceremony.

Wyman's life has been spent mostly abroad, but a portion of it he has lived in America with his Russian wife.

Meeting the Salmon.

In British Columbia the Indians ceremoniously went to meet the first salmon and in flattering voices tried to win their favor by calling them all chiefs.

Every spring the Karaks used to dance for salmon. Meanwhile one of their number secluded himself in the mountains and fasted for ten days. Upon his return he solemnly approached the river, took the first salmon of the catch, ate some of it, and with the remainder lighted a sacrificial fire. The same Indians laboriously climbed the mountain top after the poles for the spearing booth, being convinced that if they were gathered where salmon were watching no fish would be caught.

OLDEST PARIS NEWSPAPER.

The Journal Des Debats and Napoleon's Famous News Order.

The oldest newspaper in Paris, the Journal des Debats, was one of the cluster of newspapers which sprang into being with the beginnings of popular government in 1789.

It was founded by a printer named Baudoin, and purported to be, as its name shows, a mere chronicle of political events. Owing to its pungent criticisms of men and affairs it soon became one of the most influential of the Paris journals.

In 1805 the paper was compelled by Napoleon to change its name and became the Journal de l'Empire. It was in the course of the correspondence which took place between Napoleon and the editor, Fievee, on the subject of the threatened censorship that the emperor gave the order which has become famous, about the policy of the newspaper, "that it should publish no news unfavorable to the government until the truth was so well known that publication was needless."

After Napoleon's retirement to Elba the paper resumed its old title. It is still edited and printed in the house where it was first started, beside the church of St. Germain de l'Auxerrois, from the tower of which the signal was given for the massacre of St. Bartholomew's eve. Of all the great Paris newspapers it has been the least affected by the modern developments of journalism, and its dignified columns are an encouragement to thoughtful reflection and a serious study of affairs. —London Times.

Striped Sweaters.

For summer wear the striped sweater of silk is undoubtedly the cry of the hour. In green, lavender, blue, wheat and tango this beautiful and costly bit of sports wear with its sash is particularly effective with the white skirt or the white suit.

Candle ends, melted and mixed with an equal quantity of turpentine make an excellent polish for floors, oil cloths, etc. It is equal to good beeswax.

Sea salt dissolved in a hot bath has a wonderful tonic effect. It should be first dissolved in a pitcher or cup and then poured into the bath and stirred.

BOWSER'S BOXING

He Engages in Combat with a Punching Bag

By M. QUAD

[Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.]

THERE was a sort of three ply, back action, double combination look on Mr. Bowser's face as he entered the house, and for the life of her Mrs. Bowser couldn't make out whether he had fallen heir to a fortune or decided to run for office. In this situation she wisely held her peace and asked no questions, even when she discovered that he had brought home a package. He vou[illegible]fed no information, but during the dinner hour was preoccupied and exultant by turns. When they had adjourned to the family room he was ready to explain, and he softly began:

"Mrs. Bowser, with your permission, I want to try a little experiment this evening."

"Is it connected with that package you brought home?" she cautiously asked.

"Somewhat. You know how my shoulders have pained me of late? There are mornings when I can scarcely raise my hand to button my collar. I haven't said much to you about it"—

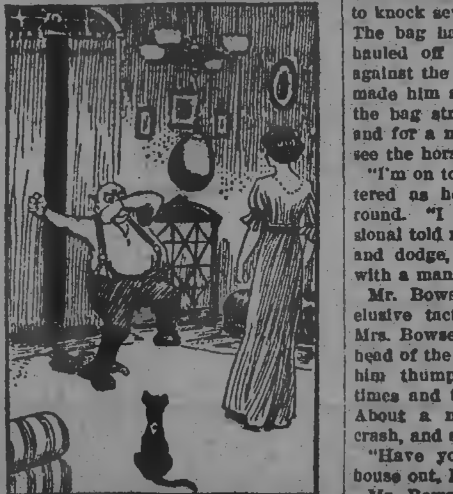
"I never heard you complain of your back and shoulders," she interrupted.

"No."

"Only last night you wanted to move the furniture in your bedroom about, and you said you felt like turning handsprings."

Such a Considerate Man.

"If I haven't complained," he continued as he preserved his good nature, "it was because I didn't care to worry you. As a matter of fact, Mrs. Bowser—a matter of medical fact—I am what is called shoulder bound—that is, rheumatism has seized upon and contracted my muscles, and if something is not done paralysis will eventually overtake me. If I get a stroke of paralysis you will become a widow."



"WATCH HOW I DO IT."

"And you must stand on your head or climb up the side of the house to ward it off?"

"No, ma'am. The remedy is very simple. Half an hour's work for a few evenings will fix me all right. I met a professional athlete today, and after examining my condition he told me just what to do. However, if you have the slightest objection—if you want to see me become a victim of the dread paralysis"—

"What did he tell you to do?" she asked.

Mr. Bowser went to the hall tree and got his package and returned with it and held it up and replied:

"Simplest thing in the world. It is called a punching bag. You inflate it and hang it up and punch it. The exercise benefits every muscle in the back and shoulders. It only cost $3, and I'll get $500 worth of good out of it. It would also be a good thing for you to practice on. If you don't object I will inflate it and hang it up and pound it a little this evening."

"Well, go ahead," she sighed, "but don't blame me."

"Blame you about what? How can I blame you? What can happen? I simply hang the bag on the chandelier, remove my coat and vest and punch it. Nothing can be more simple. You don't expect I'm going to knock the house down, do you?"

A Few Preliminary Remarks.

Mrs. Bowser relapsed into silence, while he went ahead with the inflating. When the bag was ready he hung it up on the chandelier and removed his coat and vest.

"Now, then," he said as he spat on his palms and made ready, "you watch how I do it. It is the greatest exercise in the world. It is warranted to cure dyspepsia, indigestion, neuralgia, and so forth, and to straighten up the spine and give a man a military carriage. It is practiced in every college and seminary in the land, and there are few homes without their punching bags. You see, I stand this way—and I reach out this way—and I biff, bang, with my left"—

The biff, bang, was a swat which would have shattered the panel of a door. The ball shot away and upward as if fired from a cannon, and about half the glass ornaments of the chandelier came rattling down on the floor. Mrs. Bowser cried out in alarm and made a rush for the parlor, but Mr. Bowser laughed and reassured her.

"I guess I overdid it a little for the first blow. I'll make a rat-tat-tat of it."

He played with the ball for a minute, and the rest of the trimmings and two of the globes came raining down. The other globes would have followed had not Mrs. Bowser uttered words of vigorous protest. With the perspiration running down his face he paused to reply:

"Never mind a few cents' damages. This is great work. I'm feeling a movement of muscles which have been dormant for months. Perhaps you'd better go upstairs and avoid the racket. I'll hitch the bag to that telephone wire on the ceiling."

Mr. Bowser's Face in the Way.

Mrs. Bowser promptly disappeared, and he got the stepladder and gave the bag a hang from the wire. When he squared off before it again he was alone and untrammeled, and he meant to knock seven bells out of something. The bag had a long play, and as he hauled off on it there was a crash against the ceiling and a rebound that made him see stars. In coming back the bag struck him fair in the face, and for a minute he looked around to see the horse which had kicked him.

"I'm on to that little curve!" he muttered as he got ready for the next round. "I remember now the professional told me the object was to punch and dodge, the same as if scrapping with a man. Well, here goes!"

Mr. Bowser had never studied the elusive tactics of the punching bag. Mrs. Bowser, who was waiting at the head of the stairs for a calamity, heard him thump and grunt four or five times and then begin to dance about. About a minute later there was a crash, and she called down:

"Have you knocked a side of the house out, Mr. Bowser?"

Mr. Bowser hadn't. In his dodging about he had encountered a chair and fallen over it and had come down so heavily that a referee would have counted him out. It was a long minute before he got up, and then his good nature had departed. No punching bag ever made by mortal man could knock him about with impunity. He rose up with a determination to collapse that bag with one awful blow. He had been warned to go easy, but his outraged dignity demanded revenge. Mrs. Bowser heard him tapping the bag with his left to get it in motion, and then she heard him draw a long breath like a horse going up hill as he hauled off to deliver the knockout blow with his right.

Mrs. Bowser Rushes to the Rescue.

As he jumped in to deliver the blow he had to dodge the bag, and there was a thump against the wall which rattled things clear to the garret, followed by a howl, a stagger and a fall. Mrs. Bowser got downstairs in a breath and found Mr. Bowser lying across the foot of the lounge, with the bag playing pendulum about him. His awful blow had missed it and landed on the wall, and his good right hand was already puffing up to beat a cabbage head.

"What—what has happened?" she asked as she thought of arnica and bandage and slings.

Mr. Bowser struggled up like a stricken ox, and he looked from his broken knuckles to the dent in the wall from the swinging bag to Mrs. Bowser and up to the despoiled chandelier. She was prepared for a furious outburst, but none came. After a long minute he quietly but sternly said:

"Woman, return to your room! In the morning all will be settled. You were against me, and you crept downstairs and struck me with a chair, but our lawyers will settle all that, and you can start for your mother's by the noon train. No more, woman—not another word! You have failed again, but this is the last time—the last time. Good night to you. Good night!"

Consuming.

"She says her love for you is a consuming passion!"

"It is. It takes five pounds of candy a week to keep it alive."—Town Topics.

AN HISTORIC HOSTELRY.

Port Credit Hotel Used to Be "Government House" Supply Depot.

When Port Credit Hotel — like eight other hostelries in Peel County —lost its license on July 31, owing to the decree of the Canada Temperance Act, prestige departed from an institution with a history. It stands on the Credit's east bank on the Lake Shore road.

The present building was remodelled in 1911, and since that has been run in enterprising fashion by Mr. P. W. Long. Before that for exactly half a century Robert Lynd, a typical boniface, here had provided refreshment for man and beast traveling the Queen's highway between Toronto and the Ambitious City. Back of 1861 another hotel stood on the site about which hovered entertaining local traditions.

It had been built in 1793 and was a one-storey log structure, about 15 feet from ground to eaves, with a gable, fireplaces, chimneys, and the foundations were of stones from the lake shore. When a U. E. Loyalist, named Watson, came up from New York State about the time of 1812 he found this building vacant and leased it from the Government—the owners—recognizing its suitability as an inn. His daughter married Moses Polly, and the pair kept tavern accordingly till about 1839, when the husband was drowned. A few years later Mrs. Polly married the Robert Lynd before alluded to.

Probably the story prior to Watson's lease is most interesting of all. Tradition says that Governor Simcoe's Queen's Rangers built the log house; up till Watson's advent it was known as "Government House." In moving the Upper Canadian troops back and forth, between Little York and Newark, before the construction of the Lake Shore road, boats and canoes were much employed, coasting around the lake past Hamilton. Stores and provisions were necessary for the voyagers, and the spot chosen for Port Credit's "Government House," handy to the sheltered water of the river, was admirable for loading. When the lakeside highway was built all travel came and went round by land; the authorities found it unnecessary to longer maintain its depot; and for some years the place was leased to private parties at a nominal rental of $1 per year, but with a stipulation that arrangements were always to be available for the accommodation of travelers. "Government House," anyway, the log structure, remained until Watson got his lease and ran it as a regular roadside tavern.

Found "A No. 1 Hard."

It is little known fact that W. K. McNaught, ex-M.P.P., and Hydro Electric Commissioner, was the real discoverer of the particular glory of the West, known as "A No. 1 Hard." Some day the trip he made will be termed "historic." It took him 12 days—by rail to Sarnia, by boat to Duluth, by Jim Hill's somewhat primitive road to Fisher's Landing, in Dakota, thence by those large, flat-bottomed Red River boats that were said to pay for themselves on one trip to Winnipeg, which then boasted 1,500 people.

While there young Mr. McNaught saw a remarkable spectacle—1,500 Red River ox-carts encamped on the outskirts of the village and loaded with buffalo robes and furs brought in for barter from anything up to 500 miles away. But that is not the main story. Farm-bred, he became interested in what the village natives called a curiosity. Every pound of flour—meat for that matter—used by Winnipeg people and supplied by them to traders returning to their camps in the vast Northwest—was imported from St. Paul and Minneapolis. The curiosity was 500 bushels of wheat taken in barter by a small Winnipeg firm. Mr. McNaught recognized its high-grade qualities, bought it, and shipped it to a well-known Toronto seed firm. This was the first shipment of wheat ever made from the Canadian Northwest; to-day it is known the world over as "No. 1 Manitoba Hard."

A Huge Blast.

Nine tons of dynamite, enough to destroy a half of the city of Halifax, were used a few days ago at the new terminals at Point Pleasant. The dynamite was placed in holes thirty feet deep. The result was a tremendous upheaval of some 30,000 yards of rock, estimated at 50,000 tons, so that now the former hill has the appearance of the result of an earthquake with rocks weighing thousands of tons on the surface placed in various positions, a task that no human hand could accomplish, the environments of the explosion resembling the crater of a volcano.

The blast is considered the most successful since work on the big ocean treminals started, and though near the house of the Yacht Squadron, not an iota of damage was caused by the gigantic blast to the surrounding property.

Big Gain In Exports.

The trade figures of the Dmoinion for the twelve months ending April 30, show an increase of $17,000,000. The great feature is the increase in the exports by $74,000,000, while the imports decreased by $57,000,000. The customs duties consequently fell off by $10,500,000.

The large increase in exports will be taken as an indication that Canada's agriculturarl and manufacturing industries are becoming established on a sound and healthy basis. The exports of agricultural products increased from 155 to 193 millions and manufactures from 41 to 58 millions.

Talc Industry Grows.

The statistics regarding talc, prepared by the Bureau of Mines, show that some 40,000 tons of the material have been mined during the years 1899-1913, inclusive, almost all of which came from Madoc, Ont.

The balance was obtained from deposits at Eldorado and Gananoque.

When getting a job is the best a man can do he accepts the situation.

BOTANICAL GARDEN

Manitoba Agricultural College Will Establish One Near College.

The Botany Department of the Manitoba Agricultural College is establishing a Botanical Garden and Arboretum, wherein a variety of plants will be placed with the object of having as complete and representative a collection of plants, trees, and shrubs as close to the college as possible, thereby facilitating class study with the summer classes and providing material for the winter classes.

A large number of conifers have been planted this spring. These were sent down from the granite districts north of the Winnipeg river this spring by Prof. Jackson of the Botany Department, and so far are doing well. Another lot of conifers was obtained through the courtesy of Norman Ross, of the Indian Head Forestry Station. These included seedling pines such as the Scotch Pine, Jack Pine, Lodge Pine and several spruces. The birch will be grown from seed later on in the season.

A complete set of seeds of grasses and forage plants has been obtained in order to have a representative lot for the scientific study of grasses and clovers by the fifth year students.

The Shea Nut of Africa.

In favorable districts and when protected from bush fires the shea tree grows to a height of over 40 feet. It flowers from January to March, and the fruit ripens from June to September, but principally at the end of July. When ripe the fruit falls to the ground. It has a soft external cover resembling that of the walnut in appearance. This fleshy pulp is eaten by the natives when it softens prior to detaching itself from the nut, and it is also eaten by sheep and other animals, but not the nut itself. The pulp is sweet and has a not disagreeable taste, and might possibly be used for the manufacture of alcohol.

The fresh nut is about the size and shape of a walnut, but is covered with a smooth skin resembling that of a Spanish chestnut, which can be pulled off in the same way when fresh. Inside the skin is a soft kernal of a light yellow color when fresh and chocolate color when dry, which contains a large proportion of fatty matter that, when extracted, is called shea butter.

Eagerly Communicative.

AN ODD POSTCARD

Japanese Government Produced One in 1873.

The most curious post card ever produced, according to a leading philatelist, was one which the Japanese Government put out in 1873.

In describing it he says it is "really a sheet of paper folded so as to form four pages of a narrow book. On the front page is a border inclosing an impressed stamp for the postage rate and a space for the address. On the second page are printed in native characters only minute directions for use. On the third page are ruled a number of vertical lines, between which the sender was to write his communication, and the fourth page was a blank." They remained in use until 1875.

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills

owe their singular effectiveness in curing Rheumatism, Lumbago and Sciatica to their power of stimulating and strengthening the kidneys. They enable these organs to thoroughly filter from the blood the uric acid (the product of waste matter) which gets into the joints and muscles and causes these painful diseases. Over half a century of constant use has proved conclusively that Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills strengthen weak kidneys and 41

To Reform Prison System.

At the next session of Parliament the Minister of Justice will introduce legislation to reform the penitentiary system of to-day, if the study of the subject now in progress can be completed meanwhile. This will affect the system of discipline, classification of convicts, employment of prisoners, and the treatment of the insane.

It is hoped that some system will be found under which convicts can be employed and their earnings applied in part to the attention of their families. In the adoption of such a system care would be taken to provide against any unequal competition with industries outside. In England, it is understood, a method has been devised whereby certain commodities used in the Government service are made by prison labor.

Fours and Sixes—Three Chassis—Six Types

HERE'S where we widen the gap between the McLaughlin and all other cars. You—if you think—cannot fail to choose a McLaughlin. You—if you investigate—must admit there is none other like it at the price. You'll be simply captivated by the appearance of the 1915 models—marvels of grace, true exponents of pure streamline beauty. They have all the power and "lug," all the built-in efficiency, of former models—with these important features added:

Some 1915 Improvements

New and improved Delco system of electric starting and lighting;
Non-skid tires on rear wheels;
Speedometer as part of regular equipment;
Tungsten steel valves—valves of proven efficiency;
Carbureter supplied by Stewart-Warner gravity feed vacuum system;

McLAUGHLIN

These and many other Improvements that create efficiency—not at prices advanced (as you might reasonably expect) but at prices substantially lower.

And retaining the power, the speed, the dependability of former McLaughlin models—featuring again the powerful Buick "valve-in-head" motor—emphasizing afresh the big fact of "greater power with less fuel."

Shipments of 1915 McLaughlin models commence in August of this year.

Misses West and Carhart at Tuxedo Horse Show.

At the horse show recently held at fashionable Tuxedo the members of the pony class attracted considerable attention. This class was made up of young folks who exhibited their favorite ponies and horses. Arrayed in the latest riding and driving habits, they presented a very smart, not to say sporty, appearance. Society's little folk are familiar with ponies from their infancy and as soon as they are able to sit in the saddle are taught to ride. They are also schooled in handling the reins and are altogether thoroughly versed in horse lore. The two little girls whose portraits are shown above are Misses J. Warner West and V. Carhart. They were exhibitors at the show.

An After Dinner Trick.

Tommy Brown, a little boy, tried this trick on some of his friends and was thought very clever. Just when dinner was nearly over Bridget quietly announced that the grocer must have forgotten to bring the nuts and raisins. The company were all more or less disappointed, but Tom, the host, seemed very angry at this omission. Impatiently he said to Bridget, "Fetch me the dish in which the nuts and raisins should have been served." Pretending to be very much annoyed, he flourished his own napkin vigorously over the empty dish; then, carefully lifting the napkin, much to the surprise of all, the dish was revealed full of nuts and raisins.

This is how Tom managed the trick. He had got Bridget to sew two napkins together all around the edges and to slit one across the middle. The space between the napkins made a bag, into which Tom had supplied the nuts and raisins. He held the bag between his knees, with another napkin over his lap. While he was gesticulating in apparent disappointment, he had quickly changed napkins. The trick was a clever bit of homemade slight of hand and all shouted at Tom's cleverness.

"Elephant Tag."

In playing the game called "elephant tag" each child takes the name of an animal—dog, cat, kangaroo, panther or anything he wishes, but one must be the elephant, and one must be the mouse. The elephant tries to catch all the animals except the mouse, and the mouse tries to catch the elephant. If the elephant touches one of the animals that animal must go into the menagerie (probably the front yard). He tries to get all the animals into the menagerie without getting caught by the mouse. If there are many children there can be two elephants and two mice. If one of the elephants is caught he is put into the menagerie, too, but he can be rescued if the other elephant touches him.

A "C" Game.

Each question can be answered by a word ending in "cy."

A stately C? Aristocracy.
A royal C? His excellency.
A deceptive C? Fallacy.
A criminal C? Piracy.
A much desired C? Currency.
A clever C? Policy.
An exclusive C? Privacy.
An aromatic C? Spicy.
A tempting C? Delicacy.
A merciful C? Clemency.

An Intelligent Horse.

A story is being told of the intelligence of a horse belonging to a rustic Scotchman of Ardow, Mull. It lost a shoe and, managing to get out of the field where it was grazing, traveled a considerable distance to a blacksmith, who was astonished to find the horse standing in front of the door holding up a forpleg. The horse was shod and galloped back home quite contented.

Teddy and Miss Rainy Day.

When Teddy meets Miss Rainy Day
He wears a rubber coat of gray.
A drooping hat protects his head,
A big umbrella's o'er him spread,
And on the street he seems to be
A blot of black and gray to me.

But if I peep beneath the rim
Of his umbrella, black and grim,
I find the loveliest surprise
Of laughing lips and merry eyes.
And I laugh back and quite forget
The grayness and the rain and wet.

And 'tis the very selfsame way
With what we call Miss Rainy Day.
Behind her cloak of dismal clouds
Gay little sunbeams lurk in crowds,
And if you look for them you'll see How nice Miss Rainy Day can be.

PAIN CONSTANTLY TORTURED HIM

Student Became So Ill, He Was Forced To Leave Berthier College. Suffered For Two Years Until Cured By Wonderful "Fruit-a-tives" Tablets.

MAGLOIRE PAQUIN, ESQ.

St. Boniface de Shawinigan, Feb. 3rd. 1914.

"It is a pleasure to me to inform you that after having suffered from Chronic Constipation for 2½ years, I have been cured by the use of "Fruit-a-tives". While I was a student at Berthier College, I became so ill that I was forced to leave College. Severe pains across the intestines continually tortured me and it came to a point when I could not stoop down at all. At times, I used to be for three or four days without a single motion of the bowels, and I became so sick that my digestion became paralyzed. Some one advised me to take "Fruit-a-tives" and at once noticed a great improvement. After I had taken four or five boxes, I realized that I was completely cured".

MAGLOIRE PAQUIN

Many famous physicians have stated that fully 50% of the cases of Kidney Trouble, Pain In The Back, Indigestion, Sour Stomach, Appendicitis, Nervousness, Headaches, Typhoid Fever, Rheumatism and Neuralgia, are found in people who habitually suffer from Chronic Constipation. Surely, you must realize the danger of Constipation "Fruit-a-tives" acts directly on the Liver; stimulates this organ to renewed vigor; enables the Liver to give up sufficient bile to move the bowels and insures the bowels moving regularly and naturally every day. "Fruit-a-tives" will positively cure every case of Constipation, no matter how severe it may be.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Medical Value of Rest.

The value of rest in the medical management of acute inflammatory and infectious diseases is not fully appreciated. Its effect on the circulation is significant. The average daily output of energy by the heart is 400,000 foot pounds. By simple rest in bed it is possible to save the heart a daily expenditure of 50,000 foot pounds of energy. The faster the heart beats the less time it has for rest, so that decreasing the pulse rate saves the heart. Again, in the recumbent position this organ is saved the labor of elevating that part of the blood which goes to parts above its own level. Rest of the voluntary muscles is still more important. An immense amount of energy evolved in muscle movement is conserved by rest in bed.

The Reconciliation.

The doctor was soon at the child's bedside. Remedies were administered; then the agonized pair watched the fight for life—skill and vitality on one side, fierce disease on the other. When at last the struggle ceased the gray dawn of day was looking in at the window. Life had won. The child slept.

"She is all right now," said the doctor, shaking the man's hand, which had gripped his, and feeling his heart grow warmer under the look of mute gratitude the woman turned upon him.

When he had gone the two stood side by side at the baby's crib, listening to her regular breathing. Then with one accord they turned and kissed each other. And in that kiss the icy barrier between them melted away.—Atlanta Constitution.

Heyse as a Prize Winner.

The late Paul Heyse was probably the only man of letters who could boast of having obtained two important literary prizes with an interval of more than half a century between the awards. All the world knows that he got the Nobel prize. All the world does not know that his play, "The Sabines," was allotted a prize in a dramatic competition as long ago as 1857. He was a member of the Round Table of the good King Max of Bavaria, a sovereign whose joy it was to surround himself with men of science and letters.—Pall Mall Gazette.

She Was Exact.

"You can't dishearten the right kind of a dog," remarked the man on the car. "Cut off seven-eighths of his tail and he will try to wigwag his love with the remaining eighth."—Toledo Blade.

THE OLD TRADE DOLLAR.

And the Exact Ratio of Gold to Silver in the Year 1870.

Three mining engineers were gathered together the other day, and the question as to the value of an old trade dollar came up. Strange as it may seem, no one knew its value, and there was considerable haziness as to the exact value of an ounce of pure gold or of the old fashioned value of an ounce of silver, says a correspondent in the Engineering and Mining Journal. Calculations which I made seemed to indicate that the ratio of gold to silver in 1870 was not exactly 16 to 1. Possibly it may be of interest to the profession to know the exact figures which I have received from the assayer of the mint bureau, United States treasury.

Coinage value of one ounce pure gold is $20.671834625. A convenient fact, easy to remember, regarding this figure is that forty-three ounces of coin gold, 900 fine, are worth $800.

Coin value of an ounce of silver 1870 .... $1.2929
Coinage value of a trade dollar in 1870 .... 1.01818
The coinage value of a Mexican dollar in 1870 .... 1.0159

The trade dollar was coined so that it might be used in the orient on a parity with the Mexican dollar, which it slightly exceeded in value. The Mexican dollar, no longer coined, weighed 417.74 grains and was 902.7 fine, slightly in excess of the United States fineness of 900.

In 1870 the ratio of gold to silver was not 16 to 1, but 15.9884— to 1. This silver ratio has been discontinued, and the ratio for the present subsidiary coinage is 14.95349 to 1.

Where His Love Lay.

He was sitting in front of a brightly burning fire talking to her. After a while he said thoughtfully:

"This reminds me of a grate that I used to sit in front of years ago."

"I can well imagine how you enjoyed those evenings," she responded hopefully, "open fires give one such a sense of home." But he went on talking of drafts and heat and ashes and the hygienic condition of a room ventilated by a fireplace.

"I have never known a grate," he continued, "like the one in the home of the girl where I used to go so often."

A long silence followed, the crackling of the fire the only sound in the room. It was broken at last by him in a voice that had echoes of a dear memory in its tones. "You cannot imagine how I loved that—grate!"—New York Post.

Abelard and Heloise.

Heloise was noted as much for her intellectual ability as for her personal beauty. She was familiar with the literature of four or five languages—Italian, French, Greek, Latin and Hebrew. Her knowledge was remarkable; her conversational powers were brilliant. It was her bright mind and varied learning that first attracted the attention of Abelard. Abelard died in 1142, Heloise in 1164. First buried at St. Marcel, Abelard's remains were shifted several times, but finally reached the well known tomb at Pere la Chaise, wherein also rest the ashes of Heloise.

THE BITTEREST PILL OF ALL.

To Hubby It Was the Thought of His Better Half's Cold Neglect.

MIDDLETON heard the clock in the parlor that adjoined his darkened bedroom strike the hour as the doctor rose.

"Take one of these pills every half hour. I'll call in again tonight."

Then the sound of the physician's voice as he spoke reassuringly to Middleton's wife in the next room.

Middleton heard the clock strike once.

It was strange in his feverish condition how time seemed to fly. A whole half hour had passed since the doctor's departure, and still she hadn't come in to see how he was. A fine way, this, to treat him!

The sick man helped himself to a pill, with a swallow of water.

But no sooner had he dropped back on the pillow, or so it seemed to Middleton, when he heard the clock striking the next hour.

He took a second pill. Again the clock struck. Middleton took another pill. The clock was striking again. He took another pill. Again the clock struck. Middleton sat up and gulped a pill. The clock struck. He took a pill. The clock again. He took a pill. The clock—a pill.

And now the last of those accursed pills were gone. There had been twelve tablets, and he had taken one every half hour. That meant that the whole morning had passed, and all this time nobody had so much as come near him.

"Well, dear, how do you feel now?"

Middleton opened his eyes upon his wife's figure, framed in the doorway. He spoke through his teeth:

"Woman—for wife of my bosom, helpmeet, you have this day proved yourself to be no longer—woman, go leave me to die! Don't come in now asking how I am! You've left me this whole livelong day, racked with pain, to wait on myself, unless I wanted to die for the lack of attention"— He choked over what was almost a sob.

Middleton's wife came into the room, with brisk, competent hands turning and patting the pillow under him.

"I'd have been in sooner, only the clock in the parlor had run down, and I stopped to rewind and regulate it."—Puck.

Kitchen Notes

The Fireless Cooker.

Make or buy a fireless cooker. It is unexcelled for stews, cereals, puddings and vegetables. A fireless cooker keeps the kitchen cool, saves labor and fuel and does not encourage flies, because there is no odor of cooking to attract them.

To manufacture a homemade cooker take a large wooden basket or box not less than sixteen inches high and fifteen inches across, an eight inch granite dinner pail holding about a gallon, with a tight fitting cover and some excelsior.

Pack the excelsior into the wooden bucket to the depth of about three inches and on this place the granite pail and pack the excelsior tightly around it to the top. If properly packed the pail can be lifted out of the excelsior without disturbing the packing.

To cook vegetables prepare in the usual way, put in the pail and boil for ten or twenty minutes in the pail.

Then place the pail in a box, pack the excelsior around it and pay no further attention to it until ready to serve the vegetables, which should be in a short time. However, as different cookers have different heat retaining properties the time can be best determined by experiment. With a fireless cooker there is no danger of having burned or scorched food.

Asparagus For Hot Weather.

Asparagus has medicinal qualities that are beneficial at this season. There are many ways of serving it, but the simplest way is the best. The tough ends should be cut off and the remaining stalks bound together in small bunches with a strip of muslin.

Boil in just enough water to cover until tender, but not soft. Cook about twenty minutes if the asparagus is young and fresh.

Remove the stalks from the water, drain thoroughly and place on toast.

With it can be served a sauce made of half a cupful of the water in which it has been boiled, a tablespoonful of butter, level tablespoonful of flour and half a cupful of rich cream.

The butter should be thoroughly mixed with the flour before it is added to the hot water and cream. An old fashioned way of serving asparagus is to cut the tender portions of the stalk into half inch pieces and boil them until they are tender, thoroughly drain and serve with butter, pepper and salt.

Raspberry Turnovers.

Roll out pie crust and cut in sections about four or five inches square. Put a spoonful of raspberry jam in center, fold over twice and press down the two ends and trim off with a sharp knife. Brush the tops with milk and bake in a hot oven.

Summer Economy.

Practice economy in small things. When using the oven for roasting bake a pie or pudding, bake the potatoes, eliminate the use of the other burners. Don't burn gas for toast to save a few pieces of stale bread.

STRUCK FROM THE ROLLS.

What Happens to an English Lawyer When He Goes Wrong.

When a solicitor passes his examinations his name is entered on the "rolls" of the legal profession. Should he ever become guilty of professional misconduct his name is "struck off the rolls."

It is a grave matter. Any person having a complaint against a solicitor in reference to his professional conduct is supposed to forward it to the Incorporated Law society, the body which rules the legal profession. His private life doesn't trouble the society unless he is convicted of a criminal offense.

Having received the complaint and evidence in support of it, the society brings the matter before a divisional court composed of two or three of the most distinguished judges on the bench. The solicitor is given every chance of defending himself, but if, after hearing the evidence, the judges decide that he is guilty his name is "struck from the rolls." Should the offense be a minor one, caused more by misunderstanding than fraud, the solicitor may be suspended for a period and allowed to practice again at the expiration of it.

A solicitor cannot be "struck off the rolls" for negligence or bankruptcy. A client's remedy in the first case is to bring an action against him for damages. Bankruptcy is adjudged to be a misfortune and therefore is not "professional misconduct."—London Tit-Bits.

How is a man to recognize opportunity when it doesn't bark?

His Own Was Too Much.

The late Sir John Astley, affectionately remembered as "The Mate," was, now many years ago, standing for Parliament. A tiresome "heckler" asked him, says the New Witness, what he thought of Sir Wilfrid Lawson's wine and spirits bill.

"Wat do I think of Sir Wilfrid Lawson's wine and spirits bill?" cried indignant Sir John, "I don't think of it at all. That's his affair, not yours or mine. I can tell you if you like that my own last year was a jolly bit too big."

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

BRITISH ENGAGE GERMANS AND HOLD THEIR GROUND

Fighting With Enemy All Day Sunday and Until After Dark --- Holland Will not Jeopardize Her Neutrality by Improperly Supplying Goods to Germans, Says Dutch Minister

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 24.—The official press bureau to-day gave out the following announcement: "British forces were engaged all day Sunday and until after dark with the enemy in the neighborhood of Mons, Belgium.

They held their ground.

London, Aug. 24.—The conflict between the allied forces and the Germans in Belgium extends along a complete line of contact, and the French embassy has received information that up to the present the battle has been without advantage to either side.

HOLLAND IS FIRM.

London, Aug. 24.—"England may rest assured that, come what may, Holland will not jeopardize her neutrality by improperly supplying goods to Germany," declared M. Treub, the Dutch minister of industry and commerce. "We are gathering wheat only for our own needs."

"Export from Holland of wheat is now absolutely forbidden, and there is consequently no possibility of any country being supplied from this source."

ANARCHY IN ALBANIA.

London, Aug. 24.—The Venice correspondent of the Daily Mail sends the report that Prince William of Albania, accompanied by his family, has arrived at Brindisi, en route for Germany, and that Albania is in a state of complete anarchy.

RUSSIANS PURSUE ENEMY.

London, Aug. 24—A despatch to the Times from St. Petersburg, which followed the first reports of Russian successes in East Prussia, says: "It is not a defeat, but a rout. Continuing their pursuit of the Germans, the Russians occupied Soldau, 13 miles southwest of Neidenburg, whence they command the railway to Dansig."

AUSTRIANS DESPERATE.

London, Aug. 24.—An Exchange Telegraph Co. despatch from Nish, referring to the Servian victory on the Drina, says that Servian artillery sank a number of the enemy's boats, including eight transports carrying troops.

The despatch says the Austrians are massing on the banks of the Drina, preparing for a desperate attempt to regain the lost ground.

GERMAN MOVEMENTS.

London, Aug. 24. — The Ostend correspondent of the Daily Mail says that German columns are marching southward toward Valenciennes on the Scheldt, thirty miles south east of Lille, one passing by way of Ninove, Grammont and Lessines, Belgium, and the other by way of Halbrain Le Comte and Mons, Belgium. They are moving with speed.

It is suggested that this means a dash upon Roubaix, one of the wealthiest of the French towns or upon Lille.

THE SPOILS OF WAR.

Belfort, France, Aug. 24.—A German biplane captured at Cernay has been added to 22 guns and other trophies, to be placed at the foot of Alsace monument.

SERVIAN CAPTURES.

Nish, Aug. 24.—It is officially announced that the Servian army captured from the enemy in the engagement on the Drina 4,500 prisoners, 53 guns, 8 howitzers, 114 caissons, 3 field ambulances and a medical column with supplies, 14 field kitchens, 15 ammunition, provision and telegraph wagons, railroad trains, quantities of equipment and regimental strong boxes, etc.

TROOPS AT VAL CARTIER

Over Twelve Thousand Men Arrive in Camp

VALCARTIER, Aug. 24. — With approximately 12,000 troops under canvas here to-day, this little French-Canadian village has assumed the role of a great concentration camp. About 26 regiments, principally city corps, arrived on four special trains yesterday. They consisted of about 4,000 officers and men. Most of them came from Toronto, Montreal, Hamilton, Brantford, and various Ontario towns and several cities in the Maritime Provinces. Rain fell intermittently throughout yesterday, but tents had been pitched prior to their coming by militiamen who had arrived earlier, so all were well taken care of the moment they reached the camp. Special trains bearing troops from all parts of the Dominion continued to roll in yesterday and probably before the end of this week the entire contingent of Canada's overseas expeditionary force of nearly 25,000 men, will be encamped awaiting the order to go abroad.

The real work of the camp has not commenced thus far, but to-day will see the opening of the ranges and shooting practice will be carried on continuously from early morning until sundown. Practically all that has been done thus far has been the making of arrangements for the arrival of the troops and properly housing them. Hundreds of tents have been pitched on the site, which covers about 30 square miles, and still more are being put up to be in readiness for the arrival of many regiments during the week.

It is expected that there will not be a large number of soldiers arrive to-day, but to-morrow will be a heavy day when probably 5,000 will reach Valcartier, among them being 973 men from Calgary alone. On Thursday about 1,073 volunteers will come from Vancouver, and on Friday one of the regiments scheduled to put in an appears is the 48th Highlanders of Toronto, under command of Lieut.-Col. J. A. Currie.

(Special Staff Correspondence to the Montreal Star.)

Valcartier Camp. — Standing by the great flagpole, from which by day flies the Union Jack, and on which, at night, are suspended two red lights, after the sun is set, the camp of the Canadian expeditionary force seems something created by fairy hands. Far over the plateau the tents show, transparent, glowing through the misty darkness. The great raw gashes of ploughed ground have disappeared. The galvanized iron sheds are lost in the black mass of the foliage, the freight cars are hidden by the kindly shadows. All about the heavy hills form a ring, and in the valley are these thousands of tents, glowing like a multitude of white Chinese lanterns. From some far corner comes a bugle call. In some tent there is singing. Nothing seems farther from war or from the horrors of slaughter than this panorama of lights, clustered on the quiet country side.

But the lights went out early last night. The men who have been in camp were up at half-past four yesterday morning to make ready for the coming of the first troop train. The four thousand four hundred who arrived in camp during the day

BERLIN REPORTS A WIN

French Defeated and Prisoners Include Several Generals

Also Defeat English Brigade of Cavalry

Canadian Press Despatch.

Berlin, Aug. 24. — Official announcement was made here today that the German army commanded by Grand Duke Albrecht of Wurtemberg, has defeated the French army at Neufchateau, capturing many guns, flags and prisoners, including several generals.

German armies under Prince Rupprecht, Crown Prince Wilhelm and Grand Duke Albrecht are vigorously pursuing the French.

The army under Prince Rupprecht captured 150 guns at Luneville, Blamont and Cirey. The army commanded by the Crown Prince pursued the French beyond Longwy. Germans are west of the river Meuse and are advancing against Manbenge.

They have defeated an English brigade of cavalry.

Washington, Aug. 24.—The German embassy to-day received the following message from the foreign office in Berlin: "The army of the German crown prince has won a decisive victory northwest of Bledenhosen over five French army corps. The retreat of the southern French wing on Verdun has been cut off. French troops were repulsed across the river Meuse in complete rout. The crown prince's army, in giving chase, took many prisoners, and it is declared that the French troops are no longer able to face the terrific fire of the German infantry."

Basel, Switzerland, Aug. 24.—According to reports received here from different points in Upper Alsace, German troops have begun another forward movement against the French in Muelhausen and Environs.

RUSSIANS STRIKE HARD

Official Statement From St. Petersburg Declares That After Four Days of Fighting Germans Fell Back on Saturday With Russians in Pursuit---German City of Interberg is Occupied.

GRAND DUKE NICHOLAS.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 24.—Grand Duke Nicholas, commander-in-chief of the Russian army, yesterday issued the following statement:

"Battles in east Prussia on Aug. 17, 18, 19 and 20 were fought with the utmost desperation. The spirit of the troops is excellent. Our battle front extends for a distance of over 40 versts (about twenty-six miles).

"The Russian troops occupied Moldapp and Ayres. The retreat on Aug. 20 of the German army corps near Lyck resembled a rout. The enemy's troops are evacuating the frontier in the vicinity of Willenberg. The German population is abandoning the villages and fleeing northward.

"On the Austrian frontier up to Aug. 20 no collision occurred. The Russians forced an Austrian battalion to evacuate Burgado and Ravarusse.

"On Aug. 20 the Germans near Gumbinnen engaged three army corps and tried to envelop the Russian right wing, where the fighting was intensely fierce. The Russians took the offensive in the centre and [illegible] many guns. The enemy asked for an armistice to bury their dead, but were refused. On Aug. 21 victory crowned the efforts of the Russian army. The Germans, having suffered enormous losses, are falling back, pursued by the Russians."

Four Millions Under Arms.

LONDON, Aug. 24. — More than 4,000,000 Russian soldiers are mobilized to-day in readiness to strike at Germany and Austria in support of movements already begun, according to Captain Dimitri Vassilieff, naval attache of the Russian embassy in Washington, who is now on his way to that city, having left his native country when the troops were gathering. Captain Vassilieff said that in his opinion the great force would soon begin operations. Already 500,000 Russian troops are said to be on German soil, with reinforcements of more than 300,000 on the march.

Following Up Victory.

PARIS, Aug. 24.—A despatch to the Havas Agency from Vilna, Russia, says an announcement from an authorized source sets forth that the Russians, after their victory at Gumbinnen, successfully pursued the Germans and occupied Interberg, Germany, 30 miles from the Russian frontier, in the direction of Koenigsberg.

Russian Victory Confirmed.

ROME, Aug. 24. — The Russian embassy here yesterday evening confirmed the reported Russian victory at Gumbinnen, in east Prussia, where three German army corps were put to flight, the Germans retreating in great disorder.

It was also stated that further resistance on the part of the Germans is impossible, as Russia is penetrating Germany with a force seven times greater than the Germans can put in the field.

The Russian force, it is said, plans to advance on Berlin by forced marches.

THE COUNCIL TAKES ACTION

Now that the City of Peterborough has fallen in line with other places, and is assuming its responsibility officially in connection with the protection of the families and those dependent on the men who have enlisted, it will be unnecessary for The Review to proceed further with the raising of a fund for the purpose. There are many who need assistance, but we are of opinion of our correspondent "Reader" that it should not take the form of "charity." It is the duty of the city to look after the ones left at home without any solicitation. We, therefore, will hand back to those who contributed to The Review fund their donations, if they so desire, and in the event of their not calling for same we will hand it over to the council to be disposed of as originally intended. While somewhat dilatory in assuming the responsibility we are pleased, however, to see the council finally take hold of the matter.

DISPOSITION OF GERMAN FORCES

Paris Announces Mission of French and English is to Hold Attention of German Army in Belgium While Russians Pursue Their Successes in the East

Canadian Press Despatch.

Rotterdam, Aug. 24—According to the best information obtainable here, the disposition of the German forces in Belgium is as follows: The right flank, occupying the entire territory immediately south of Antwerp, is moving southwest in the direction of Lille.

A second force is moving on Mauberge, 50 miles southeast of Lille, in the department of Nord, and a third is occupied with the reduction of the Namur forts, which consist of nine defences of steel and concrete surrounding the city.

It is estimated that these three columns comprise nearly a quarter million men.

The main northern German army is advancing slowly, with its front extended from Givet, France, to Diedenhofen, in Lorraine. The French defences from La Fere to Rheims are thought to be the objective of this army, which is believed to number 300,000 men. The main body to the south is directing its efforts upon the Verdun-Nancy line of defences and now occupies Strassburg.

Travellers returning here from Germany say troop movements in the western part of the empire have subsided considerably and mobilization evidently has been achieved.

Paris, Aug. 24.—The following official announcement was made here to-day: "A great battle between the greater part of the forces of England and France against the bulk of the German army continues to-day.

The mission of the English and French is to hold virtually the entire German army in Belgium, while our Russian allies pursue their successes in the east."

EIGHTEEN RECRUITS DEPARTED

Third Party of Battery Men Off to Cobourg

Eighteen recruits for the 24th Battery C.F.A., left the G.T.R. depot, Saturday night, to join the force at Cobourg. As on other occasions during the week, when the volunteers left the city, enthusiastic crowds lined the streets and congregated at the station to cheer the boys.

The Battery recruits leaving Saturday night were escorted to the station by the regimental band and Temple band.

Just before the train pulled out, Adjutant McElhiney addressed the crowd and volunteers saying that Peterboro was proud of the men who had volunteered their services and that those left behind would ever think and prayer for their welfare.

The volunteers who entrained were: P. Brault, A. Legrose, J. McCormick, R. H. Muir, P. Toohar, B. W. Stevens, W. A. Banford, A. Hudson, F. Steele, H. Steele, G. Comeloy, E. Simmons, B. W. Sloan, S. T. Luther, B. W. Lang, W. Ireland, G. Findlay and D. Evans.

The Battery volunteers now number sixty-two.

After More Recruits.

Sergt.-Major Guerin, of the 24th Battery, C. F. A., returned from Cobourg this morning and wants 15 more recruits.

The men will leave for Cobourg to-night.

TSING TAU IS BOMBARDED BY THE JAPANESE

Public Opinion Gives Approval of War

REGRET IS EXPRESSED

Canadian Press Despatch.

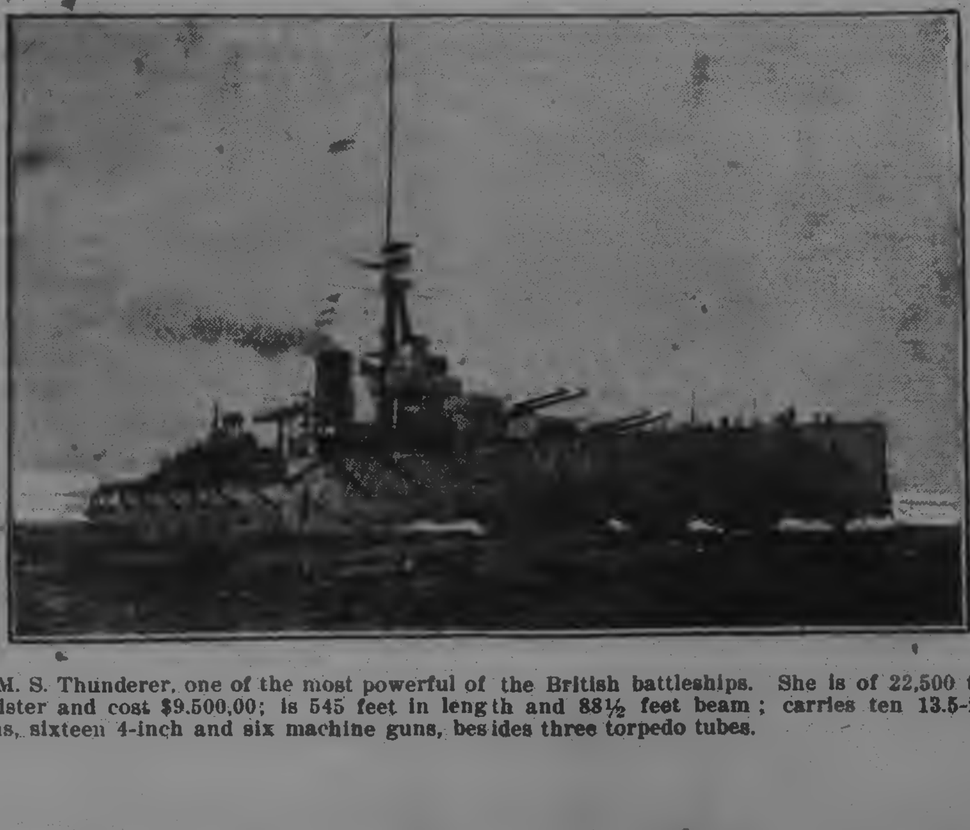
Tokio, Aug. 23.—Yamato, in an extra edition today says that the bombardment of Tsing Tau by the Japanese fleet has commenced. This message was passed by a censor of the navy department.

Tokio, Aug. 24.—Unanimous approval of war which is calmly and dispassionately discussed summarises public opinion. Newspapers express regret over the necessity of hostilities with Germany and urge the public to refrain from exhibiting resentment toward Germans in Japan.

Communication between Japan and China has been severed for twenty-four hours.

DREYFUS' SON PROMOTED.

Paris, Aug. 24.—The son of Major Dreyfuss, who was exonerated on a charge of treason in 1906, has been promoted to the rank of sergeant for heroic conduct on the field of battle at the taking of Muelhausen.



H. M. S. Thunderer, one of the most powerful of the British battleships. She is of 22,500 tons register and cost $9,500,00; is 545 feet in length and 88½ feet beam; carries ten 13.5-inch guns, sixteen 4-inch and six machine guns, besides three torpedo tubes.

SAYS WAR WAS THE WORK OF THE GERMAN PEOPLE

Have Been Made to Believe the Germanic Race is Superior to all Others and Should Dominate the Universe — Emperor Would Have Compromised His Crown Had he Tried to Resist

Canadian Press Despatch.

Paris, Aug. 24.—Abbe Wetteire, a former member of the Reichstag, writing from Alsace for a morning paper says it is a mistake to believe that the war was the work of either Emperor William or German officialdom. "It is," he says, "the will of the people of every degree, who have been made to believe that the Germanic race is superior to all others and ought to dominate the universe.

The Emperor would have compromised his crown if he had tried to resist popular movement."

"MY MAN TURPIN."

Lieut. Thos. J. Turpin has been appointed to the staff of he First Canadian Contingent. "Dick" has already seen service in the South African war, and was mentioned in the despatches for his conspicuous bravery, Col. Sam Hughes referring to him as "My Man Turpin."—Cobourg Sentinel-Star.

PETERBOROUGH, MONDAY, AUGUST 24, 1914

ITALY IN TROUBLE.

REPORTS from Italy show that it is every day becoming more difficult for that country to maintain its neutrality. Italian hatred for Austria is being manifested by anti-German demonstrations throughout Italy, and heavy pressure is being brought to bear on the Government to demand explanation for the massing of Austrian troops on the Italian frontier. Such demand would be preliminary to a declaration of war between the two countries. This is expected to come in the near future, since indications show that the war party is gaining ascendancy. In Messina shop-keepers refused to sell food to Germans.

ORGANIZATION IN GERMANY.

THE GERMANS, says Dr. Swanson in the Montreal Journal of Commerce, have shown remarkable capacity both for organization and for being organized. In fact, with them organization is a virtue which has been so developed that critics have termed it one of the chief vices of Germany. It has undoubtedly taken from the German something of self-reliance, initiative, and aggressiveness; and these defects may very well prove the rock upon which the German army will split in the present struggle. On the other hand, the capacity for organization, which is the chief characteristic of the Germans, makes for team work, for hitting power, and for systematic action. It has been said that the German boy, almost from the first day he goes to school, can mark out his future career and estimate his earning capacity from youth to old age, when he finally retires to the seclusion of the chimney corner and contentedly philosophizes on life. This also explains in great measure the contentment of the German under the rule of the military caste. Everything is provided for him; he does not need to worry about his future as in the individualistic societies of England, the United States and other Anglo-Saxon countries.

Germany's marvellous commercial and industrial expansion dates from 1870 when Germany as an empire was consolidated. The sense of nationality, which had been kindled in each German's breast, proved a mighty force for impelling the people to as great achievements in industry and commerce as they had secured in war. The huge indemnity of $1,000,000,000 which was exacted from France also explains in part the impetus which was given to German trade. But above and beyond all that, Germany has owed her success to the development of electrical power, and the great advances made in the field of chemistry. In these two particular lines, German education and German system have made for success. The early development of German trade was much less in the direction of foreign competition than of home enterprise. Between 1880 and 1890 the increase in the production of pig iron was nearly 5,500,000 tons, but more than two-thirds of this increased output found its market within the German frontiers. Even in the chemical industry, the home market grew faster than the foreign, and this is true of other enterprises also.

At first, it was undoubtedly true that Germany's progress was due to the fact that her cheap labour, her systematic training, and her cheap capital secured at the expense of France resulted in an enormous output of cheap products where quality was conspicuous by its absence. "Cheap and nasty" were epithets applied to German products, not by envious foreigners, but by the German representative at the Philadelphia Celebration in 1876. Cheap labour and the cheap imitation of high-class goods that drove the old high-class German handicraft goods out of competition. But cheapness laid the foundation of Germany's foreign business. Even today Germany has been able to retain certain lines of home trade only by imitation of English goods in an inferior quality.

The domestic business was developed not only by the methods already outlined, but by the improvements of her railways and water transportation. Germany took over the railways after the Franco-Prussian war and developed them rapidly. It is true that this rapid development may be attributed in part to well organized military requirements; but in the main, the state governments took the railways in hand from economic motives so that with few and unimportant exceptions all the German railways are state-owned. A large amount of public capital has been invested in them. Bismarck originally attempted to secure railway administration direct by the empire, but large South German States declined to accede to this project, chiefly for financial reasons, and the proposal was abandoned.

The farmers of Prussia showed much anxiety over the canal policy of the state. The opening of the waterways was intended to facilitate communication between the agricultural east and the industrial west; but the farmers feared the canals would facilitate the introduction, and popularize in the east cheap foreign agricultural produce. This quarrel even developed into an estrangement between the Emperor and the feudal landlords and aristocrats, but in the end the will of the Emperor prevailed. Thus it may be said that Germany's industrial progress has been due to the capacity of the German people to submit to organization in the first place; and beyond that to her cheap labour, and the indemnity secured from France, and also the enlightened paternalism of the empire in providing the people with an efficient and cheap means of transportation and communication.

SUNDAY WAR EXTRAS.

THE REVIEW has received a circular from the General Secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance, relating to the issuance of Sunday War Extras. Unfortunately, the document is not dated, but from the reprinted correspondence we should judge that it dealt with events up to August 12th. We are under the impression that Rev. Mr. Rochester, the secretary, should have shown more industry in gathering data, for in some particulars he shows considerable ignorance of the situation. In the first place, he did not find out how many papers did issue a Sunday extra. The Toronto World issued one. The Montreal Star, we understand, issued one, for which there was no charge. We are also under the impression that the Hamilton Spectator and London Advertiser issued Sunday Extras, but only after an incessant series of telephone calls.

Then, as to the matter in the extras, Mr. Rochester knows apparently nothing about the business of providing it. In such a war extra, to fill up pages, as in all extras issued, there is necessarily a reprint of matter, including advertisements, that has already appeared. The advertisements are usually carried gratis. The news calling for an extra is inserted prominently in place of less important matter that has appeared, so that, as far as "promiscuous information, advertising, old reports" are concerned, they are quite justifiable.

As to the main point or principle regarding the issuance of the Sunday Extras, we are opposed to them, except in cases of the most urgent necessity, such as a national crisis. Even then they should not be issued if they can be avoided, be we think the history of Canadian newspapers shows that they have judiciously interpreted the liberty to issue such an edition.

For some papers, the present occasion likely saw the first Sunday edition in their history. If the matter is still left to their good judgment, we think the privilege will not be abused. Certainly it has not been misused in the past. The sentiment of the Canadian people is to keep Sunday a day of rest, possibly not to the rule of thumb that some worthy people would dogmatically lay down, but still the sentiment is against Americanizing Sunday. So far as Sunday Extras are concerned, Rev. Mr. Rochester need not raise any great wind about them, for extras don't pay.

CAN PETERBOROUGH DO IT ?

A NEWS ITEM states that Kingston debentures to the amount of $35,000, recently issued [illegible] extensions, have been sold in New York above par, the price secured being 101¼. The debentures were five per cents.

We desire to draw the attention of the City Council to this item. Under prevailing conditions, it is the duty of this city to proceed with its public works, if at all possible. If there is difficulty in selling city debentures, or if there are any to sell, the New York market at present is singularly propitious. New York owes London large sums of gold, which will likely be transferred to Ottawa, owing to the danger of shipping on the Atlantic. That means that New York has the money for these payments. New York has also money for investment that, usually going to Europe, must now seek other fields. We know that Kingston has some advantages in New York that Peterborough lacks, but the action of Kingstou is worth the serious attention of the City Council at the present juncture, when excuses are being made for not proceeding with the public works outlined.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

MORE than 100,000 British soldiers, infantry, cavalry and artillerymen, together with nearly 500 guns, made up the first expeditionary force sent to the continent to support the French and Belgians. This force is under the command of Field Marshall Sir John French, and ought to be able to do a little damage to the Germans.

Our fellow-citizens in Canada, Australia and New Zealand have been quick to see the peril. "When Britain is at war, we are at war," is their message to us. To them it is unthinkable that Britain should not be at war when the whole existence of her far-flung empire is menaced.

Solidarity of British Empire.

New York Globe.

The war has brought out impressive testimony to the solidarity of the British Empire. It has quieted radical agitation. It has healed gaping wounds in Ireland. It has stilled mutterings in India, from the native population of which are coming expressions of deep-seated loyalty coupled with convincing offers of service. It has elicited tenders of troops from all the colonies. In times of peace the world often wonders how long the heterogeneous nations that make up the Empire upon which the sun never sets will hold together. Never when England is facing an enemy in arms.

Hearst's Yellow Press.

Ottawa Free Press.

No doubt the United States Government will take steps to see that violations of the neutrality laws such as that committed by the San Francisco Examiner in lending assistance to a German cruiser by providing means for its acquiring information are not repeated. Already the American naval authorities have acted, warning other newspapers and press associations on the coast against such action.

The assistance rendered the German ship of war by the San Francisco newspaper is, needless to say, no indication of the sentiment in the United States about the war. The Examiner is one of the Hearst yellow papers, which fact is sufficient explanation of its offence. It may be that its action was the outcome of the natural Hearst longing for sensationalism rather than any particular sympathy in the international struggle. Whatever the cause, such individual violation of the international neutrality is not likely to engender any anti-American feeling in this country.

HOW TO BE HEALTHY

By Walt Mason

Each morn, before eating, I walk seven miles, the journey repeating, in different style, before I eat dinner; and thus, you may see, my health is a winner—just gaze upon me! There is for the glutton but sickness and grief; I never eat mutton or chicken or beef; I never eat puddin' or doughnuts or pie; "it's me for the wooden old turnips," say I! A beet or a punkin will make enough fat; the vitals my trunk in will thrive upon that. I never drink water that hasn't been fried, for cooking will slaughter the microbes inside. I boil it and stew it and strain through a rag, and then I go to it until I've a jag. I do not wear clothing, for duds are a snare; I view them with loathing, and always go bare. I eat in a stable and sleep in a tree. You think health's a fable? Just gaze upon me! I graze with the horses and browse with the kine, and science indorses this method of mine! Oh, ye who are ailing, it's useless to weep! There's one cure unfailing — come, eat with the sheep! There's one man who whistles with joy all the day: I'm living on thistles and carrots and hay!

A REPORTER on a Kansas City paper was among those on a relief train that was being rushed to the scene of a railway wreck in Missouri. About the first victim the Kansas City reporter saw was a man sitting in the road with his back to a fence. He had a black eye, his face was somewhat scratched, and his clothes were badly torn—but he was entirely calm.

The reporter jumped to the side of the man against the fence. "How many hurt?" he asked of the prostrate one.

"Haven't heard of anybody being hurt," said the battered person.

"What was the cause of the wreck?"

"Wreck? Haven't heard of any wreck."

Looking For Radium.

The Dominion Government is at present investigating several important possibilities in the Dominion. The occurrence of radium in Canadian rocks is being investigated by the Mines Department. The same department is having an investigation made of iron ore possibilities along Lake Superior and elsewhere. A further investigation is also being made into the possibilities of utilising flax straw for purposes of manufacture.

The importance of discovering radium in paying quantities in the Dominion is realized by the Government. According to a report just published by the Geological Survey Department, radium-bearing minerals have not yet been found in economic quantities. There are a few localities, however, in which such minerals have been discovered in traces or small quantities. Among these places are Madoc, Mamamse on the east shore of Lake Superior, Maisonneuve, Que., Murray Bay, Que., Snowdon, Ont., Villeneuve, Que. More extensive prospects for its valuable ore will be made.

The Government announced last session its intention of granting a bounty of 50 cents per ton of metallic content in iron ore mined in Canada. If it is found that the ore can be mined profitably, this bounty will go into effect. An investigation is under way to ascertain whether it can be so mined or not.

A Montreal firm has under consideration the manufacture of flax straw into binder twine, matting, etc., and the Government will also investigate the possibility of such an industry, and the advisability of granting to it a bounty in its initiatory and infant stage of development.

SPECIAL CORNER FOR AFTER DINNER READERS

A DOZEN YEARS AFTER

A Story of West Point Flirtations

By EUNICE BLAKE

Captain Alexander Ainsworth, after a dozen years' absence from the United States Military academy at West Point, was ordered there as instructor in artillery. He was twenty when he was graduated. Now he was approaching middle life. The day after his arrival, not yet having entered upon his duties, he strolled about, recalling here and there scenes and incidents of his cadet life.

Mounting to old Fort Put, he mused: "What a day that was when I came up here with Jennie! How my heart warmed toward her! I can smell this minute the delicate perfume there was about her. I can feel the silken softness of her sleeve, the sweet touch of her fingers when mine came in contact with them. Those beautiful blue eyes! How confidingly, how lovingly they looked into mine!"

Descending, he crossed the plain and soon found himself on Flirtation walk. Again he mused: "It was right here in this little recess when with Belle I stopped to tell her that I loved her. She knew what was coming and looked out on the river and the hills beyond, waiting for me to speak. I told her that, though we had met but a week before, I had come to love her with an unquenchable flame. I remember that at the time the word unquenchable seemed to me very well chosen. I was then a yearling with nearly three years of study before me. What mattered it? We were in the summer encampment with little to do but make love to the girls who had sprung up all over the Point like daisies in the sweet springtime. In September they vanished, and we were again grinding away at our books."

He returned to the plain and strolled past the monument to the West Point graduates who had fallen in the war and, standing on the declivity directly north of it, looked out upon that view up the Hudson river, as beautiful if not more beautiful than any in America.

"It was right here that I stood with Alice Ward on that moonlight night of the day I graduated. My cadet days were over, and I was an officer in the army. But the boy had not yet all got out of me. I had been sitting on the porch of the hotel with Alice. There were a dozen other couples there, and to escape the clatter of tongues I proposed a walk in the moonlight. We came here and stood looking out on this very view, though then instead of flashing in the sun it was mellowed by moonlight. I should have known better this time. I was of age. I did know better, but I failed to act on that knowledge. I drew her to me and kissed her."

The blood of shame mounted to his cheek when he remembered that he had told her she was the only girl he had ever loved.

"But," he added, "though I did not know it at the time, it was the truth."

He turned away from the scene before him, taking the path that led around by the officers' quarters. On the way he met a lady with a boy five or six years old, the child running about chattering to his mother. The lady was the wife of one stationed at the Point and, recognizing an officer by his uniform, bowed to him. He doffed his hat and said:

"I presume, madam, you are one of our army family here?"

"I am."

"I have just arrived after an absence of twelve years."

"You are Captain Ainsworth?"

"I am."

"I have heard of your coming. We keep posted on the changes as they occur. You relieve Lieutenant Waters, I believe?"

"I do."

"Does the Point look the same to you as when you left it?"

"West Point can never change, though its buildings may. I have been visiting old haunts."

"Indeed!"

"Yes. I first visited Fort Put. I remembered being up there once with a very lovely girl."

"She was"—

"Her name was Jennie— Upon my word, my memory is getting shaky!"

"Was it Marston?"

"Marston! Certainly! How names do fail us when we try to recall them! Did you know her?"

"She has always been an intimate friend of mine."

"Is she married?" asked Ainsworth, assuming an anxious look.

"Oh, yes; she's married, but it required some time for her to get over that visit to Fort Put!"

"You don't mean it! That was the episode of my life. But—I was nothing but a plebe."

"Jennie was very young too. She is happily married now."

"She must be an intimate friend of yours."

"My husband accuses me of loving her more than him."

"You are"—

"I was Jennie Marston. I am now Mrs. Farnum."

There was a twinkle in her eye. A shamefaced look came over Ainsworth, and he smiled feebly.

"Don't worry about it, captain. These cadets are doing the same thing you boys did a dozen years ago, and cadets will keep on doing it as long as the academy lasts. Come and dine with us this evening. I wish you to meet my husband."

* * * * * * *

A dance for the graduating class and their friends was in progress. Captain Ainsworth was among the onlookers. He stood behind the chair of a lady. A young girl of perhaps sixteen came to her to ask some question and called her auntie. Later in the evening Captain Ainsworth was introduced to the aunt.

"You are not one of our army circle here at West Point, I believe?"

"No, I am a visitor from New York. I came to chaperon my niece. I know how girls enjoy West Point, for I was here when a girl myself. I remember my experiences here with great pleasure—that is, all except one. I met my first disappointment here. A cadet was attentive to me. I listened to his fluttering words. One day he asked me to stroll down Flirtation walk with him. I was persuaded. He stopped at a little nook part way down. He told me"—

"Don't go any further, I beg you," said the captain. "You are the second person I have met since I have returned to the Point whom I asked to be"—

"You are Fred Nolan?"

"No; I am Alec Ainsworth. Aren't you Edith Andrews?"

"No; I'm Belle Harwood."

"Oh!"

"It is only a case of another cadet and another girl. Doubtless there are dozens of proposals on that walk every year. I wonder if any of them ever results in marriage?"

One bright moonlight night Captain Ainsworth and a party of his friends were trying by the uncertain light to read on the monument on the northern end of the plain at West Point the names of officers who were killed in the war between the states. Several others came up, and there was a general introduction.

"I am looking," said a lady to Captain Ainsworth, "for the name of my cousin who was killed at Antietam."

The captain started. He had heard that voice before and had never forgotten it. He told the lady that if she would give him the officer's name he would try to find it for her, but when she told him he exclaimed:

"He was in my class. You can't see the letters at night, for they are in shadow. Tomorrow you will find the name without any trouble."

When the others passed on Captain Ainsworth and this lady lingered.

"The view from a little farther this way," he said, moving northward, "is beautiful."

She went with him, and they stood side by side looking up the river.

"I remember," said the captain, showing emotion in his voice, "standing on this very spot twelve years ago, when I was a cadet, with a lovely girl who was a visitor here. The scenery was the same as it is now and was lighted, as now, by the moon. I had just passed from cadet to officer and was to leave West Point the next day.

"I had passed four years in the academy and every summer had taken on a new love. In passing from cadet to lieutenant I had my last affair of the heart, and though I was not aware of it I was taking on a love that I would never be able to throw off. Under the impression that it was a passing affair like the others I failed during the following few months even to write to the girl in question, assuming that she considered it, as I did, a mere West Point flirtation. When I learned that I had met the only girl I would ever love it was too late. I dared not reopen the matter seriously with one I had so shamefully neglected."

Doubtless this was the only truth the captain had ever spoken on the subject in question, though after his graduation he had told no more lies.

"I, too," said the lady beside him, "had a similar experience. My cousin being a cadet, I came with others of our family nearly every summer while he was at the academy. I soon learned what meaning to attach to an avowal of love from a cadet. What it is now I don't know; then it was one of his privileges which were not considered binding.

"The last summer I came here I received a proposal from one of the graduating class. At the time I considered it one of those West Point affairs of flirtation rather than of the heart. I never expected to hear again from the cadet, who went to a post in the far west, and I never did. But I admit that I found, like you, that for once in my West Point experience I had flown too near the candle. My wings had been singed. I have never wed."

There was silence for a time, after which Captain Ainsworth spoke:

"Since it was the man's part, not yours, to make good his words you are in no way to blame. If he is excusable it is that, though he had no right to play with edged tools, he was living in a little world where they were played with. Being guilty myself, as he was, I would gladly atone for his fault. Let me stand in his stead and you will make me a happy man."

She not resisting, he drew her to him and kissed her as he had kissed her long before.

And there, a dozen years after a mock love affair on the part of two triflers, on the very same spot and under the same moon, they plighted their troth.

Later it was announced that Captain Ainsworth had met an old flame of his who was visiting West Point, and the couple were to be married in the autumn.

No Chance.

"Why did you quarrel?"

"She wanted me to hold her hand at a crowded reception."

"Why didn't you?"

"I was already holding a plate of salad in one fist and a cup of coffee in the other, with no earthly chance to set anything down."—Kansas City Journal.

Improving His Aim.

"You are going in for polo?"

"Yes, sir," replied the weary looking little man.

"I'm surprised at you."

"I need the practice. I fancy that after I learn to hit that little ball with a long handled mallet as I dash along on a mettlesome pony I may be able to go home and drive a tack without mashing my thumb."—Washington Star.

Couldn't Be Too Particular.

"Here is a woman who wants a divorce because her husband compels her to sleep in a folding bed," said Mrs. Gabb as she laid down the newspaper.

"Well, what about it?" growled Mr. Gabb. "Maybe that was the only way he could shut her up."

Culinary Notes

Peach and Rice Meringue.

Put rice on the fire in a saucepan of cold water. Stir occasionally while it is heating. Let boil five minutes; then drain in a sieve and pass cold water from the faucet through it. This is called blanched rice. Now cook a cupful of blanched rice and salt in three cupfuls of milk until tender and dry, add three egg yolks, one-quarter cupful each of butter, sugar and whipped cream. Make a border of rice on a serving dish that will stand the heat of the oven. Surround this with halves of peaches (fresh or canned), with skins removed. Inside the border place sliced peaches and rice in layers, sprinkling the peaches with sugar and giving the whole a dome shape. Cover with meringue, dust with sugar and set in oven about ten minutes.

Huckleberry Muffins.

To make these take two cupfuls of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, a cupful of milk, an egg, a teaspoonful of salt, a tablespoonful of sugar, a tablespoonful of butter and a cupful of huckleberries. Sift the flour, baking powder, salt and sugar into a bowl; add the milk slowly, the well beaten egg and melted butter; mix well and add the huckleberries, which have been carefully picked over. Brush muffin tins with lard, put a spoonful of the mixture in each and bake thirty minutes in a moderate oven.

The After Meal Rest.

One should rest after meals if it is at all possible for a quarter of an hour at least. This is especially necessary after the chief meal.

Many people are addicted to the short nap after dinner, which is a good habit if the sleep is only a short one. But if the sleep is of two hours' duration it is decidedly bad for both digestion and health.

Baked Asparagus Tips.

Boil asparagus tips in salted water until tender. Have ready some slices of buttered toast. Arrange the asparagus in small mounds on the toast, sprinkle with buttered breadcrumbs and a little grated cheese and set in hot oven for five or eight minutes, just long enough to get perfectly hot. Pour over dish, just before serving, a little hot cream.

The budden bearer of the family isn't always the profit sharer either.

JAPAN AT WAR

Operations Against Germany Ordered on Land and Sea.

Austrian Government Decides Not to Enter Into Hostilities in Far East and Orders Warship at Kiao-Chau to Disarm---German Ambassador is Given His Passports.

TOKIO, Aug. 24. — The Emperor of Japan yesterday declared war upon Germany at six o'clock p.m. (Japanese time).

This action was taken at the expiration of the time limit of Japan's ultimatum to Germany demanding the surrender of Kiao-Chau.

The Japanese Government has ordered the beginning of operations on land and sea.

The German Ambassador was handed his passports here yesterday, and it was learned that the Japanese Ambassador in Berlin was accorded similar treatment.

The proclamation of the Emperor sent a thrill through the country. Japan's entrance upon the fulfilment of her obligations to her ally, Great Britain, responds to the popular will from one end to the other. Count Von Rex, the German Ambassador in Tokio, has been handed his passports. He will probably go to the United States. The United States Ambassador will represent Germany.

Premier Okuma has requested the Japanese people to be especially considerate of German residents. Japan has no hatred against these Germans, who lives and property are protected by law.

An Imperial ordinance gives German merchantmen until September 5th to discharge their cargoes and sail away safely under the protection of passports.

Governor Is Defiant.

TSING-TAU, China, Aug. 24.—The Governor of Kiao-Chau, Meyer Waldeck, has issued a proclamation, saying:—

"If the enemy wishes Tsing-Tau he must come and take it. He will find us at our post. We are well prepared to receive the enemy."

Austrian Warship Disarms.

LONDON, Aug. 24. — The British official press bureau makes the following announcement: "Orders have been issued by the Austro-Hungarian Government to the cruiser Kaiserin Elizabeth, lying in Kiao-Chau harbor, to disarm, and the crew proceed to Tien-Tsin."

A TRADE WAR

British Merchants Boycott German and Austrian Goods

LONDON, Aug. 24.—A bitter commercial war against Germany and Austria has been inaugurated in England. It has the loyal support of the press and the public.

The London Chamber of Commerce committee held a private meeting yesterday to discuss this anti-German trade campaign. It calls the attention of manufacturers to the following lines which Germans sell heavily in England: Electrical appliances and apparatus, iron and steel, wire, stone and earthenware, chinaware, cutlery, hollow ware, cotton hosiery, woolen and worsted piece goods, cotton prints, furniture, leather, gloves and boots and shoes. It is estimated that $12,000,000 worth of German dynamo and motors are sold annually in British territory.

The Board of Trade has arranged for the suspension of German and Austrian patents in England, wherever manufacturers can make use of them in the public interest.

PROROGATION OF THE HOUSE

Speech From Throne Thanks Parliament for Prompt Action

OTTAWA, Aug. 24. — His Royal Highness the Governor-General prorogued Parliament Saturday afternoon in a brief speech in which he commended the legislation which had been so promptly passed and expressed his hope that a favorable and honorable issue would be found for the war in which the Empire was now engaged.

The House had an hour's wait yesterday afternoon before being summoned by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to the Senate Chamber, and some excellent speeches were delivered by members of both parties.

Sir George Foster, in closing referred eloquently to the fact that several members of Parliament were leaving Saturday for the front.

The speech from the throne proroguing Parliament, was as follows:

"Hon. gentlemen of the Senate:

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons:—

"I thank you for the prompt and effective consideration which you have given to measures necessary for assuring the defence of the country, for conserving the interests of our people, and for maintaining the integrity of the Empire in the present emergency. It is my fervent hope and my confident anticipation that these measures will prove adequate in every way for the great purposes which they are designed to fulfil.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

"I thank you in His Majesty's name for the liberal provision which you have made for the needs of the country in the grave conditions which have arisen through the outbreak of war.

"Hon. gentlemen of the Senate:

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

"In relieving you for the first time from the important and responsible duties to which you were summoned so suddenly and unexpectedly, I commend to the Divine protection the people of this Dominion in the firm trust that the future will continually grow brighter and that there will be a favorable and honorable issue from the war in which the Empire is now involved."

LIEGE FORTS HOLD OUT.

Heroic Commandant Blows Up Chaudefontaine and Perishes.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—A despatch to the Havas Agency from Ostend says the Belgian Minister of Justice declared yesterday that all the forts at Liege and Namur were still in the hands of the Belgians.

A Paris War Office statement says: "The forts at Liege still hold Fort Chaudefontaine has been the scene of an act of heroism which affirms once more the brilliant valor of the Belgian army. The fort, which commands the railroad to Aix-la-Chapelle, Vergiers and the tunnel to Chaudefontaine was subjected to a continual and extremely violent bombardment. When it was reduced to a mere heaps of ruins, and Major Nameche, the commanding officer, judged that further resistance was impossible, he blocked up the tunnel by running several locomotives into each other and set fire to the fuses leading to the mines surrounding the fort.

"His mission then accomplished, Major Nameche, determined that the German flag should not fly even over the ruins of his fort, blew up the powder magazine and perished."

MOWED DOWN THEIR OWN MEN.

German Disaster at Muhlhausen a Tragedy Says Roman Paper.

ROME, Aug. 24.—(Via Paris.)—The Tribuna Saturday published a telegram from a correspondent at the front, who says that the German retreat from Muhlhausen, under the infernal fire of the French artillery, became a tragedy.

It was impossible for the Germans to see whence this fire came.

The Istein forts on the Rhine, the correspondent continues, seeing a body of German troops approaching in the night, mistook them for French and commenced firing on them.

The mistake was not discovered until dawn. The German cannon had thundered all night long, making havoc among their own men.

The people of the region evacuated by the Germans came out to welcome the French troops with French flags in their hands, crying at the same time. "To the Rhine, to the Rhine."

AUSTRIANS ROUTED.

Servjan Army Wins Complete Victory Along the Drina.

ROME, Aug. 24.—Telegrams from Nish, the capital of Servia, state that the rout of the Austrians in the battle that for days has been waged along the River Drina, is complete, and that the Austrian army has lost its food, wagons and ammunition in the fight. Forces of Bosnians fired upon the Austrian troops as they retreated and hurled bombs at them.

All Bosnia and Herzegovina are in revolt.

The Provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina formerly were under Turkish rule, but since 1878 have been occupied by Austria. Together they cover 19,570 square miles, with a population of 1,590,000.

Stifled His Reproaches.

There is a touch of savage humor in the old time story of a Spanish pilot captured by Van Noort. Becoming ill, the Spaniard believed that the Dutch wanted to poison him, "and, therefore," it is recorded in the explorers' journal, "we threw him into the sea, leaving him to sink, to the end that he should not ever again reproach us with any treachery."

The Old School.

There aren't enough gentlemen of the old school left to have a class reunion.

Military Substitutes.

Wealthy Belgians pay a little over $300 to substitutes in order to avoid military service.

ALLIES FIGHTING ALMOST THE WHOLE GERMAN ARMY

French War Office Announces That a Huge Battle With a Front Extending From Mons to Luxemburg Frontier is Now Being Waged and Will Last Several Days---Fighting Near Namur.

PARIS, Aug. 24. — The following official announcement was issued last night:—

"A great battle is now in progress along a vast line extending from Mons to the frontier of Luxemburg, a distance of over 100 miles. Our troops, in conjunction with the British, have assumed everywhere the offensive. We are faced by almost the whole German army, both active and reserve.

"The ground, especially on our right, is thickly wooded and difficult. The battle is likely to last several days.

"The enormous extent of the front and the great number of forces involved make it impossible to follow step by step the movements of each of our armies. We must await the result of the first phase of the combat before we can form any conclusion as to the situation. Otherwise we should be giving to the press divergent and contradictory news, since such a battle naturally is made up of actions and reactions which follow and connect in a continuous manner.

"In Vosges the general situation determined us to withdraw our troops from Donot and the Saales Pass. These points were no longer considered of any importance, since we occupied the fortified line, beginning at Grand Couronne de Nancy. Luneville is occupied by the Germans, and at Namur the Germans are making great efforts against the forts, which resist energetically.

Germans Rush Troops to Front.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—Telegraphing from Rozendaal, Holland, the correspondent of the Central News says:—

"There is no doubt that a big battle is now in progress in the neighborhood of Charleroi, Belgium. The Germans are rushing troops in that direction. Only 3,000 troops are left in Brussels, which is more completely isolated than Liege.

"The Germans have occupied all the villages between Louvain and Alost in order that the passage of their main army across Belgium may not be interrupted.

"There are no Germans, except scouting patrols, around Ghent."

A despatch to The Times from Ostend, Belgium, says that the present German line extends from Tamise, near Antwerp, southwest through Puers and Zele, and thence southeast to Gosselies and Charleroi. In the two latter towns there have been skirmishes.

Automobiles who have tried to get through the German lines from or toward Brussels have had little success, some of them having had their cars confiscated or taken apart or their tires cut to pieces. In exchange for the cars seized the Germans have given papers, payable by the French Government, presumably out of the indemnity which the Germans expect to collect.

A Central News despatch from Amsterdam says that a large detachment of German cavalry suffered virtual annihilation in the suburbs of Malines, Belgium, Friday afternoon. They were met suddenly by a squad of Belgians in motor cars, which were armed with machine guns. Most of the Germans were killed. A handful surrendered and were taken prisoners.

Leaving Northern Belgium.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 24.—The correspondent of The Telegraph at Antwerp telegraphs, under yesterday's date, that all of northern Belgium seems to have been evacuated by the Germans.

Up to 10 o'clock Sunday morning, he says, there was no indication of a German advance on Antwerp.

Battle on Waterloo Field.

ANTWERP, Aug. 24.—(via Paris).—A British and German cavalry brigade had a sharp fight Saturday on the battlefield of Waterloo.

FRENCH RETIRE ON NANCY AFTER LOSS AT LUNEVILLE

LONDON, Aug. 24. — In Lorraine it is evident that the French have sustained a severe defeat at the hands of the Germans, for it is admitted that Luneville, a fortified place ten miles inside the French border, is now occupied by the Germans, while the French, presumably under Gen. Joffre, the commander-in-chief, have fallen back on the ring of forts surrounding Nancy.

This is a serious reverse, for the Germans at no time before had obtained such a strong footing in French territory. Luneville is a town of 20,000 inhabitants. Details of the fighting, in which Gen. Joffre was forced to retire, are still awaited with anxiety in Paris and here. The progress of the French troops into Lorraine has been so swift and easy that the news of this reverse has come as a great shock to France.

In Alsace there is no news of any further fighting; presumably the French are holding their own there.

NEUTRAL SHIPS ARE VICTIMS

Are Destroyed by Mines Laid by Germans

LONDON, Aug. 24. — The British Admiralty makes public a report that two Dutch steamers, clearing from Swedish ports, were blown up Saturday by German mines in the Gulf of Finland. It is known that Britain thus far, has laid no mines during the present war, but the Germans continue to indiscriminate scattering of mines in direct contradition of The Hague convention.

"In consequence of this policy," says the War Office bulletin, "neutral ships, whatever their destination, are exposed to the gravest danger. Two Danish vessels, the steamer Maryland and the steamer Droberg, have, within the last twenty-four hours, been destroyed by these deadly engines in the North Sea, while traveling on the ordinary trade routes and a considerable distance from the British coast."

Francis Joseph Dying?

LONDON, Aug. 24.—A Rome despatch to the Exchange Telegram Co. reports that Emperor Francis Joseph is in a grave condition and may die at any moment.

The Austrian Emperor is now in the eighties and has at several times been near to death within the past few years. The assassination of his son, the Archduke Ferdinand, which was the opening incident in the present war, made serious inroads on his health, and the conflagration in Europe has served to intensify the strain.

Canada Now Represented.

In pursuance of the arrangement between Sir George Foster, Minister of Trade and Commerce, and Sir Edward Grey, British Foreign Minister, made in 1912, the British consulate at the following places will now answer inquiries and give information to Canadians wishing to consult them on trade matters: Trieste, Antwerp, Bahia, Rio de Janiero, Valparaiso, Harbin, China, Bogota, Columbia, Quito, Ecuador, Alexandria, Egypt, Genoa, Milan, Mexico City, Amsterdam, Colon and Panama, Lima, Lisbon, Moscow, St. Petersburg, Vladivostock, Barcelona, Madrid, Stockholm, Geneva, Constantinople, Smyrna, Montevideo and Caracas.

Slightly Sarcastic.

An Irishman was showing an English friend round Montreal. "How many people are there here, Pat?" queried the Englishman.

"Oh, about a hundred thousand," said the Irishman.

"Why, I thought there were over half a million?"

"Well, said Pat, "there are—if you count the French."—Canadian Courier.

To Keep Boys on Farm.

By taking steps to inaugurate a series of debates and concerts each year in connection with its social community work, the recently organized Lambton Farmers' Co-operative Association is hopeful of keeping the boys and young men of the county on the farms to a much greater extent than obtains at present.

France Approves Loan.

LONDON, Aug. 24. — The Paris correspondent of the Reuter's Telegram Co., in a despatch, says:—

"A more than favorable impression has been produced here by the decision of the British Government to advance $50,000,000 to Belgium."

The Temps says: "England has replied nobly to Germany's brutal action in exacting a levy on the City of Brussels and the Province of Liege. One more bond thus unite in close collaboration the armies arrayed against German piracy. Belgium, France and England are shedding their blood for the welfare of all. England adds her gold."

Dutch May Be Involved.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 24. — The Netherlands now believe that invasion by the Germans is a certainty. German cavalry in force have been sighted three miles from the Dutch frontier, near Esschen, which is 18 miles north of Antwerp.

The Dutch Government has given fresh assurance to the British and French Governments that it will defend its neutrality vigorously. This statement was called forth by the presence of large bodies of German troops on the Dutch frontier near Antwerp.

All men are supposed to be upright, but a plumb and line generally shows that they bend from the perpendicular.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

RELIEF NOT CHARITY.

Editor Review,

Sir.—Almost all the cities, towns and villages in Canada have formed relief funds through their municipal councils which are the only official and recognized representatives of all the people. These funds are made up of public subscriptions and municipal grants. These will be supplemented by the Dominion Government. No doubt the relief work will be carried out in the proper spirit. It is not charity and must not be called charity. Neither the people receiving nor those offering relief will allow any such unworthy impression to be given. Peterborough through its council has now fallen into line and no doubt will open the fund for popular subscriptions at once. The government will look after the troops. It is for us to look after those left behind and we will find plenty to do since the upset to work and wages has been far-reaching. The one fact before us today is that unusual conditions call for unusual measures. No one will shirk his duty and the women with their undertakings have set a good example. But remember that this is for Relief not Charity. The council represents all parties and will do its duty.

Yours,

READER.

ONTARIO DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Editor Review,

Dear Sir,—A number of the women's Institutes in the province responded most liberally to the appeal for funds to supply a hospital ship to the Imperial Navy. Many others are prepared to give money donations and to supply articles of clothing, etc., to the soldiers. In view of the fact that many inquiries have been made of the Department, we have circularized the Institutes giving them authority to send such proportion of the funds on hand as they can spare to the Red Cross Society. They have also been asked to do their part in collecting funds and supplying the articles listed below. Circulars have been sent only to the officers and we are asking the press of the province to give publicity to the appeal.

List of Requirements.

3000 pillows, sizes, 18 in. by 30 in., 16 in. by 24 in., 16 in. by 16 in., 14 in. by 16 in., and slips for the same.

3000 to 4000 flannel shirts, sizes 15 to 17½, made of medium weight, grey or khaki colour.

10,000 to 12,000 handkerchiefs, size 18 in. by 18 in. Made of cheese cloth which should be washed before made up.

2,000 to 3,000 cholera belts. 12 in. wide and 34 in. to 44 in. long. To be made of ordinary yarn, either red or grey, two inches of each end to be knitted with steel needles, and centre eight inches to be knitted with bone needles.

6,000 to 7,000 pairs of socks, grey preferred.

5,000 "Housewives" or "Mending Kits." Outside to be made of coarse linen, chints, cretonne, duck, or other smooth, strong material. Size 5½ in. by 13 in. Interior to be lined with shaker flannel or any fine woollen material. Interior to contain two small pockets one at end and one in centre. Also attach two loose squares, stitched loosely, for pins and needles, etc. Each should contain safety pins, sewing and darning needles, small straight scissors, buttons (ordinary shirt and bachelor), black darning wool, black and white linen thread, small package of court plaster and foot ease powder, if possible. Sew tape on end for ties.

Money donations as well as supplies should be addressed to the Treasurer of the Red Cross Society, 56 King St. East, Toronto.

Yours very truly,

GEO. A. PUTMAN,

Superintendent of Women's Institutes.

OTTAWA EXHIBITION

Mobilization of the different units of the Overseas Contingent at Lansdown Park, Ottawa, has given opportunity for those pessimistically inclined to promote a rumor that the big Central Canada Exhibition billed to take place September 11th to 19th was to be cancelled.

The Directors of the Ottawa Exhibition Association wish to state most emphatically that the Central Canada Fair is an annual event under no consideration to be called off. Even if the entire country is in a state of siege the Fair will be held this year upon the dates as advertised.

As a favor to the Militia Department Lansdown Park was loaned for the mobilization of the different units as a means of assistance in the preparation of defence for the country, with the understanding strongly stipulated that by September 1st every inch of space now occupied is to be vacated so as to allow full preparations for the big fair to be made and that will positively be held this year.

Parties residing outside Ottawa wishing to take advantage of the cheap ticket (six for one dollar) may be accommodated by sending in their order enclosing the amount by mail. All communications should be addressed to Mr. E. McMahon, Central Canada Exhibition Offices, 26 Sparks Street, Ottawa, Can.

RAILWAY APPOINTMENT

Mr. Morley Donaldson, vice-president and general manager ,announces the appointment of Mr. Joseph Billingham as superintendent of motive power, Grand Trunk Pacific railway, vice Mr. G. W. Robb, resigned.

Mr. Billingham has had wide experience. He was born in England and served his apprenticeship there, occupying an important position with the London & Western railway. He was afterwards master mechanic of the Burlington & Ohio railroad. He joined the Galena Signal Oil Co. as European manager, but returned to this continent as superintendent of works for the American Locomotive company, Schenectady.

Mr. Billingham will make his headquarters at Transcona, the new town just east of Winnipeg, where the Grand Trunk Pacific has built its great machine shops, which represent the last word in work of this kind, being equipped with the most modern machinery that could be procured.

TO TEACH AGRICULTURE.

On Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week Mr. Finn, of the Ontario Agricultural Department, will be at school No. 8, Otonabee, for the purpose of instructing the pupils and farmers of that section along the lines of scientific farming and gardening.

REMAIN CALM AND COMPOSED HELPING THOSE ABOUT US, SHOULD NOT BE ALARMISTS

At [illegible]

At St. John's Anglican Church, on Sunday, Rev. Canon Davidson read a list of the officers and men, connected with St. John's who had volunteered for service and asked for the prayers of the congregation not only for these but also for all who had gone to the front.

At the evening service Canon Davidson, spoke on the subject "Fearless Service." Fear, he said, was one of the commonest enemies of man. In the case of the real, we could be fearless if we controlled ourselves and put our faith in God.

Imaginary fears, we should put out of our minds. We should control ourselves. Soldiers had need of real courage and we also had the need to be composed and calm and to cultivate the quantities of fearlessness, so as to be able to do our own work.

At the present time, a great deal of fear seems to be groundless and we should not discount the future. We should not anticipate but wait till things actually come and deal with them then.

Instead of giving expression to alarm, we should help and encourage those around us by maintaining a calm and composed attitude, thus retaining our own peace of mind.

At All Saints' Church.

Rev. Canon Bryan of Toronto, took the services at All Saints' Anglican Church and at the morning service delivered a sermon, in which he referred to the present European conflict. The puestion often asked, "Why did God permit war ?" was unanswerable he said, but we could look forward with the assurance that some great good would come out of it. His text was Psalm 99, verse 1 :— The Lord reigneth ; let the people tremble ; he sitteth between the cherubims ; let the earth be moved.

BRITAIN FIGHTING FOR PRINCIPLE OF THE CROSS SAYS GEORGE STREET PASTOR

Instead of the sword and cannon, Rev. R. G. Peever, B.D., in his sermon at George Street Methodist Church, last evening, kept the cross before his congregation. His subject was the call of the Empire and the call of God.

He said it was the principle of the Cross for which Britain was now fighting. In speaking of a visit to the historic battlefield of Waterloo and the thoughts which had come to his mind at that time, the preacher said that if they fight the same battle again and as we as an Empire, tarry in our deepest Gethsemane, it may be that God is leading us to a higher Calvary and that universal peace will follow.

This was the day of the struggle of the Motherland — the hour of need. It was the hour when she sought to uphold her honor. Among other things, the preacher referred to the message of Earl Kitchener, to the British soldiers, asking them to remember that the honor of the British Army depended upon the individual honor.

It was honor, he pointed out, that had not been cheaply bought.

To uphold that honor she had stood by the treaty with Belgium. British statesmen had tried to find a way out, without having to sacrifice that honor, but there was no way out.

If such was so in the life of the nation, ought it not to be so in the individual life ?

Drowned While Washing at Bank of River

Kenora, Aug. 24.—A sad drowning accident, in which Mrs. H. E. Marsh, of Roland, Manitoba, was the victim, occurred Saturday afternoon, a mile and a quarter south of Minaki. The deceased lady, who had been spending the season with her son, Mr. W. E. Marsh, at his summer home on Onion Island, Winnipeg River, was alone when the accident occurred. An hour or so previous she had intimated to her son, who was leaving camp for a little while, that she proposed to wash out some blankets during his absence, and it is supposed that while doing this she lost her balance and slipped into the river. Mr. Marsh, on his return, noticed the blankets floating near the shore, and, getting no response to his calls to his mother, was a few minutes later shocked to see her body in the water a few yards distant. Mrs. Marsh had earlier in the day participated in a dinner given by the campers on the island, and was preparing to leave for home the following day. She was in her 68th year. She was the widow of the late Rev. H. E. Marsh, once a well-known Methodist minister in Ontario. The remains arrived here yesterday morning and will be taken to Campbellford, Ont., for interment.

PONTIFICAL HIGH MASS WILL BE CELEBRATED

At St. Peter's Cathedral and Sacred Heart Church

On Wednesday morning at 8 o'clock, in St. Peter's cathedral, His Lordship Bishop O'Brien, D.D., will celebrate solemn pontifical high mass for the repose of the soul of the late Pope Pius X. On Thursday morning at 7 o'clock a requiem high mass will be sung at the Church of the Sacred Heart. At both churches yesterday the theme of the sermon was the life of the late sovereign pontiff and his work.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES

Wednesday morning at 9.30 sharp the members of the Boys Department will go on a hike and fishing trip up the canal. Every member is requested to be at the building sharp on time. Bring a lunch and a chum.

The employed boys will meet at the building Wednesday evening at 7.30 to organize an athletic club. A large turn out of the Employed Boys Club is asked for.

Saturday, September 5th, will be Flower Day. Boys will carry flowers to the sick of the city. The boys are asked to make arrangements for their flowers as soon as possible.

Two members of the boys department left with the 57th for the front Saturday, Charlie Mongour and Harold Saunders, will be missed very much by the boys, but we know that they will give a good account of themselves, as they are physically fit for the work that is before them. Fifteen senior members have also left for the front.

MAJOR CROFOOT

The Grand Promoter Bestows His Favor Upon a Creditor

By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.]

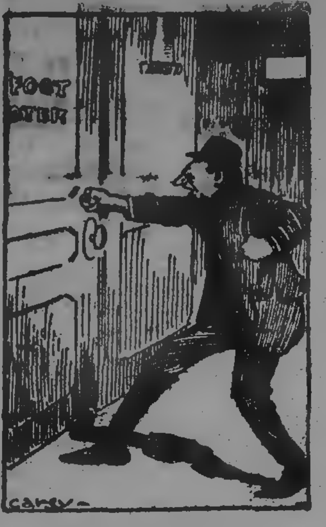
MAJOR CROFOOT sat in his office smoking the stub of a cigar. Footsteps came down the hall and stopped at his door, and without knocking in walked a man.

It was the chiropodist from the fourth floor with a bill of $2 for services rendered. He explained that he would not have called except that he had a large payment to make and needed the two.

"It is all right—all right, my dear man!" interrupted the grand promoter in his cheerful way. "I had four corns on my feet and you removed them at 50 cents apiece. The bill is perfectly correct. Permit me to file it away among my archives."

"You will pay the bill, I hope," ventured the chiropodist.

"Aye! I will pay it ten thousand times over. He who trusts my financial integrity is a friend. Three months ago, when I had those corns removed, I had no business. I was simply Major Crofoot, hard up, discouraged and ready to lay down my bundle. Today I am Major Crofoot, grand promoter, organizer and originator of some of the most gigantic schemes the financial world has ever known. Think of it, sir!"



HE POUNDED ON THE DOOR.

"I—I'm thinking of my $2," replied the man.

"I thought I had taken in all my friends," continued the major, "but I discover that I have left you out. You and your bill had slipped my mind. However, I congratulate you—con-grat-u-late you with all my heart. In a month you will be drawing your check for half a million dollars."

"I've got to have that $2 today, major," said the chiropodist.

"And now to hear what I've got—my newest, latest and best idea," continued the promoter. "You've heard of the musical attachments to a piano. There are three or four of them. I was asked to form a trust, but after looking them over I saw that I could do better. In twenty-four hours I had figured it out. I simply enlarged upon the attachment idea and brought electricity to my aid. I have struck it, sir. I have a scheme which will revolutionize the world. Here's our piano in the parlor and our electric battery in the cellar below it. We run our wires where we will, and each wire produces a different tune on the keys of the piano. We don't get music on set occasions, but it begins at daylight and lasts right through till the last of the family has gone to bed.

"Do you see the possibilities? Any family able to rent a piano at $3 a month can have the music for eighteen hours per day free of cost."

"If I wasn't hard up I shouldn't ask you for the $2," said the chiropodist.

"And now you see the idea," continued the major. "We capitalize at $3,000,000. I'll take the presidency, of course, and right here I appoint you treasurer and guarantee a salary of $15,000 a year. I'll take you in on the ground floor, but you must deposit something. Leave me $25 at least."

"I—I couldn't leave 15 cents."

"My dear man, don't let this stupendous enterprise get away from you. Go pawn your hat—sell your shirt—anything. Remember, we run wires from the piano to every part of the house. Even as the cook mashes the potatoes or rolls out the pie crust we get 'Old Black Joe' or 'The Little Green Grave' to cheer and soften the family upstairs. It's the idea of the century. I'll even carry $250,000 worth of stock for you, and you can take it up later on. Come in again—come in tomorrow. I shall finish the articles of incorporation today"—

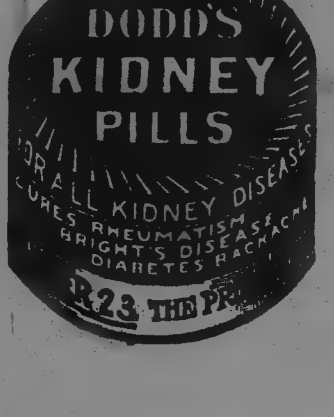
And the chiropodist was on the other side of the door. As soon as he could think he pounded on the door with his fist.

"Major Crofoot!"

No response.

"Say, you slick old duffer, I want those $2!"

But the golden opportunity had passed.



PLEASANT WORK

I'd be the last one in the world to depreciate womanly avocations such as crocheting and the like. But I do say this: that interest in the outdoor sports at this present time is just as womanly and a lot more profitable than shaking the daylights out of a knitting needle. There's money to be made on our Summer Pastime, perhaps as much as a thousand dollars.

It hasn't any particular labor about it either and that's more than you can say concerning knitting, crocheting and a dozen other such things. I know because I've tried most of them.

There's nothing against combining the hard with the easy. For instance, crochet as long as you want to or until the paper comes. Then work out the name in the rebus picture and later on, see which has been more profitable—the knitting or the Pastime. If you're really as careful about not making mistakes in your pictures as you are in your tidies I'll bet on the contest every time. But, of course, that remains with you.

AUNT LUCY.

A NORTHWEST VETERAN.

Sheriff Murphy of Moosomin Has Been 25 Years In Office.

One of the veteran officials of the Northwest, Mr. G. B. Murphy, the sheriff of Moosomin, recently completed a quarter of a century in office. He was appointed sheriff for the judicial district of Eastern Assiniboia by Sir John A. Macdonald's Government in 1889, just one year after the old Northwest Council became defunct and the Territories were granted a Legislative Assembly. Mr. Murphy is a native of Ontario, and previous to his appointment he had carried on business at Qu'Appelle. During the rebellion of 1885 he held a very responsible position as one of the heads of the transport division of Gen. Middleton's army. He kept a diary during the operations, which will no doubt be embodied some day in the archives of the province for the benefit of posterity.

The district of Eastern Assiniboia was as big as a kingdom. It extended from the international boundary on the south to the unorganized territory of Athabaska on the north, and, as a matter of fact, if not of theory, as far north as the North Pole. From east to west it ran from the Manitoba boundary to Qu'Appelle. This was the judicial bailiwick of Mr. Justice (afterwards Chief Justice) Wetmore; and it is not too much to say that Eastern Assiniboia in its crude formative days was under a debt of gratitude to the good fortune which gave its people a fearless and masterful judge, and an honest, capable sheriff. Many long journeys in all kinds of weather, over execrable trails, or no trails at all, have the judge and sheriff taken together in the old "buckboard" days, when the C. P. R. running east and west was the only streak of rust in Eastern Assiniboia. From Yorkton in the north to the international boundary country in the south, judge, bar and sheriff made their way across the plains, holding court in little agricultural halls and sometimes in school houses as the case might be. Besides judicial trips of this nature there were extradition journeys bringing back prisoners from the States, and the many other activities devolving on the sheriff of a new and enormous stretch of country. To tell the tale of Mr. G. B. Murphy's career in the West would be to practically tell the fascinating story of the growth of Saskatchewan from its earliest days as a political community.—Saturday Night.

Exceeding the Speed Limit.

Now that the spotlight has been turned on Calgary, many and divers are the stories being told of lost opportunities and lucky holdings of oil stocks in that city. Here is one that is remarkable enough, and yet has a plausible ring to it.

The chauffeur of a certain gentleman in Calgary had many times put his employer to expense and inconvenience by his speeding propensities. He had been up before the magistrate more times than was healthy for him, and, finally, he was caught exceeding the speed limit on the main street, summoned, and fined fifty dollars and costs or sixty days. He appealed to his employer to extricate him, as he had not the funds to satisfy the fine. The employer refused, the offence had been committed too often. The chauffeur offered as security some oil stock which he held, supposed to be worth some forty odd dollars. His employer said no—positively, and the man went to jail. When the sixty days had elapsed and and he was free, his forty dollars worth of stock had increased in value to something like seventy-five thousand dollars. The first thing he did was to buy an automobile, a good one, and speed down the main street at about fifty miles an hour. He fully expected to be caught and fined, but nothing happened. It's true, that luck invariably arrives in bunches.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 22.—The weather map showed rains in all three provinces and at a few points along the border in both Manitoba and Saskatchewan. They were heavy and harvesting and threshing operations have been delayed.

Trading in options was quiet, while prices show another good gain for the day.

Opening figures for wheat were 3-8c to 1 7-8c higher and closing was with a gain for the day of 2 to 3c 1-8c.

The cash demand for old wheat was good, with little offering, and all for eastern millers. Cash wheat closed 2c to 2¼c higher. Cash flax closed 8c higher, cash oats and barley unchanged.

Inspections Friday 127 cars, against 86 last year. In sight today 125 cars. Included in the inspections were 99 cars new wheat, of which fifty graded as numbers one, two and three northern.

Cash quotations: Wheat (new crop)—No. 1 northern, $1.08; No. 2 northern, $1.08 3-4; No. 3 northern, $1.01½.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 22.—There was no further change in the condition of the local grain market today, but the feeling is very firm with a steady demand for car lots of all lines. The demand for flour continues good and an active trade is doing at firm prices. Winter wheat grades on spot are very scarce, for which there is considerable enquiry. The trade in mill feed is active. Rolled oats firm and fairly active at the recent advance. The market for hay is strong at a further advance of 50c to $1 per ton, owing to the continued good demand and the shortage in the crop. The tone of the butter market is stronger and prices at the country boards today advanced ¼c to ½c per pound. The receipts for the week were 9558 packages, against 15,913 for the same week last year. Cheese was strong under a good demand and prices were firm at the recent advance. Receipts for the week totaled 63,424 boxes, compared with 67,340 for the corresponding week last year. Eggs were stronger and active. Receipts for the week were 5524 cases, against 7717 a year ago. Stocks: Wheat, 1,733,106 bushels; corn, 38,040 bushels; oats, 470,327 bushels; barley, 127,955 bushels; rye, 22,604 bushels; flax, 117,075 bushels; flour, 25,295 sacks.

British Reservists Called.

NEW YORK, Aug. 24.—England on Saturday summoned the total of her army reservists from all over the world. Official notice was received by the British consul-general here to hasten the departure of all British citizens liable to military duty within his district. The order will result in 20,000 men in and near New York City leaving for England at once to enlist under the Union Jack.

When the war started the British ordered only the naval reservists to report. Up to Saturday no haste has been displayed in sending them home. When German stokers and seamen quit a British vessel their places were filled by the naval reservists. Few others were returned to England, and the majority of those who registered here after the call was issued are still here.

Denmark Declares Moratorium.

PARIS, Aug. 24.—Official telegrams from Denmark announce that the Danish Parliament has voted a three months' moratorium, covering all debts except civil law debts and coupons until Oct. 10.

THREE MEN.

And the Poet Brought Amity Into Their Midst.

The well-dressed youth, who earlier in the evening had roused the ire of the three travelers, turned out to be a poet: one of the modern kind. They met him aboard the train shortly after the three elders had recognized one another in the light of the smoking compartment. They were arguing concerning the general merits of Free Trade and Protection, and the merchant was complaining of the laws governing the collection of debts from delinquent debtors, when the poet interrupted:

"See, gentlemen," he said, "you talk to no end whatever. Let me, a poet, having no real place in the scheme of things as you regard it, point out the futility of your discussion. You do not argue—you accuse one another. You, Farmer, complain that the Manufacturer is getting rich at your expense. You protest at the size of his profits and yet you admit you don't know what those profits are. You, Manufacturer, bring counter accusations against the Farmer. Both accuse the Merchant of eating your profits. And you, Middleman, have other complaints against them. You deal in complaints, charges and counter-charges, but not in argument."

"What has a Poet to do with this sort of thing?" grumbled the Merchant, while the other three scowled their approval of his remark.

"Very little," admitted the youth, "except to say that if you, instead of pursuing the course you now pursue, made a study of the relationship which exists between the three of you, if instead of your troubles you considered that all three of you are one—and interdependent for success, one upon the other; and if instead of contemplating always your immediate ends you considered your relation to the nation as a whole—then your discussion would carry you somewhere."

"What do I owe the manufacturer?" demanded the Farmer.

"The right to live in a self-contained, self-reliant nation, capable of making its own necessities, independent of the workmen of foreigners; a country in which, if your son wishes another calling besides farming, he can find it!"

"What do I owe the farmer?" demanded the Manufacturer.

"Your right to exist—your most important raw material, food and renewed vigor to supply the wear and tear of the cities—he buys your goods!"

"What do we owe the merchant?"

"The same you owe the railway builder and the steamship man. He makes exchange possible between you. He assists in directing the movement of the products which between you are turned out."

"And I?" asked the Merchant.

"You. For all your courage, judgment and shrewdness—what could you exchange if these men were not here to produce goods for your counters?"

"Then you," they retorted in chorus, "you are a parasite?"

"Parasite! Rather, a minister to the spirit. You were quarrelling when I came."—Britton Cooke, in Industrial Canada.

Australia's Parliament Buildings.

A new Parliament House is to be built in Canberra, Australia's new capital. The cost will be about five million dollars, and a competition for designs for the new building has been opened. Designs may be delivered to the High Commissioner up to March 31, 1915. Eight prizes are offered, amounting in all to $30,000, the first award being, $6,000. The first competitor will be employed on the initial portion of the building, and probably also in the subsequent stages of construction.

War Courage

MANY a man in Canada, willing to go a-warring across the seas, is unwilling to fight at home---against the shaowy foes of bad times or of business depression.

This is a time in Canada when Canadian business men should fight—fight to capture new trade and to hold old trade. To stop one's advertising is to withdraw a powerful offensive and defensive force, and to expose one's business without a guard.

If the courage of manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers—the generals and captains of trade and industry—fail, the courage of the nation will ebb.

DRAFTSMEN OVERTOOK HAMILTONS AND TYPOS FELL BEFORE THE RED CAPS

The class of ball provided for fans in the absence of the White Caps by the Mercantile League still continues to be fast and close. On Saturday afternoon at Riverside Park two games were staged and the spectators easily got a dime's worth. The first was between the Drafting Room and the Wm. Hamilton teams and till the first of the seventh it appeared as though the tailenders would take a fall out of the C.G.E. representatives.

Len Johnston and German, the opposing heavers, were both hit fairly hard. Excellent support by the Draftsmen enabled the latter to get by and the same item helped Johnston through the first six stanzas. When the Draftsmen came to bat in the first of the seventh, which was the final session, the score read Wm. Hamilton 5, Draftsmen 3. Four hits and a couple of juicy errors made it possible for them to send across four runs, making the total 7. The Wm. Hamilton nine made an effort to get 'em back but it was too big a contract.

The Draftsmen had a big change in their team. Walker their first baseman was unable to play and Harry Corrin who has been tending left garden was sent to cover the initial sack. He did it in a faultless manner. Barrie their regular short fielder is away on holidays and Jackson was sent to his position. Barring one bad peg to first he played fine ball and practically ate up everything in sight. Cranfield covered the difficult corner. The outfield was made up of Austin, Stanton and Wing, the latter, late pitcher for the Red Caps. It was by no means a Lord, Oldring and Murphy combination but they knew where to stand so what's the use of talking.

The work of O'Connell at short for the Hamilton brigade was at times spectacular. In one innings he had three put outs in a row. The teams :—

Drafting Room : Stanton c., Gorman p., Corrin 1b., Olson 2b., Jackson s.s., Cranfield 3b., Austin l.f., Wing m., Stanton r.f.

Wm. Hamilton : Ross c., Johnston p., Neary 1b., Murphy 2b., O'Connell s.s., Murty 3b., Coudon l.f., O'Hearne m., Legros l.f.

Typos Scared Red Caps.

When Umpire Andrews had digested a pegtop the Printers and Red Caps were trotted out. For seven innings was battle most furiously waged and when the smoke cleared the few fans who were left made the writing on the score board out like this : Red Caps 3, Typos 1.

In the first innings the Pillingites secured one counter and in the fourth the Printers evened it up. The fifth and sixth passed without the pan being trampled upon, but in the seventh with two down and runners on first and second Moore in centre let a fly got away from him and the two who populated the sacks scored. The Printers went out in their half in order.

Lornie Rose and Rahmel decorated the rubber slab and the work of the former was what the good book terms a revelation. For his size and age the boy is a wonder and with a few more years under his belt will make the best of local twirlers step. Rahmel had all of Steve Brodie's luck and more. Everytime the ball was met on the nose, the spheriod flew right to the hands of some fielder.

The Printers should have won at that had Neary not overlooked section 13 of rule 56 which orders a base runner to touch the bases. Neary was attempting to score from first on a long hit and stepped over third base. On another occasion the same player was going to 2nd from first and with nobody down the batter grounded to third. He thought the ball was caught and walked off the base toward the bench and was an easy out. The following were the teams :—

The teams :—

Red Caps : Swanson c., Rahmel p., Flaherty 1b., Wing 2b., Anderson s.s., Primeau 3b., Cranfield l.f., Keenan c.f., O'Hearne r.f.

Printers : Taylor c., Rose p., Neary 1b., Ross 2b., O'Connell s.s., Murphy 3b., Curtis r.f., Moore m., Milloy l.f. Umpire : Andrews.

SCHETTLER HAS WORKED IN TWENTY-NINE GAMES

Completed Nineteen, Won Sixteen and Lost Ten, up to Middle of Month

BRANTS ARE HERE

In the pitching records up to August 15, Louie Schettler of the Petes, stands seventh. He took part in 29 games, completed 19, won 16 and lost 10. Tracey has a percentage of .600 having broken even in the lost and win column. He has taken part in 27 games. Sterling's percentage is .333 ; Belting has .308 while Creswell has .250.

The batting and fielding averages up to the same date are :

	Batt.	Field
Dolan	300	973
Welsh	301	946
Rooney	290	966
Kelly	275	954
Blount	269	969
Byrne	265	903
King	251	945
Miller	244	970
Fox	218	953
Schettler	202	972
Sterling	182	919
Tracey	161	945
Belting	120	932
Creswell	045	800

The Petes dropped both ends of a double-header at London on the week-end for which the blokes no doubt are profoundly thankful.

The program for his week calls for three games with Brantford and three with London. Brantford plays today, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Next week will see the finale here. Erie comes for the first three days after which the Blountmen play three games at Hamilton and pass on to Ottawa to work in a Sunday bill and wind up with two games on Labor Day.

The 1914 Petes have been an improvement in some respects but a whole lot of fans will say the team takes second place when compared to the mid-season squad of the hoodoo year. But the team has not been a financial success and the wind will likely blow from another direction by the time the green grass grows again.

The day set aside for the fair fans this week is to-morrow, when the Petes and Brants clash in the second game of the series.

Bramble, who has been purchased by Ottawa from Fort Wayne, arrived in London on Friday, and in speaking to some of the Blountmen stated that Harry Brant has been playing great ball this season. The former Peterborough short fielder fractured a couple of ribs a few weeks ago. It was reported that Chattanooga had recalled him, but when Bramble left he was still with Fort Wayne. In all probability Shag will use Bramble in London to-day.

MERCANTILE LEAGUE.

At 5.30 on Riverside Park on Wednesday evening, the Bankers and De Laval meet. The hour is decidedly early but it hoped that it will be possible to play nine innings.

It requires a strong imagination to turn imaginary dollars into real money.

FREEMAN TO PLAY WITH PRESTON

But Cobourg Will Have Two Good O.H.A. Teams

A Cobourg exchange says :

James Freeman, for several years a member of the Cobourg Hockey Club, will this year play in Preston. It is expected that Cobourg will have two good teams in the O.H.A. this year. The town league last winter was a great boom in developing the young players and some promising talent will try out for places on the Junior team.

There may be a bright side to everything, but if so some things are certainly preparing to spring a surprise.

THE FOE OF GERMS

Tobacco Gets Away With More Than Half the Microbes.

While it has long been known that tobacco smoke is a valuable preventive against infection during the epidemic of a contagious disease, it is only recently that an analysis of smoke-laden air in an East-end district has been contrasted with equally dense air in which tobacco fumes were lacking. These analyses have shown that more than one half of the harmful germs had been destroyed by the tobacco smoke. This fact has unconsciously been the means of preventing large loss of life, as was noted in the recent cholera epidemic in Germany, when workers in cigar factories were found to be immune to cholera, and wherein the victims were mainly from the non-smokers of the city.

Experiments conducted in a cholera-stricken house, one floor of which was occupied with a cigar factory, led Professor Wencke, of the Imperial Institute of Berlin, to the conclusion that the cholera germs cannot endure tobacco smoke. It was found that saliva containing virulent germs was completely sterilized by five minutes' exposure to tobacco smoke.

It was further discovered that, although the water used in the tobacco factory, both for drinking water and in moistening the cigars, was full of septic bacteria, not a cigarmaker sickened, and the cigars themselves were free of the deadly peril. Determining to put the issue to a drastic test, a few tobacco leaves were moistened with water, a glass tumblerful of which contained over a million active germs, whereupon it was found that within twenty-four hours every one of the bacilli was dead.

It has been a matter of common knowledge that inflammations of the mouth are fended off by the use of tobacco, and that unhealthy conditions of the mouth can never be traced to smoking, unless the habit is excessive. Now it appears that the smoker in a crowded room is truly a benefactor to humanity instead of the selfish brute some people would have us believe.

Steam-Dried Hay Now.

Each year finds the farmer more of a mechanic, as machine after machine appears to take the place of the decreasing supply of manual labor. The up-to-date farm now has its machine shop and farmer mechanic. The farmer complains that for five years past he has been obliged constantly to purchase new labor-saving machinery.

On the other hand, had it not been for these new inventions many would have been obliged to go out of business. The latest thing is steam-cured hay, which makes the farmer independent of cloudy or rainy weather in haying time. The green grass is hauled to the hay factory, unloaded at one end of the plant, and 30 minutes later emerges at the other end perfectly cured, ready for the barn or bale press.

In case of rain a canvas cover insures arrival at the barn without wetting. The farmer has about given up his time-honored trip to the gristmill, and here comes the hay mill. Frequent showers make good grass, but much of this is ruined in the process of sun-drying. The steam drier is independent of weather, and, moreover, turns out a better product, and can work nights.

Afraid of Frost.

The Chateau Laurier at Ottawa is frequently visited by touring Englishmen, who are sometimes loud in their assertions that "they do things so much better at 'ome." One of these globe-trotters recently was very indignant over the quantity of ice used in the dining-room, iced tea, iced water, shaved ice on the salads, etc. Towards the end of his meal the obsequious waiter, with his eye on the expected tip, enquired: "Will you have a demi-tasse, sir?"

"Oh, no," replied the Englishman curtly, "it's bound to be some bally thing with hice in it. Bring me a small cup of coffee, please."

Economical.

"Why does he now eat breakfast?"

"To get his money's worth."

"Don't understand."

"Boards at the hotel, American plan."

Youthful Manifestation.

"They say he is in love with his wife."

"Oh, well, give him time!"

Humor and Philosophy

EXPERIENCE.

To give and to take,
  To earn and to keep,
To wade in the shallows,
  To swim where it's deep,
To keep in the channel,
  Avoiding the rocks,
And that's what you learn
  In the school of hard knocks.

No money tuition
  You pay in advance.
Instructors are often
  Appointed by chance.
Nor optional is it
  To stay or to go.
You take in the courses
  Whether or no.

But, though, as I mentioned,
  The entry is free,
Before you have finished
  It costs you a fee.
And little it matters,
  Although you may say
You cannot afford it,
  The price you must pay.

But no education
  Is equal the kind
You get in this college
  For body and mind.
It's through disappointments,
  Heartburnings and shocks
Diplomas you win
  In the school of hard knocks.

A Bad Sign.

"I don't believe in signs."

"I do."

"For a fact?"

"Yes; for a fact."

"As, for instance?"

"Seeing a creditor over my left shoulder is sure evidence that I am about to be annoyed."

The Miracle.

"I understand Miss Brown is much improved in health."

"Yes, indeed, and in every other way."

"Glad to hear it."

"She is ten years younger than she was five years ago."

Twin Outcasts.

"What is your friend's business?"

"He is a critic."

"I have a friend I would like to have him meet."

"What does he do?"

"He is an umpire."

Quite Modern.

"What are you doing?"

"Waiting for my ship to come in."

"You are waiting a long way from the ocean."

"This is an airship."

Too Good to Keep.

"What are you promoting?"

"Just a gold mine."

"Any gold in it?"

"Think I'd be selling stock in it if there were?"

Disappointing.

"She is writing an ode to Pan."

"That sounds good. What pan?"

"Pan, the god of nature."

"Oh, shucks! I thought it was the frying pan."

Looking Ahead.

"My baby is very intelligent."

"How so?"

"She keeps examining her toes."

"How does that denote precocity?"

"Why, the intelligent child evidently realizes that one must have perfect toes if one proposes to tango creditably."—Kansas City Journal.

Sympathy.

"Hark!"

"What's the matter?"

"Don't you hear that awful noise?"

"That's Gladys Burdick taking her music lesson."

"Poor old Burdick! He pays money for that."—Chicago Record-Herald.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

MITCHELL—ATKEY.

A very quiet wedding was solemnized at the Charlotte St. parsonage, on Saturday, August 22nd, by the Rev. W. J. Jolliffe, B.C.L., of Toronto, when Mrs. M. M. Atkey and Mr. Peter Mitchell, both of Mimico, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony.

Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell will reside at Mimico.

A little romance of the war has just come to light, says the Cobourg Star.

Major C. J. Swaddling of Cobourg, a former reservist of London, Eng., and his bride have started off for Britain to serve their country. The bride was formerly Nurse Forrester of the Infants' Home, Toronto.

The Major tried to transfer to the Canadian corps of the Medical Staff, so that Miss Forrester could go along with him as nurse. Failing in this, they decided to get married and pay their own way to the front. At Westminster Presbyterian Church, Toronto, they were wed by the Rev. Prof. Davidson, and they are now off to England, there to try to get with the troops at the front.

The Major will be remembered as the first man to use the wireless at the Toronto Exhibition of 1910. He has served twenty-seven years in the army. His daughter, known as the "world's smallest cyclist," appeared by command before the late King Edward.

Mr. Swaddling conducts the King street garage and is well and favorably known by Cobourg citizens who will join with the Sentinel-Star in wishing the Major and his wife happiness and a safe return.

At the Sunday morning service at St. John's Church Mrs. Jas. Lock was heard to great advantage in Gounod's "O Divine Redeemer," (soprano). After Evensong in the Vestry, sincere expressions of regret were expressed by the Rector and Choirmaster at the impending departure of Mr. W. G. Common and Mr. J. V. Lock to positions away. It is hoped their absence will only be temporary.

The officers of the Children's Aid Society gratefully extend their thanks to Mrs. Hopwood for her kindly entertainment of the officers and children at her home in Chemong Park on Friday afternoon, to Mr. Travers for his generous donation of good things, and to Messrs. Cressman, Hall and Travers for the kindly use of their cars for conveying the party to and from the Park.

Wednesday afternoon and evening the entire proceeds of the Empire theatre will be given to the hospital ship and war fund. R. J. Devey will have charge of the program of vocal selections which will be given with the pictures.

Miss Mary Fife, Indian River, is visiting relatives in the city.

Mr. Willis Crocker, King St., has gone to Rochester to visit his sisters.

Mr. J. H. Howard of Ottawa, is registered at the Snowden House.

Mr. E. D. Foley, Montreal, is in the city on business.

REMOVAL NOTICE.

Dr. A. G. Walmsley, Osteopathic Physician, has removed to his new offices in the Sun Life Building, cor. Hunter and Water Streets. Entrance 124 Hunter St., Peterborough, Ontario. Phones: Office 649. Residence, 609.

The German steamer "Schneefels" that was seized by the British in the Mediterranean recently, carried a large consignment of tea for the Salada Tea Co., which was fortunately insured. The war risk paid was in the neighborhood of six cents per pound of tea. It is now anticipated that the "Schneefels" will be tied up at Gibraltar until the close of the war.

57TH BAND NOTICE.

The 57th regimental band is requested to meet at the armories at 7.30 to-night, in uniform.

The Call to Arms—Buglers of a British Infantry Regiment Sounding "Fall In!"

had been on the train all night, few of them getting a real rest, and since their arrival had worked hard getting all settled. One by one the lanterns were extinguished. When "lights out" sounded at 10.15 the valley was almost black.

System Has Big Test.

It was a big day, the biggest that the camp has known. To a certain extent it was a test of the executive capabilities of the general staff, and the system of the army service corps, the ordnance department and other branches of the service, which have for their work the transport and feeding of the troops. And it was a success. Confidence has been established and everything should now go on with few difficulties. The system has been tested, and it worked. The men have been weighed and have not been found wanting. Naturally it was not all "beer and skittles," and more particularly and less figuratively it was not beer.

It was just what the men of the expeditionary force had signed on for—service conditions. There were hardships, but they were nothing to what may be expected later. The rain poured down from early morning, the marching was bad, the roads were heavy, everything was wet. And meals were late, there was much hard work to do. But when the pipes were lit there was singing and there was little grouching. "This weather can't last long and then we'll have it over," that was the general feeling.

Accident to Col. Duff.

The first serious accident occurred during the afternoon when Col. H. R. Duff, head of the army medical service here, a member of the permanent force, stationed at Kingston, and D. A. M. for that district, fell from his horse and was most severely injured. Only the bare details of the accident have been reported to headquarters, and as the officer was at once rushed to Quebec, where he was placed in one of the hospitals for treatment, no statement can be made as to the extent of the seriousness of his injuries. Captain Snell, of the A. M. S., who knows the circumstances, accompanied Col. Duff to Quebec, after making a terse report of the accident.

It is understood that Col. Shillington will replace Col. Duff temporarily. Beyond this unfortunate accident the programme for the day was carried out without trouble. The troops were handled by the C.N.R. exceptionally well. The trains were run in on a block system, half an hour separating each, and with the exception of two locals, which were cancelled, the regular trains were made to conform with this schedule. Thus during the day a continuous stream of men, clad in khaki, scarlet or rifle green came into view from the siding, two miles away and marched up on to the infantry quarters. A company from Barrie, and the adjacent district ploughed through the rain.

Next came a crowd of young Engineers, all of them Queen's men, and all of them shouting, the yells that have been heard over many a football field. In particular they favored the ones which begins "We are, we are, we are the engineers," and, continuing, gives intimate details regarding their capacity for a certain mild form of popular drink, followed by a declaration of their nonchalant attitude, toward all who hold them in light, though inoffensive esteem.

Passing them are a squad of the Royal Horse Artillery on their splendid animals. They wheel around the corners with all the spirit and perfection of action that is seen in Rosa Bonheur's famous horse-fair picture. Trailing along is a company of "Herring Chokers," engineers from Woodstock, N.B. They have a rich, expressive vocabulary, and they turn it loose, individually and collectively, on all who apply the epithet which they consider opprobious.

Many of these volunteers are not yet equipped with any uniform. Some of them have a cap, some have trousers, and some have tunics. Nevertheless, they are everyone members of His Majesty's Imperial forces, and as such must be treated with respect.

The main camp is far back from the railway and all roads, and few travelling over the Quebec and Lake St. John line realize its extent. From a distance, so thick are the tents, that one new comer shouted ecstatically, "look, fellows, there's the lake." And that great stretch of white, seen above the dripping tree tops, through the mist of rain, did look remarkably like a sheet of water, nestling at the foot of Pinkney's mountain.

The bell tents, hundreds and hundreds of them, are pitched on each side of the broad road that has been built through the centre of the fields. Each battalion and brigade has its own sign post identifying it in the maze. Along each side of the road runs the water main, and every few feet there is a faucet and a taller pipe rising from the ground.

The taller pipes are the shower baths. Every man will be able to get under one each day. "Nothing like it to keep the men fit," says the officers.

Then come the kitchens, a canvas shelter without walls covers the stove and the provisions. At the side there is a pile of wood. From every chimney there arises a whirl of smoke. These were the popular spots yesterday. Not only were the men hungry, but heat was a precious thing. Every uniform was soaked. The rain even got through the great coats. The cook might swear, but he was powerless. The men grouped around the stoves and warmed themselves.

Just what training the men are to be put through has not been announced, but it is sure to be strenuous; that much is known. The Canadian expeditionary force is going to be made up of no raw recruits who know little beyond the way to "bout turn" or "form fours." Active service work is what they are going to get, and the most capable officers the country can produce are here to whip them into shape.

They are going to march up the hill and down again a good many times, and in a good many different ways. They will know how to carry a rifle and how to shoot it, and if they cannot hit the target they are not going to go. There will be bivouacs such as they will have to face many times as they march through the pleasant fields of western Europe—bivouacs in the open. They will be taught to take care of their feet and their stomachs, and they will know the value of a light kit, and how unnecessary what now seems imperative to carry will become.

For these are the men who are going to carry the honors of Canada into a far country. These are the men who will represent one of the world's youngest nations in a war that will make all other wars seem petty by comparison. As such, bearing such a responsibility, they must be men. They must be soldiers of the best calibre. That is what they will be made, here in Val Cartier.

Strange Modern Building

One of the most extraordinary buildings erected in modern times is now being built near Dornach, in Alsace. It is called the Temple of the Science of the Spirit and will be the mecca for every student of occultism and mysticism in Europe. The temple should be completed by December, when formal opening ceremonies of great pomp are to be performed.

It owes its inception and construction to Dr. Rudolf Steiner, a German theosophist, who has at least 4,000 followers. The cost of the building, which is of huge proportions, will be $600,000, which has been raised by subscriptions from spiritualists in many lands.

Symbolism and mysticism are the keynotes of the architectural design, for the greater of the two domes which surmount the building is said to represent the universe, and—since the numeral 7 represents the unrolling of things in time"—it is supported on each side by seven great columns. These pillars are in the form of a pentagram and support ornate capitals representing the planets of sun, moon, Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Mercury, and Venus. Each column is made symbolically of a different kind of wood, for the whole edifice is built of wood except the basements, which are of stone, constructed in the form of terraces.

Temple Band.

The Temple Band will be on hand tonight to assist the 57th Band in giving the send off to the batterymen who leave for Cobourg.

HELP WANTED.

If there are any harness makers or stitchers out of employment, there is room for 10 or 12 men to work on Government work at Ackerman, Son & Co.'s, Peterborough.

It isn't a bad idea to make a little turn of your own while you are waiting for your turn.

FIRST ATTACK FAILS--- TRIUMPH SAY GERMANS--ITALY TO TAKE PLUNGE ?--RUSSIANS ARE ADVANCING

ALLIES FALL BACK ON STRONG DEFENCES

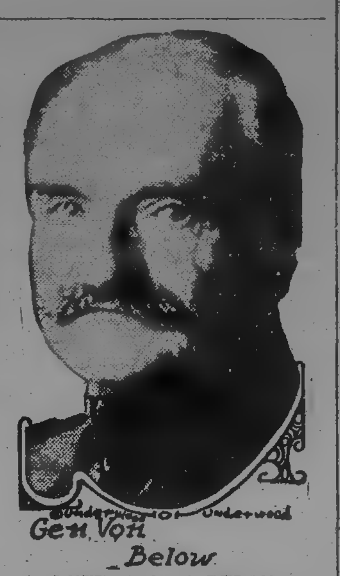
Canadian Press Despatch.

Namur has fallen into German hands ,according to the announcement made by the official press bureau in London. Details of the fighting around the fortress are not given, but English papers regard the fall as inexplicable. Berlin despatches say five forts and the city itself have fallen, and the capture of the remaining four forts is imminent.

A reverse to the forces of the allies is generally admitted by English and French newspapers, which say to-day's news is "decidedly bad." While plainly expressing disappointment at the defeat of their forces, they declare the retrograde movement towards the line of strong defensive works near the frontier, to have been carried out in good order.

It is assumed that the allies are falling back on their first line of defensive works, running from Maubage in a southeasterly direction by way of Hirson, Mezleres, Montmedy, Verdun, St .Michiel, Toul and Epinal, all of which are strong fortresses and interspersed with smaller works, such as Ayvelle, Genicourt, Troyon, Lespariches, Lianville and Gironville.

Behind these lies another strong line of fortifications from Stquetin, in the north, through Laon and Reims, to the entrenched camp at Chalons.



GENERAL VON BELOW, Commander of the 21st Corps of the German Army.

GERMAN OFFENSIVE MOVEMENT IN THE NORTH BEING HELD IN CHECK BY THE ALLIED ARMIES

Canadian Press Despatch.

Paris, Aug. 25.—Official: "The German offensive movement in the north, which was stopped yesterday, appears to-day to have been resumed. The enemy is, however, being held back by the French army, acting in conjunction with the. English. and Belgian armies.

"The armies of the allies surprised the enemy and drove back their advance detachments. The allies have gone beyond Malines; the Belgian army came from Antwerp. In Lorraine, after the counter attacks of yesterday, the right of the French forces withdrew to the river Mortagne, which is a continuation of the Muerthe, from Luneville to Nancy. In Alsace French troops repulsed a number of German attacks directed against Colmar. The reported capture of Muelhausen by the Germans is without foundation. Moreover, this theatre of operations in Alsace is becoming of secondary importance."

British Forces in First Action

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 25.—A French correspondent to the Express says: "British troops came into action for the first time on Friday and Saturday. It was only an affair of outposts and scouting, but interesting because of the light it threw on the exhausted condition of the German advance guards." The correspondent continues that detachments were scouting in the country to the westward of Brussels and south as far as Charleroi. Exhausted though the German cavalry were known to be, their success lay in their continued rapid advance, and it was obvious that they would push on at the first possible moment.

"While the Belgians were sullenly falling back towards the north, the English cavalry were busily employed feeling for the inevitable German advance, while the French horse, foot and artillery came up from south and west."

Invaders Arrive at Charleroi

London, Aug. 25—A despatch to the Daily News from Paris says the Germans bombarded Charleroi between noon and 2 o'clock Saturday. They came into the town by way of the left bank of the Sambre river. The same evening the French troops arrived, but as the Germans kept up a fire from houses in the lower part of the town, the French were forced to bombard it, and that portion of the place was soon in flames. On the same day Germans set fire to a whole series of outlying villages, destroying Marchlennese, Monceau, Sur Sambre, Anderlues and Chaelet.

One German Army Surrounded

London, Aug. 25.—"Desperate fighting between outposts took place at Oudenarde and Renaix Monday. The losses were heavy on both sides. Twenty-five thousand Germans have been surrounded between Courtrai and Anseghema, a town six miles west of Oudenarde.

SERVIANS PURSUE ENEMY ALONG THEIR WHOLE FRONT

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 25.—The Nish correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Co., telegraphs as follows :— "After a great victory by our army, our forces are vigorously pursuing the enemy along the whole of their front. The matter made no resistance but fled with the greatest haste."

the twenty-first division of infantry of Landwehr was killed.

"The enemy's casualties were enormous. According to information obtained up to present, the twenty-first, eleventh, the one hundred and second and twenty-eighth regiments were completely wiped out. The commander of the twenty-eighth was captured and the commander of

NAMUR FALLS

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 25.—The official war information bureau says: "It is announced that Namur has fallen."

Beyond the bare statement that Namur has fallen, it is not known definitely whether the fall refers to the town or forts, or to both.

London, Aug. 25.—Commenting on the loss of Namur, the Chronicle says : "The news to-day is decidedly bad," adding that if the allies' losses have been heavy, "we may yet see before long the Germans march in earnest upon Paris.

"England and Russia must stubbornly resolve that, come what may to France, they will never surrender to Germany, but will stick to her as they stuck to Napoleon, until they pull her down."

Berlin, Aug. 25.— (By Wireless Telegraph)—Official announcement made public here to-day says the city of Namur and five of its forts have been captured by the Geramns. The bombardment of four other forts continues and their fall seems imminent.

LONDON, Aug. 25. — The London Times in its news summary this morning says: "Namur has fallen. This is, in the words of the official communication, and necessitates the withdrawal of a portion of the allied troops from the line of Sambre to their original defensive position on the French frontier.

"The official Press Bureau also announced yesterday that the British forces were engaged all day on Sunday and after dark with the enemy in the neighborhood of Mons, and held their ground.

"Namur is a strongly fortified city at the junction of the Meuse and Sambre. It was confidently expected to present a formidable obstacle to the German advance. There is as yet no explanation of its sudden fall. No doubt the Germans have attacked the allies in this part of Belgium with all their available forces.

"The French Minister of War, in an official statement, reminded the nation that the huge extent of the front along which the armies are engaged, and the enormous number of troops upon that front, make it impossible to estimate the importance of momentary developments.

"The battle now raging from Mons to Cirey will last several days, and it wil be necessary to await a definite result before a sound conclusion can be reached as to the full effect of this first great engagement."

BIG STICK PROMISED BOOSTERS OF PRICES BY PREMIER BORDEN

Government Now Possesses Wide Powers, and Inquiry Will be Held Into Charges of Unjust Increases For Necessaries.

OTTAWA, Aug. 25.—The following official statement was given out by the Prime Minister yesterday afternoon, as representing the views of the Government:

"While the action of the majority of dealers throughout the country during the present crisis has been characterized by a sense of fairness and justice, nevertheless several complaints have reached the Government that arbitrary and burdensome increases in the cost of certain necessaries of life have been made in some localities without any sufficient or substantial cause or reason.

"Under these circumstances it is desirable to have it generally known and understood that under the wide powers which have been conferred upon it by Parliament, the Government has the right to investigate and to deal promptly with any case or cases of unjustifiable increase or any oppressive combination or tendency on the part of dealers.

"Under the grave conditions which confront us by reason of the outbreak of war, any course which would be oppressive or unfair toward the laboring and artisan classes and generally those possessed of small incomes, is most strongly to be condemned, and will demand the exercise of the Government of all the powers at its command."

FRANZ JOSEPH VERY LOW.

Death of Austrian Emperor Only a Question of Hours.

LONDON, Aug. 25. — A despatch from Copenhagen to the Exchange Telegram Co. says that the condition of Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria is much worse and that his death is now only a question of hours.

Rumors that the Emperor of Austria was critically ill have been circulated during the past 24 hours, but lack official confirmation.

C. P. R. CONDUCTORS ARE HELD ON FRAUD CHARGES

"Knocking Down" Fares On Passenger Train Led to Investigation By Detectives

Toronto, Aug. 25.—With startling suddenness the entire detective staff of the local police, accompanied by members of private detective agencies, visited the home of several C. P. R. conductors last night. They executed warrants charging the above with conspiring to defraud the company out of sums of money by allowing passengers to ride free on trains and accepting money from others—the old game of "knocking down."

The men arrested are :— James Burton, 139 Galley Ave. ; Frederick Hartley ; Frederick C. Lee, 1140 College Street ; Alexander McNeilley, 770 Keele Street ; William Mitchell, 134 Annette Street ; Richard Reid, Sudbury.

All of those who were taken into custody were trusted servants of the railroad. Three of the men were up in years and had been employed by the company for a long time, one man for 30 years.

Lee is employed as chief information clerk in the Toronto office of the company. What part he played in the conspiracy could not be ascertained at an early hous this morning.

Suspected for Months.

For months the railroad company has suspected that they were losing sums of money. Private detective agencies were retained to investigate. Operatives from these agencies were placed on the trains. Until the early part of the week their case was not complete. Yesterday they laid information for the arrest of the men named.

At 10 o'clock last night Inspector of Detectives Kennedy gathered his whole staff at headquarters. None of the men knew what their orders were to be. Accompanied by the members of the agencies who had worked on the case, they started out to execute their warrants.

Arrested on His Train.

Detective Cronin left for the Union station, where he arrested McNeilly. He was taken to headquarters by Cronin. Cronin was quickly followed by Detectives Montgomery and Mitchell, who had aroused Mitchell from his bed. By

ADVISES ALL CANADIANS TO BE CALM

"If I have any general advice to offer it is that the people of Canada will—as I am sure they will — continue to maintain the calm, sane judgment for which they have always been noted. After all, confidence is a supreme patriotic duty, confidence in one another, confidence in our country and its institutions, in the Empire, in the righteousness of our cause and under Providence in the certain ultimate triumph of our arms."—Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, in the House of Commons.

THIRTY THOUSAND GERMANS ATTACKING BELGIAN CITY

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 25.—A despatch to the Times from Ostend, sent to-day, says 30,000 Germans are attacking Malines, a Belgian city 13 miles southeast of Antwerp. Skirmishing is general in northwest Flanders.

London, Aug. 25.—A despatch to the Express from Ostend says : "A great battle has been in progress in the province of Hainaut, on the southern frontier of Belgium, since yesterday evening.

French and British troops have been engaged in desperate conflicts north of Charleroi and Fleurus with Germans who crossed the Meuse at Huy.

Milan, Aug. 25.—A despatch from Cattarox says all fortifications there have been destroyed by the allied fleet. The Austrians did not have time before the attack to strew the Gulf of Cattaro with mines.

INDICATIONS ARE THAT ITALY WILL STEP IN

Will Rise to the Support of the Entente, it is Believed

LONDON, Aug. 25.—There is good reason for believing Italy soon will be involved in the great conflagration, and that she will come in, not on the side of Germany and Austria, with whom she constitutes the triple alliance, but with the allies.

While it is impossible to obtain definite information, it is known tremendous pressure is being brought to bear upon Italy by both sides. The allies are confident the representations of Germany and Austria will be, if they have not already proved, definitely to be ineffective.

The British press teems with leaders pointing out the advantages accruing to Italy if she joins the allies, even to the extent of discussing the spoils of war which might fall to Italy in the way of provinces recovered and additional territory secured from Austria. There are persistent rumors in diplomatic circles here that the Italian Government already has decided upon the fateful step. While the allies do not doubt their ability to take care of Germany and Austria without any more help, it is well recognized that Italy's assistance would make the victory more sure and certainly much quicker.

German Pressure Fails.

ROME, Aug. 25—The German Ambassador here has been actively trying to induce the Italian press to advocate Italy's intervention in behalf of Germany. The inducement which he has been holding out is Italy's coming into possession of Tunisia and Algeria.

So far the Ambassador's efforts have failed completely. Not a single newspaper, not even those which were Austrophile before the war, has published a solitary article in favor of the German views.

FRENCH AND BRITISH ARE DRIVEN BACK ON THE SECOND DEFENCES

Heavy Loss on Both Sides is Reported by French War Office, Which Says That Reverse Was Due to Unforeseen Difficulties.

Spirit of Men Unimpaired and Offensive Operations Will go On.

PARIS, Aug. 25—The French War Office issued the following announcement last night:—

"The French and British, the plan of attack having failed owing to unforeseen difficulties, have retired on the covering positions."

"West of the Meuse the British army on our left was attacked by the Germans, but behaved admirably, holding its ground with traditional steadfastness.

"The French assumed the offensive with two army corps. An African brigade in the front line, carried away by their eagerness, were received by a murderous fire. They did not give an inch, but counter-attacked by the Prussian guard they were obliged to retire, only, however, after inflicting enormous losses. The Prussian guard especially suffered heavily.

"East of the Meuse our troops advanced across an extremely difficult country and made a vigorous attack when they emerged from the woods, but were obliged to fall back after a stiff fight south of the River Semois.

"On order of Gen. Joffre, our troops and the British troops withdrew to the covering positions. Our troops are intact; our cavalry has in no way suffered, and our artillery has affirmed its superiority. Our officers and soldiers are in the best of condition, morally and physically.

"As a result of the orders which have been issued, the aspect of the struggle will change for a few days. The French army will remain for a time on the defensive, but at the right moment, to be decided upon by the commander-in-chief, it will resume a vigorous offensive.

"Our losses are heavy. It would be premature to enumerate them. It would be equally so to enumerate those of the Germans, who suffered so heavily that they were obliged to abandon their counter attacks and establish themselves in a fresh position in Lorraine.

"We delivered four attacks Sunday from our position north of Nancy, inflicting very heavy loss on the enemy.

"In regard to the general situation, we have the full use of our railroads and retain command of the seas. Our operations have enabled the Russians to come into action and penetrate the heart of west Prussia. It is to be regretted that the offensive operations planned failed to achieve their purpose as a result of difficulties impossible to forsee. It would have shortened the war, but our defences remain intact in the presence of an already weakened enemy.

"Every Frenchman will deplore the temporary abandonment of portions of Alsace and Lorraine, which we had occupied and certain parts of the national territory will suffer from events of which they will be the theatre.

"The ordeal is inevitable, but temporary. Thus detachments of German cavalry belonging to an unattached division operating on the extreme right have penetrated to Rouboix, six miles north of Lille, and the Tourcoing district, which are defended only by territorial reservists.

"Our valiant people will know how to find courage to support this trial, with unfailing faith in final success, which is not to be doubted. In telling to the country the whole truth, the Government and military authorities give it the strongest proof of their absolute confidence in victory, which depends only on our perseverance and tenacity."

The military situation was discussed at a special meeting of the Cabinet at Elysee Palace last night, presided over by President Poincare. The deliberations lasted three hours.

First Namur Defences Taken.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—It was officially stated by the war press bureau yesterday afternoon that the British troops were defeated in the great battle which has been raging for three days in Belgium along a front of 100 miles, extending from Mons to the Luxemburg border. The British forces fought till it was too dark to see Sunday near Mons, holding their ground. The first line of defence at Namur was taken, causing the retirement of a portion of the British force from the line of operations on the Sambre.

In addition, the German troops, as an offset to the attack of the allied armies at Mons, invaded French territory in great numbers, capturing Luneville, where 150 guns were seized; Amance and Dieulouard.

An unconfirmed report from Paris says that Nancy, the capital of the Department of Meurthe-et-Moselle, a city of 103,000 inhabitants, has fallen into the hands of the Germans. At all events, it was known earlier that

BATTERY HAS DONE WELL

Seventy-five Volunteers Have Gone to Cobourg

The citizens of Peterboro were out again in goodly numbers last evening to bid farewell to the soldier boys. It was the occasion of Sergt. Major Guerin proceeding to Cobourg with more recruits for the battery. As was previously announced the 24th Battery of this city and the 14th Battery of Cobourg go to make up the left half of the 10th Brigade.

Cobourg is not supplying a large number of men, hence the repeated calls to Peterboro. It is expected that the men who left last evening will be the last to be called, on the first contingent.

The 57th Regimental and the Temple Bands headed the march and at every corner the populace were gathered and cheered the handful of volunteers most heartily. After arriving at the G.T.R. depot Adjutant McElhiney led in giving three cheers for the boys and for Canada and spoke a few words to the men, urging them to do justice to the colors they were to fight under and assured them that those left behind would be well cared for. When the train pulled in the immense crowd uttered forth a cheer that could be heard for miles and then as it moved slowly out they took up the strains of the national anthem, with a new fervor.

The men who left were :

A. Doris, G. W. Allen, W. J. Clark, Geo. Colquhoun, H. Kennealley, W. Goohan, G. Mehew, T. Deason, R. Nookes, W. Scully, J. Mahoney, J. W. Hotontot.

This makes seventy-five men, with the local battery.

Also Inconvenient.

Wife—Well, then, I'll just buy what I want and have the bills sent to you.

PETERBOROUGH, TUESDAY, AUGUST 25, 1914

BUSINESS REVIVING.

IF WE ARE to judge by reports from the large banking houses of the United States, business of all kinds is gradually but surely being resumed, and the world's commerce is adjusting itself to the necessities of war. Henry Clews & Co. is authority for the statement that "The worst of the shock of war in this country has already been felt. We may see its later effects in high prices of food, while the dislocation of industry will temporarily increase the number of unemployed. Ultimately, however, our industries will receive a great impetus, and if any country in the world can possibly benefit from the colossal disaster now hanging over Europe, it will be the United States, which is happily free of all foreign entanglements, and should absolutely keep so."

With this feeling prevailing in the financial circles of the United States, Canada should benefit thereby, and once more assume its normal condition.

THE 57TH REGIMENT.

THE 57th Regiment of the British Army, known as the "Diehards," won the name. It was not presented to them by admiring wives and daughters merely for looking well or even as a testimony of what they would do, if they could not do anything else. The name was won at Albuera. In this battle, which at one time looked like going against the British, the 57th was ordered to hold the enemy while the other British troops of the division, which had been thrown into confusion, re-formed. It was a fearful moment. It could mean only death. For one regiment to hold back the entire French attack was a task that could only have one object, to gain time by the slaughter of the defenders.

But it was done, and the bloody remnants won the name which their commander gave them when he cried: "Now, boys, we must die, but let us die hard!" That regiment, one hundred years after, is again in line. The 57th of Peterborough is "allied" with that regiment, and although the local regiment did not, as a regiment, ask to be sent to the front, some of the officers and many of the men did. No doubt the others would have lived up to their great name if they could have got away. That is one of the grave responsibilities of a great name. If we cannot die hard, we must show that we are ready to do so, at any rate. It is gratifying that we have tried to do our best. Unaccustomed to real war, we may yet do our best to prove ourselves worthy of the colours we carry and the ancestral name we bear. This is no sham fight, and, like all serious matters, is narrowly watched, and carries with it serious consequences. We cannot "pretend." We must die hard, not die away. God grant that in the time of need we may be equal to the occasion and to our professions.

PATRIOTISM WILL LIGHTEN BURDENS.

AMONG the tariff changes announced by Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, the most important increase is in that of sugar, as it is of such common domestic use. The raising of the duty on sugar, therefore, is of wide concern, most of which is imported. The increase on coffee is not serious, and the increases on luxuries, such as wines, liquors, and tobacco, are not of vital importance, as most of us will be better without these, for a time anyway.

It will take a great deal of careful and skilful financing to tide over the present and coming period of financial stringency without embarrassment, and the Government is to be commended for its decision to continue the public works already begun. It has shown courage, confidence, and a willingness to accept its duty, all of which are in harmony with the sentiment of the people. Canada, no doubt, will continue to make progress, while lending adequate assistance to Great Britain in her present trial. That the Government is able to take such an optimistic attitude in time of a serious war disturbance at the source of its financial assistance is no mean tribute to the wealth of the country and the spirit of the people.

The Hon. Mr. White's interpretation of the desires of the Canadian people at this time, to stop at no reasonable sacrifice in lending all possible aid to the Mother Country, will commend itself to all. Patriotism will lighten any burden to be borne as a result of any extraordinary measures put on us now or in the near future.

THE BRITISH NAVAL COMMANDER.

SIR JOHN JELLICOE, who has been placed in supreme command of the British home fleet, is a naval "Bobs," being about the same height as the hero of Kandahar, and the chances are that he will occupy as large a place in British history. He was one of the officers of the Victoria when it was rammed by the Camperdown in the Mediterranean in 1893. He was ill in bed at the time of the disaster, and went down with the ship, but was ultimately found on the coast alive, but unconscious. A man who could survive such an experience must have had big things in store for him.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THAT was an inspiring sight to those who delight in a united Canada, when 850 French reservists sailed out of Montreal last Friday on the French liner Venetia, being well looked after on her trip by British and French warships.

Of Course She Has.

New York Herald.

Few Americans realize that a section of this continent larger in area than the portion belonging to the United States is directly involved in this European war. For Canada, instead of remaining neutral, has elected to cast her lot with the "mother country."

The Right to Lend to Belligerents.

New York World.

There is no such neutrality anywhere else as among bankers. In their business they recognize neither friends nor foes. They will lend to one belligerent as freely as to another if terms and prospects are equally advantageous. To deny them such rights in the present instance would be without precedent in modern history.

Unusual Suffering.

Glasgow Record.

We know the cost. We know that with us, as with the whole of Europe, there will not be a household, a workshop, a farm, a peasant's cottage, that will not be directly involved in the way of material suffering. Not only our interest and honour, but the future that we may not be destined to see, call for the awful sacrifice.

Illusion and Illusions.

Hamilton Herald.

Norman Angell's argument in his book, "The Great Illusion" to prove that even nations which conquer in war are necessarily losers, is no doubt sound; but the notion that nations are always influenced by economic motives when they go to war, is even a greater illusion than the one which Norman Angell writes about.

SEAT FORFEITED BY SENATOR

Hon. Jas. Robertson Loses Seat in Commons

Ottawa, Aug. 25.—Because he has missed two consecutive sessions of parliament, Hon. Senator James E. Robertson, of Prince Edward Island, forfeits his seat in the Commons. He is a Liberal. He was appointed to the Senate in 1902. Hon. William McDonald, Conservative of Cape Breton, saved his seat by attending the emergency session, and Hon. W. J. Macdonald, Conservative, of British Columbia, has already forfeited his. Several Senators, notably Messrs. De Boucherville, Shehyn, Thompson, Domville were not present this session but will save their seats if they come next year. When all existing vacancies are filled there will be a Liberal majority of fourteen.

SEPTEMBER IN ALGONQUIN PARK

2,000 feet above sea level, Algonquin Park is one of the most delightful vacation playgrounds in America. The log cabin camps operated by the Grand Trunk Railway are most attractive and everyone is delighted with the general scheme. They are reached by stage from the Highland Inn, Algonquin Park Station, Ont., and will be kept open until September 15th. Just the out-of-way sort of spot for a delightful summer holiday in the wilderness with city conveniences. Splendid fishing, pure air, unlimited scope for the amateur photographer, and where health and pleasure abound. The period between the 1st and 15th of September are two of the most delightful weeks during the whole year for an outing in Algonquin Park. Handsome descriptive literature may be had on application to Mr. B. A. Rose, City Passenger and Ticket Agent, Grand Trunk Railway, Peterboro, Ont.

A SUMMER WISH.

I Wish I could sail where the icebergs are thickest
And idle where walruses hide
Or sit on the northernmost point in Alaska
And dangle my feet in the tide.
I'd like to slide down on the side of a glacier,
In snow at the bottom to roll.
How fine it would be in the teeth of a blizzard
To sit on the top of the pole!

A point in the shade of the mountains of Greenland
Would seem an alluring retreat,
The temperature forty-eight points below freezing.
Then life would be full and complete,
With wind that was sharp as the edge of a razor
To fan me and keep me awake,
With only pajamas, an ulster and slippers
The force of the climate to break.

A dip in the depths of the charming antarctic
In only a bathing attire,
And that not too heavy, would furnish,
I'm certain,
A treat for yours truly, esquire.
To float for a time on the breast of the billows
And under an ice floe to dive,
To sport where the spray came in ice
wagon crystals,
A fellow would sure be alive.

To live in an ice covered Eskimo cabin
On polar bear blubber and such,
An icicle fork to assist in the eating—
Oh, really the thought is too much!
Alas, I am hampered by getting a living!
The thought of it all makes me sick.
I have to stick round in this sun frizzled climate

When "Graft" Was Proper.

Sixty years ago it was quite permissible for the commander of a British regiment to make money out of the rank and file. In those days when a certain sum of money was annually allotted for the clothing of each regiment the colonels usually bought the cheapest clothing they could procure and put the balance of the allowance into their own pockets. This varied from $3,000 to $5,000, and many an officer preferred to remain a "clothing colonel" rather than be promoted to higher rank. The miseries of the badly clad soldiers in the Crimean war at last caused an inquiry into the system, and "clothing colonels" were abolished.—London Chronicle.

THERE are individuals such poor demonstrators that they can't even show the point of their own jokes.

Nobody would be guilty of writing an anonymous letter. That's why it is anonymous.

'TWAS EVER THUS

By Walt Mason

Old Rox, in his motor, goes by like a gust; the sad, toiling voter is choked by the dust. "The rich are too sassy," the toiling one cries; "their nerve is too brassy, dad swivel their eyes! All things are adjusted unfair in this land, and I'm so disgusted I scarcely can stand. The poor man is cheated clean out of his shirt, and then he is treated as though he were dirt. The wealthy employer goes touring around in his old destroyer, just burning the ground; he scatters the gravel and gumbo and dust on workers who travel on foot — oh, the crust!" The worker grows wealthy, for industry pays; his bank roll is healthy, and happy his days. And then in his motor he scorches the road, and some other voter, oppressed by his load, is crying, "By thunder, the rich are too brash! They're flaunting their plunder, their ill-gotten cash. Some day the poor toilers will rise as one man, and to the despoilers will fasten the can!" The man thus complaining some day may be rich; then he, too, disdaining the man in the ditch, will speed up his motor and go like a gust; there's always a voter to stand in the dust!

LATEST NEWS PARAGRAPHED

Winnipeg will not buy any more German goods. This was the emphatic resolution of the Board of Control yesterday.

A German biplane captured at Cernay has been added to the 22 guns and other trophies to be placed at the foot of the Alsace monument.

The embargo on the exportation of sugar from Jamaica, imposed recently by the local authorities, has been removed, except to countries hostile to Great Britain.

The Paris Excelsior yesterday published a message from Nish, Servia, saying that an Austrian monitor struck a mine in the Adriatic and was destroyed. The crew perished.

According to a newspaper published in the Netherlands, a friend of Roland Garros says that Garros is alive and well and that he did not smash a Zeppelin airship, as had been reported.

Election protests have been lodged by Liberals against Sir Rodmond Roblin, Dr. McFadden and J. J. Garland, successful provincial Conservative candidates in Dufferin, Emerson and Lakeside, Man., on usual allegations.

The first case of desertion in Kingston was reported yesterday. A member of the 14th Regiment doing duty at Fort Henry, tired of his job, and leaving his uniform on the railway tracks at the foot of Queen street, he left the city.

An Eccentric Novelist.

Charles Reade's liberal drawings upon "authorities" in his passion for accuracy of detail gave rise to some foolish charges of plagiarism, particularly in the case of his masterpiece, "The Cloister and the Hearth." His reply to the charges was characteristic and clinching. "I milked 300 cows for it," said he, "but the cheese I made is mine."

For eccentricities Reade can claim a high place even among authors, few of whom are without their fads. He could not write away from his own room, with its innumerable volumes of cuttings and indexes, and he could not write well, he declared, except when standing up. He never took lunch, terming that meal "an insult to one's breakfast," detested soup and beef, preferred herring to every other fish, was a connoisseur of wine, but never touched spirits, and loathed the very smell of tobacco.

Carson Once a Liberal.

Sir Edward Carson, the Ulster leader, is so averse to publicity that no opportunity for giving the public a truthful account of his admittedly remarkable career is permitted, and all sorts of erroneous statements are allowed to creep into the press. He was once a Liberal and a member of the National Liberal Club for twenty-eight years. But on the day the first Home Rule bill was introduced he wired from Dublin to have his named removed from the roll of members. Though pressed to remain on the ground that the club would in the future be equally available for Liberals who were Unionists and Liberals who were Separatists he was unyielding.

He Hits Back.

There had been a domestic spat at breakfast.

"You monster!" snapped the matron, who was always scolding. "You are not like my two former husbands. They were tender men."

"I never doubted that they were tender, Maria," ventured the meek man, "when you kept them in hot water all the time." And he just cleared the front porch two yards ahead of the rolling pin that followed him.

Fatal Disease.

A young painter who had just finished a picture insisted upon a friend calling to see it.

"There, now," enthused the artist, "you see my new picture! What's the matter with that?"

"I don't know," replied the bored friend, "but I should say it was a case of art failure."

Helping the Physicians.

Traveling in the train with my friend the doctor, writes a correspondent in the Manchester Guardian, I observed a fellow passenger earnestly reading a "popular" medical work issued in parts. "That kind of thing must be bad for your trade," I suggested, but the doctor smiled and denied my statement. "Quite the contrary," said he. "The first part has brought me nineteen cases of imaginary appendicitis, and I anticipate bronchitis and Bright's disease of a similar mild type will be prevalent among my patients when part B is issued, with all the more easily pronounced ailments to follow as the publication goes on."

Separated in Death.

It seems a strange irony of fate that Elizabeth Browning, the most devoted of wives, should be separated in death from her spouse. Though Robert Browning died in Venice, he was buried between Cowley and Chaucer in Westminster abbey, while that sweet mind that gave to a grateful public the "Sonnets from the Portuguese" enjoys its last sleep at the cemetery in Florence.—Baltimore American.

Wigs.

A passage in Polybius has been cited to prove that Hannibal wore a wig. Wigs were probably invented about the time of the first Roman emperors, for we are told that Otho had a scalp of fine leather with locks of hair upon it so well arranged as to seem natural.

A TERRIBLE DILEMMA

Ordeal Through Which a Brave Man Passed.

By PERLEY POORE SHEEHAN.

Pink Mead hadn't been living in Brooklyn very long, and he wasn't quite sure that he was at the right street as he signaled the conductor and worked his way off the crowded car.

It was one of those foggy, mysterious nights of early spring when every bare twig drips moisture.

As the car bowled heavily away Pink found himself in unrecognizable surroundings. Then he thought he saw a fence he recognized and started gayly down the street toward his new boarding house, half a block away.

He hadn't taken a dozen steps, however, before he had a queer, pervading certainty that he was wrong. The fog was getting thicker every second.

He paused, then started forward again and paused again. Just then a girl's voice hailed him.

"Oh, Mr. Mead! Is that you?" it asked.

It was a thrillingly sweet voice—a voice that would have appealed to Pink under any circumstances and one that no man was apt to forget.

Yet Pink was sure that this was the first time that he had ever heard it, and how had its owner known his name?

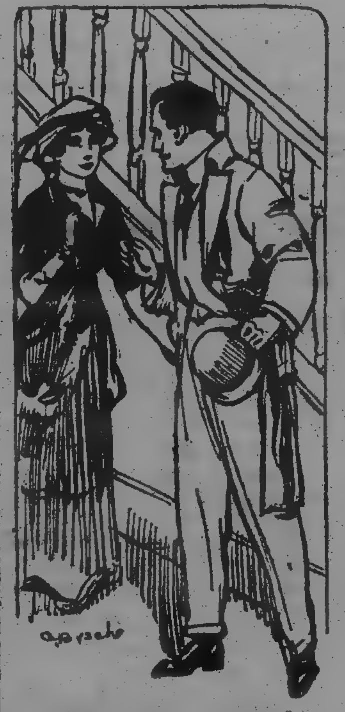
He stopped abruptly, with his hand on the fence.

Through a shallow depth of shrubbery and lawn he caught the dim outlines of a strange porch.

It was not the boarding house porch; of that he was sure, for the posts of the boarding house porch were set two by two. Nor was it the boarding house front yard.

There was a scurry of gravel, and almost before Pink had had time to affirm his identity he was looking down into the eyes of a girl who he instantly decided was a queen.

She was small and lithe and dark, with eyes that were all the larger because of the night and the fog. She looked up into his eyes with a half smile for a second, then, suddenly startled, repeated:



"BE AS SILENT AS YOU CAN."

"Oh, Mr. Mead, is that you?"

This time Pink didn't hesitate. He had his hat off instantly.

"That is my name," he answered blithely, "and you don't know how delighted I am to meet you, Miss"—

The girl raised her chin and turned her eyes aslant as one does who listens.

"Sh"—she warned him; "not so loud!"

Again Pink experienced that creeping sensation of there being a mistake somewhere, but at the same moment the girl swept open the gate.

"Come in," she said in that thrilling voice of hers; "we're all ready for you."

"That's awfully good of you," answered Pink, hesitating; "but, you see, I'm not exactly dressed for calling. However, if you"—

The girl smiled at him and started up the path. He followed.

He had always been of a sensitive and impressionable nature, despite his young and lusty six feet, and his heart was beating fast.

It was the long deferred adventure—the romance just touched with danger—that he had dreamed about ever since he was old enough to dream at all. He braced his shoulders.

He cast a quick glance to either side and sniffed the cool fragrance of the dripping shrubbery.

"This is almost dramatic," he said as he caught up with the girl on the porch steps.

"They didn't tell me you'd be so late," she thrilled softly.

"They?" he said, with a little laugh. "Who are these mysterious they?"

The girl looked at him with a mingling of surprise and annoyance, then slowly smiled.

"You joke," she whispered; "for them it's tragedy."

The last word caught Pink fairly.

For the fraction of a second it wilted him, and he felt an odd, trembling twitch at the base of his skull.

When he recovered himself the girl had tiptoed across the porch and opened a broad front door. He had scarcely reached her side before she switched on a dim light in the hall and left the porch in darkness.

Pink groped for words, but the girl turned with her finger on her lips. She looked so altogether frail and elfin as she stood there that the young man felt a momentary impulse to gather her into his arms for protection. He could put up a pretty fight on her behalf, he told himself.

In spite of the strangeness of the hour and his reception, there was nothing in the appearance of the hall itself to suggest the setting of a drama.

Apart from the dim red light that glowed overhead, the place had all the appearance of the ordinary comfortable home.

To the right was a hatrack, on which hung curiously a rather too generous supply of hats and coats. There was nothing about this raiment to indicate that their owners differed widely from Pink himself—velvet alpines, derbies and one silk hat hanging arrogantly on the highest hook.

To the left, where he felt must be the parlor, a couple of sliding doors which were not quite closed disclosed a strip of impenetrable blackness.

In spite of himself, he stared at this fringe of mystery with a twinge of hypnotic interest, then started visibly as he caught an almost inaudible sound of movement.

It was a very little sound!

It was something as though bare feet had been shifted on carpet or garments had been displaced by an involuntary movement of the body.

He looked quickly at the girl. She seemed more beautiful than ever—dressed simply in some veil-like stuff, her long black hair crowning her small face and falling in two heavy braids to her waist.

He saw now how intent her large eyes were, and the blood rushed to his cheeks as he saw the trace of a mocking smile on her lips.

"You look as though you were frightened," she whispered so softly that he could hardly hear her. And then:

"You're perfectly free, Mr. Mead, to go or remain."

"Count on me," whispered Pink seriously. And once more there seemed to be mockery in the girl's smile.

For a moment they stood looking at each other steadily, as young people of opposite sexes are apt to do when the hour is late and hall lights are dim. Then the girl said:

"And since you are so brave, Mr. Mead, you will go upstairs and take the first room to the right. Be as silent as you can." She reflected a moment while she looked at Mead curiously and added as if by afterthought:

"Of course you'll defend yourself if—if— Good night!"

She suddenly turned and glided between the sliding doors to the left.

Scarcely pausing, he began to mount the stairs.

The first room to the right, which the girl had indicated, was apparently a small bedroom. This much he gathered as he groped about it in the darkness. He felt a chair, a bed, a dresser. He had no matches, and he passed his hand over the wall in search of the electric light switch.

He found it seemingly at last and gave it a quick pressure. Instead of the flood of light he expected, he heard a strident ring in a distant part of the house, and he desisted. Moreover, he wasn't so sure now that he wanted light.

If he was to be a target for unknown peril he didn't see why he should illuminate himself.

A shuffling step approached the door, and he caught the faint brushing sound of a hand groping for the knob.

The hand rested on the knob, there was a muttered exclamation, and the footfalls shuffled rapidly away. Pink slid over to the door and listened.

A little farther down the hall another door was opened and closed.

There followed an interval of heavy silence, then something that again set Mead's blood to leaping, but this time with a sense of outrage and shame. It was a low, chuckling laugh.

* * * * * * *

When Pink Mead awoke next morning, still fully dressed and highly uncomfortable from having passed the night in a chair, he first sensed the familiar aroma of coffee and sausages. He looked about him.

The chamber where he found himself, if small, was conventional and immaculate. Glittering sunlight was streaming through the window, and as he came into full mastery of his sight he looked out upon a familiar landscape.

Thus fear and mystery had fled with the night—such things could never lurk in a room so clean and bright. Still, where was he, and how, and why? And who was the girl?

He met her in the lower hall, where he had left her the night before. She was looking more charming than ever.

"We were all so frightened yesterday," she said, "when the boarding house caught fire—and right next door!"

"My boarding house?" gasped Mead.

"And I hope you won't be too uncomfortable here," the girl went on, "while they're getting things into shape again. They said that they'd telephoned you. But, really, last night you acted like a man in a trance. Come in and meet my aunt, who was asleep last night when you came."

There was a chuckling laugh on the stairs behind them, and Mead turned to see a mild, thin man whom he had often encountered in the street cars. "And Mr. Johnson," the girl added, "a fellow boarder."

ALMOST FAINTED IN THE STREET

In Daily Fear Of Death—Until "Fruit-a-tives" Brought Relief.

CHATHAM, ONT., April 3rd. 1913.

"Some two years ago, I was a great sufferer from Indigestion. One day my eye caught a billboard of "Fruit-a-tives" and I said to myself "if Fruit-a-tives will build me up like that, it is good enough for me". I bought some. After taking these wonderful tablets for only three weeks, I found myself wonderfully improved. In a short time longer, I cured myself entirely. My case was no light one, either, Gas would often form in my stomach and I was in daily fear that it would get around my heart and kill me. "Fruit-a-tives" is the only remedy for Indigestion".

FALL FASHIONS

Height to Be a Requirement In Smart Hats For Fall.

"Extreme height is a note of the new fall models," says the Millinery Trade Review. "And this does not mean that there will not be any flat trimmings, as silk and velvet fruits and flowers give good promise for fall. Coque in its many clever new designs is being shown. Pompons of this material in bronzed effect, the shape of an artichoke, are immensely clever, being placed on the top of a rather high crowned hat in clusters of two or three.

"Other models show bronzed coque forming military pompons, accompanied by a high, fancy effect. Curled coque in black, white and all the smart new shades for fall are well thought of. Manufacturers of ostrich feathers are showing numbers of new effects for fall, which include burnt effects in high fancies. The fall season always makes the demand for ostrich stronger, and good results are expected."

Chairs With Pockets.

No porch is completely equipped without at least one chair that is furnished with a pocket for books and magazines and needlework. These chairs are no longer a novelty. And, like everything that has passed the stage of novelty, they can be had for a reasonable price. One of substantial make, with a back that measures twenty inches above the seat—and that is high enough to support anybody's shoulder blades—costs $7, with a tasteful cretonne cushion and a coat of brown or green stain included.

Flower Supports.

To go in the veranda jardinieres there are long wooden sticks, painted green and topped with little wooden birds of brilliant hues or with brownies or gnomes.

These are thrust into the vase or jardiniere when long stemmed flowers are used, and the heads of some of the flowers are tied to posts to keep them from falling.

These posts can also be used as stakes in the garden. They are very picturesque wherever they are used.

Floral Laces.

Among the decidedly effective ideas in colors are the net top laces with floral patterns painted in realistic shades, says the Dry Goods Economist. In some instances the beauty of the designs is greatly enhanced by an outlining thread of silver or gold.

Only the daintiest flowers are represented in these painted effects, and so delicate are the tints that their appearance is lovely indeed. The painted floral idea also appears in fine chantilly.

Minnesota's 1913 fire loss was $3.88 per capita.

BEFORE COLUMBUS

What is known as the Fletcher Runic stone, which was discovered near Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, more than a century ago, is being displayed at the Centenary Exhibition of Norway now in progress at Christiania.

For more than fifty years strange characters on the stone baffled scientists, but Mr. Henry Phillips, jr., deciphered the inscription as "Harkussen Men Varu" (Harka's son addressed the men").

Mr. Phillips found that in an expedition of Norsemen which left Greenland in 1007 the name of Harki occurred. These adventurers took all kinds of live stock with them for the purpose of establishing a colony in Vinland (Massachusetts), but on their way they landed and partially explored Nova Scotia (Markland). To celebrate the event, Harki, one of the chieftains, addressed his followers, and it is suggested that this stone was inscribed in commemoration of the event.

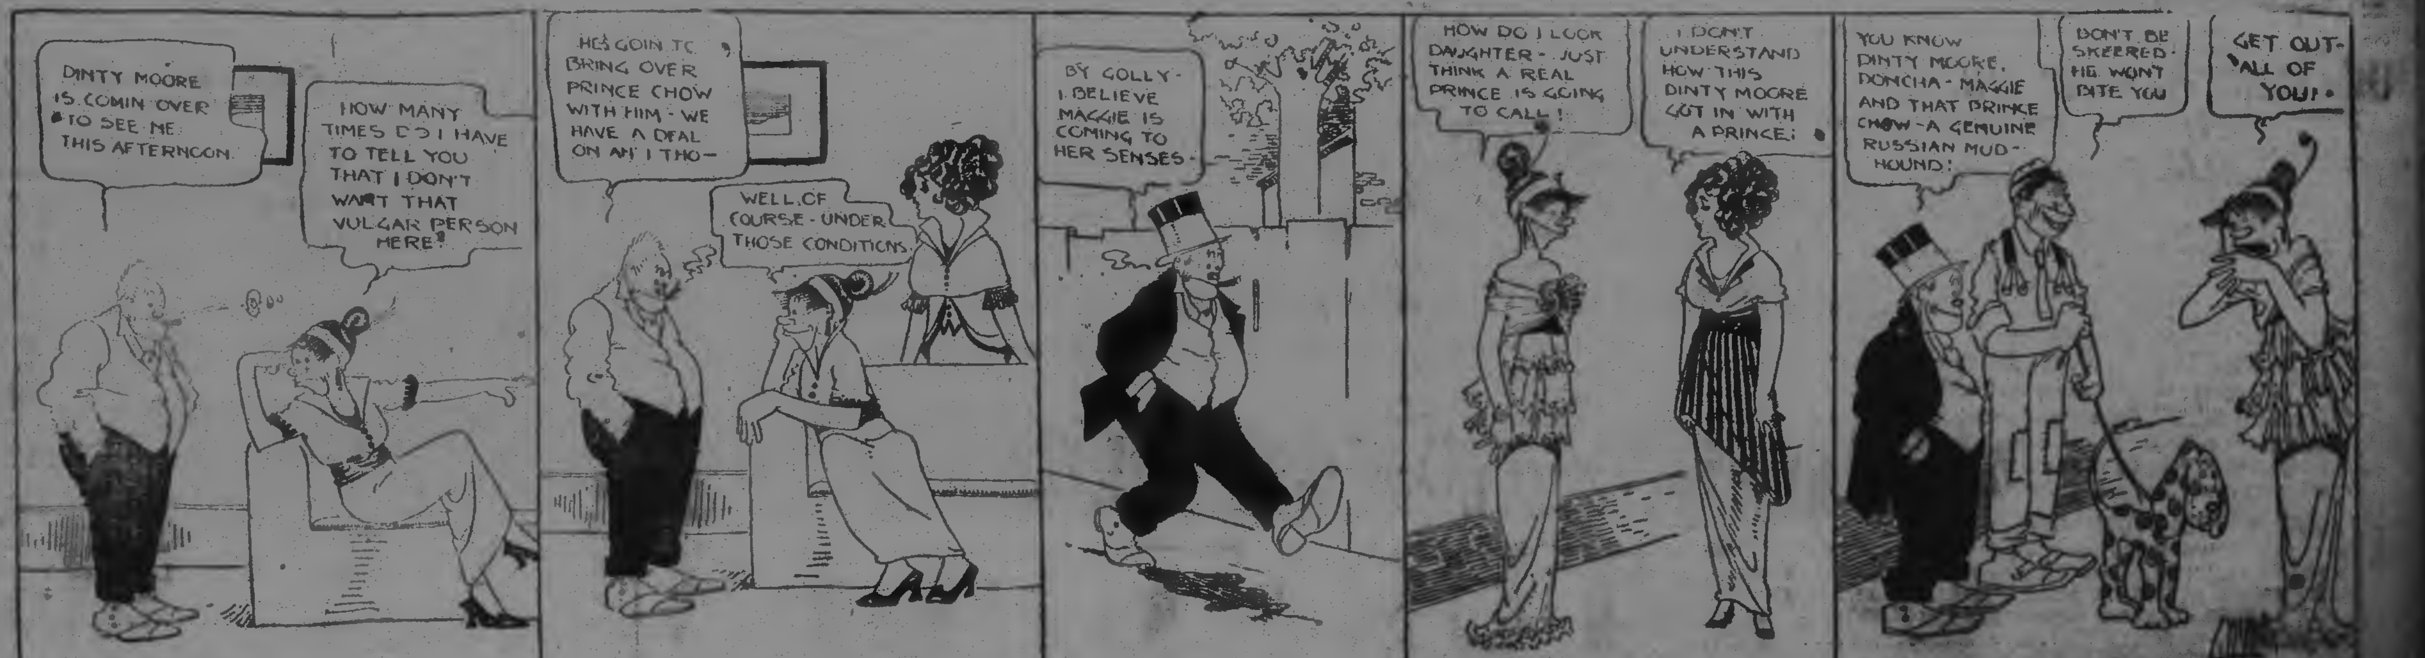
BRINGING UP FATHER

BY GEORGE McMANUS



DINTY MOORE IS COMIN OVER TO SEE ME THIS AFTERNOON.
HOW MANY TIMES DO I HAVE TO TELL YOU THAT I DON'T WANT THAT VULGAR PERSON HERE?
HE'S GOIN TO BRING OVER PRINCE CHOW WITH HIM - WE HAVE A DEAL ON AN' I THO—
WELL, OF COURSE - UNDER THOSE CONDITIONS.
BY GOLLY - I BELIEVE MAGGIE IS COMING TO HER SENSES -
HOW DO I LOOK DAUGHTER - JUST THINK A REAL PRINCE IS GOING TO CALL!
I DON'T UNDERSTAND HOW THIS DINTY MOORE GOT IN WITH A PRINCE.
YOU KNOW DINTY MOORE, DONCHA - MAGGIE AND THAT PRINCE CHOW - A GENUINE RUSSIAN MUD-HOUND!
DON'T BE SKEERED - HE WON'T BITE YOU GET OUT - ALL OF YOU!

AFTER ALL

There is no more refreshing, nutritious or palatable summer food than

PURE ICE CREAM

Children thrive on it; fever patients find it a splendid diet; doctors recommend it; and we make it out of pure, rich cream, the best of sugar, the finest vanilla and the juice of ripe, selected fruit. Try it.

WILLIAM McCOLLOUGH PASSES AT BELLEVILLE

In the death of Mr. William McCollough, which occurred in Belleville Sunday afternoon, probably Belleville's oldest citizen has gone to his reward. Deceased, who was 95 years of age, was born in Armagh, Ireland. He came to Canada 79 years ago, and since then had resided in Tyendinaga, Sidney and Belleville. For some years he had lived a retired life there. Although in feeble health for years, Mr. McCollough was able to be out on June 29 and record his vote for the Whitney government candidate. For many years deceased had been connected with the Orange society, being a member of Benjamin lodge of Belleville. In religion he was a Methodist, and in politics a Conservative. He was a gentleman well known and highly respected by all who knew him. A family of four sons and two daughters survive. The sons are: James and George, of Sidney; John and William, of Guelph. The daughters are: Mrs. Benjamin McDonald, of Tyendinaga, and Miss Sarah Jane, at home.

Small Towns Club Together.

OTTAWA, Aug. 25.—The Militia Department announces that a number of small western Ontario towns, who do not feel able to render assistance in a substantial manner individually, are clubbing together to lend aid to the Dominion. On Sir Adam Beck's suggestion several gifts of horses are being made and already there has been a generous response to the idea, a fact welcomed at headquarters.

CZAR'S TROOPS CROSSING EAST PRUSSIA WITH SEVENTY-MILE FRONT

Germans Are Retiring Wasting the Country as They go---Decisive Battle is Likely Within a Few Days---Russia Holds all the Important Railway Junction Points in the District.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 25.—The victorious Russian army is now advancing through east Prussia along a front more than seventy miles in extent. Taking Napoleon's famous battle fields of Sylan and Friedland, 25 miles southeast of Koenigsburg, as the centre, the actual position of the Russian forces is indicated with sufficient exactness.

The Germans are retiring along the entire front, burning and wasting their own country as they go.

Those in a position to know predict that the decisive battle on Germany's eastern front will develop in the next three or four days, and that if it does not actually precede the determination of the great conflict on the French frontier the two struggles will so nearly coincide as to make it impractible for Germany to detach reinforcements to help block the advance of the Russians.

An official bulletin issued at a late hour last night announcing occupation by Russian force of a number of points in German territory confirms the forecast of the Russian plan of campaign. The Russians have put themselves in possession of the important railway junctions running into the interior of Germany and connecting with Russia.

Rusia's two armies are now one army advancing along an unbroken front of more than seventy miles.

French and British Are Driven Back

an attack was being made on the city. Otherwise the French front has not been modified.

It is apparent that the Kaiser has hurled his entire army of 3,000,000 men, active and reserve, against the French and British, in an effort to break through the lines of the allied armies and force an entrance farther into France in his haste to get his army actively engaged in French territory before the arrival of the Russian hosts.

BALANCE OF SOUTH AFRICAN WAR FUND TO BE USED NOW

Ottawa, Aug. 25.—The balance remaining from the amount subscribed in Canada for relief work in connection with the South African war is being transferred to the relief fund which is being raised for the benefit of those who will take part in the present war.

The Canadian Patriotic Fund association received subscriptions for relief in the case of the South African war totalling $340,975.63 and during the past fourteen years interest accrued to the amount of $59,924.96, making the total fund $400,000.59. Of this amount the trustees have distributed $315,282.30. There was $91,766.73 paid to widows, orphans and dependents of South African volunteers, $191,516.57 to invalid and disabled soldiers, $31,999 to dependents separate at home or to those who were left in need in Canada, while the troops were in South Africa. The administration of the fund entailed an expenditure of $6,465.43 and there is a thousand dollars appropriated, but not yet paid. This leaves a balance of $78,152.86 which the closing of the Canadian Patriotic Fund association allows those who so carefully and satisfactorily administered the South African fund during the past fourteen years now to turn over to the relief of the new need which the despatch of the expeditionary force has created in Canada.

CROP WILL BE MOVED QUICKLY

Sir Donald Mann Expects Normal Times Soon

Winnipeg, Aug. 25.—Sir Donald Mann, vice-president of the C.N.R., spent an hour in the city yesterday on his way West on an inspection trip. He was accompanied by M. H. McLeod, general manager. Sir Donald expects a quick movement of the crops this year at all points along the line. He considers that busines conditions are, notwithstanding the effects of the war, in wonderful shape, and just as soon as the situation clears up a little in Europe, Canada will enjoy normal trade conditions.

ILVER BULLION FROM EMPRESS

New York, Aug. 25.—In addition to the purser's safe, the recovery of which was reported last week, divers have succeeded in raising $250,000 in silver bullion from the hull of the sunken steamship Empress of Ireland. Word to this effect was received by a salvage company here doing the work. All the mail bags also have been found, it was said.

OBITUARY

MARIE DOROTHY McPHERSON.

Marie Dorothy, the four year and 6 months' old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. R. J. McPherson, 85 Aylmer Street, passed away at St. Joseph's Hospital yesterday evening. The child took ill on Saturday with appendicitis. She was removed to the hospital last evening and underwent an operation, and failed to rally. The funeral will take place tomorrow morning at ten o'clock to St. Peter's Cemetery.

WILFRID D. MORROW.

Orono News

A brief mention was made in the columns of this paper last week of the death of Wilfrid D. Morrow which sad event occurred at Lindsay on Thursday, Aug. 6th, 1914. He was the eldest son of Mr. Wm. Morrow of Peterboro and was born at Pontypool in the year 1882, where he passed the early years of his life.

He early showed splendid mental ability and at the age of 17 was the holder of a certificate as a public school teacher. He taught at Kendal, Pontypool and S. Monaghan. One may have an idea of his splendid ability from the fact that at his final examination he made 1180 marks out of a possible 1240 or over 95 per cent. His services were much sought after and he was for two years teacher in the Peterboro Business College.

Strong inducements were held out to him to go west and he moved to Edmonton in the spring of 1911 where he secured employment with the real estate firm of McGrath & Colgate and afterwards became the manager of the John Ross & Sons, at a good salary. His health failed, however, last October and he returned to Peterboro and spent the winter. He appeared to have nearly recovered and four months ago went to Lindsay and spent the summer among his wife's people.

On the first of August he had an attack of appendicitis and was operated upon on Tuesday but did not survive the shock and died on the Thursday following.

Not only was Wilfrid a young man of great mental ability and good education but he was a young man of sterling christian character. He was for a long period Secy.-Treas. of George St. Methodist Sunday School, Peterboro, and was always active in helping others to live the better life. He was married to Miss Mabel Graham of Lindsay who with one son Ross at the age of four years are left to mourn together with his father and mother and six brothers and three sisters residing in Peterboro, who have the sympathy of a very large circle of relatives and friends.

Deceased was a nephew of Messrs. A. Morrow, Kirby, and James Morrow of Orono.

MORE EXPECTED OF THE DOMINIONS

LONDON, Aug. 25. — The English papers are warning the people that the war is only beginning, and that they must be prepared for a long struggle, which will tax the resources and manhood of the nation to the utmost limit. While appreciating all that the colonies have done, they expect colonies with the population of Canada and Australia to contribute much more in men and money to the Empire than they have yet done.

QUALITY CUSTOMERS

The most influential people of this city and surrounding locality are coming to our Optical Parlors regularly — placing their confidence in us and our goods, and imparting that confidence to their circle of friends. The public would not have confidence in us if we did not merit that confidence by giving the very best Optical Service.

Our motto has always been to give $1.00 value or a little more for every $1.00 that is spent with us. We want every patient that we fit with glasses perfectly satisfied. We are always pleased to make any necessary changes, until the patient is perfectly satisfied free of charge.

The thousands of records of satisfied customers which we have on file and which are open for your inspection at any time, show that the people of this city and vicinity appreciate our honest efforts to give them the very best Optical Service that can be had anywhere. RADIAL LINE EXTENSIONS MUST WAIT TILL PAVING OPERATIONS ARE RESUMED

Proceeding With Work Now Would Mean an Extra Bill of Expense For Company.

A couple of months ago the proposed work of extending the present Charlotte Street line of the Radial Railway Co. to the Boundary and south as far as Patterson Street was expected to provide work for a large number of men and thereby alleviate to a certain extent the hard times, bound to be prevalent during the coming six months. When the money stringency arrived, the city found it impossible to go ahead with the street paving and even had to shave the anticipated civic improvements. This necessarily meant a flood on the labor market and the only possible relief appeared to be the work on the street railway.

The Review has made inquiries into the matter and finds that the Radial Railway Co. have their material, at least the greater portion of it, at present stored in this city but they are unable to commence work till the city is prepared to commence the paving. The work on the corner of Park and Charlotte Street it very extensive and will be after the plan of the existing arrangements at the corner of Charlotte and George Street. Laying this special steel work involves a great deal of expense and the company deems it advisable to wait till the paving contract is under way and make the one break in the traffic suffice for both purposes.

If it were possible that the city would stand the paving over for four or five years, then it would be worth the trouble to perform the work twice but the delay may be figured in months so the Radial Railway Co. will wait.

When the work is completed and the cars in operation the cars on the new extension will run from the corner of Patterson and Boundary to Hunter and George. The Jackson Park cars will terminate at Charlotte and Park and passengers going to the main section of the city will be transferred. The Brownton line cars will run as they do at present. The corner of Charlotte and Park Streets will be paved and hence transfers can be made without inconvenience. It will be some busy corner when four cars come together every ten minutes.

SALVATION ARMY TO TAKE UP WORK IN NORTH MONAGHAN

The Salvation Army is holding a public meeting at Brayley's schoolhouse, North Monaghan, on Thursday night at 8 o'clock, with a view to establishing a Sunday school in that district and doing outpost work this fall and winter, holding a meeting once on Sunday and once or twice during the week. This district is three miles from any place of worship and the Army has some of its own people there who will serve, as well as any others who wish to assist.

Adjutant McElhiney will conduct the services and the work will be under his supervision.

WHAT THE DOMINION HOUSE DID DURING THE WAR SESSION

The war session of Parliament clothed the Government with war powers. It authorized them to take measures for the defence, good order, and good government of the country, including : Censorship, arrest, detention, exclusion, and deportation. Control of harbors and ships, transportation by land, air, or water, trading export, import and manufacture, appropriation and control of property.

It gave them power to meet the financial situation by making advances of Dominion notes to the banks on the pledge of approved securities, a committee of the bankers advising the Government as to the security which shall be sufficient.

Making bank notes legal tenders, providing for emergency circulation of bank notes, equal to 15 per cent. of the paid-up capital, throughout the year instead of only during the autumn and winter.

Taking power to suspend the redemption of Dominion notes in gold. Declaring a moratorium.

It increased the power of the Government to issue Dominion notes by providing that they may issue $50,000,000 instead of $30,000,000, with only 25 per cent. of gold as a reserve.

It voted a war credit of $50,000,000. It provided for increased revenue by higher customs and excise taxes, chiefly on copper, sugar, liquors, and tobacco.

It passed a Bill to incorporate the Canadian patriotic fund for the relief of the families of those who go to the front.

It amended the law regarding the Imperial naturalization by providing that in certain cases a married woman may retain her British citizenship although her husband may become an alien.

A TEST CASE AT POLICE COURT

Alleged Breach of Transient Traders By-Law

A test case over an alleged breach of the Transient Traders' Bylaw will in all probability feature tomorrow morning's Police Court. The defendant is Albert E. Peak, agent for a Toronto clothing firm. It appears that Peak has been going around the city showing samples and having prospective customers call at his room at his hotel. There he does the measuring and accepts a deposit on the order. In doing so he claims he does not break the bylaw but the Chief of Police thinks otherwise. He has been summoned to appear before the Magistrate tomorrow morning to answer to the above mentioned charge.

ALL THE PROCEEDS TOWARD THE FUND

Under the auspices of the "Hospital Ship and War Fund" Committee, the generous offer of the Empire Theatre by Dr. F. L. SERGT. BROWN IS RETURNING WITH HIS BRIDE

Police Chief Thompson received a letter from Police Sergt. John Brown this morning, written on August 11th at West Wemyss, Fifeshire, Scotland. Sergt. Brown states that "I have been very busy with matrimonial affairs but the worst part is over—I was married on August the seventh."

He has their passage booked for August 22 and will sail unless something unforeseen intervenes. Everything is at war prices in the land of the heather and in some parts, sugar is selling for 12 cents per pound.

Statistics show that the United States now has more than 6,000,000 factory employees and 1,600,000 railway employees.

DOCTORS WILL MAKE RIGID TEST OF MEN

Doctors Are Now Deciding the Fate of the Men at Val Cartier.

VALCARTIER, Que., Aug. 25.—Lt.-Col. A. T. Shillington, of Ottawa, senior medical recruiting officer, assisted by a staff of about twenty physicians from several eastern cities, will decide the fate of many of the militiamen encamped here to-day. Early in the morning the weeding out process was begun, and it will probably take more than a week medically to examine all the volunteers. Ten tents have been erected for the purpose. Despite the fact that a stiff examination of all recruits took place before they were enlisted, the inspection here will be more severe, and there is a possibility of many being struck off the rolls. The men found to be unfit for service will be sent to their respective homes immediately.

There are nearly 15,000 men in camp to-day, the arrivals yesterday having been much lighter than anticipated. Only three regiments reached the camp, the 53rd, 54th and 84th, all from the eastern townships.

ATTACK ON CHARLEROI.

French Troops Still Holding Belgian Town Says Correspondent.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—"Since yesterday morning the Germans have been attacking Charleroi, which the French are holding," says The Daily Mail's Ostend correspondent, telegraphing Monday. "The Germans invaded the town from the Montagny side and came out by the turning bridges in front of the railway station.

"There was a hot fight for the possession of the bridges as well as for the railway station and other buildings.

"German shells are falling in the town. The houses on the left of the Hotel Europe, as seen from the railway station, appeared to be seriously damaged. A mass of French artillery and troops in long lines poured out, it is said, toward Charleroi, and the Germans were driven back with a serious loss."

Belgium Alleges Atrocities.

LONDON, Aug. 25. — The Belgian Legation issued a note last night protesting against threats of reprisals on the part of Germany and giving special details which, it says, have been verified by the Department of Justice.

Among the alleged acts committed by German soldiers was the burning of the village of Linsneau on the night of Aug. 10 and the beating with the butts of guns of eleven men, all of whom died. The pretext given was that civilians had killed a German officer, but investigation by the military authorities, according to the statement established that this man had been killed in battle by Belgian soldiers.

Germans Issue Drastic Order.

PARIS, Aug. 25.—A correspondent at Basle telegraphs that a notice has been issued by the German prefect of Upper Alsace, warning the citizens, on the order of the commanding general, that if the inhabitants take part in the fight against Germany they will be shot, their local burgomasters also will be shot and the localities will be demolished.

The troops have orders to shoot anyone who hides Frenchmen. Access to the battefields is strictly forbidden except to persons bearing a permit from the local burgomaster. Any one pillaging bodies will also be shot.

Economic Crisis In Germany.

LONDON, Aug. 25. — The Frankforter Zeitung, a copy of which has been received here, declares that the German economic crisis is becoming very grave. At Karlsruhe the price of tea has gone up 50 per cent. The municipal council at Karlsruhe will take steps to regulate the price of foodstuffs.

Dutch papers publish a telegram from Berlin stating that an important manifestation took place before the imperial palace on account of the economic crisis. The crowd, according to the despatch, called for bread and foodstuffs.

Edible Flowers of India.

Many edible flowers, it appears, are to be found in India. One of the most appreciated grows on a tree about which we have very little information, but which in the country itself is named the "mhowad." The natives consume an enormous number of these flowers, whose pale yellow corollae are pulpy and thick, and they prepare them in various ways. When they are fresh they are put in cakes, to which they give a sweet flavor, but they are more especially used for making bread after they have been dried and reduced to flour. By allowing them to ferment a kind of wine is produced, and by distilling them a brandy is obtained of which the Hindus are very fond.

TSINGTAU BLOCKADED.

Siege of German Port In China Begun by Allied Fleets.

PEKIN, Aug. 25.—The blockade of Tsingtau, the fortified seaport of Kiao Chau, has begun.

British, French and Russian vessels of war are taking part in the movement.

Up to the present time only British regiments have received orders to cooperate with the Japanese in the operations against Kiao Chau on the land side. The French, however, are expecting orders to assist the British. There probably will not be more than two or three regiments from each nation.

No reliable information has reached here yet as to any Japanese landing on the Kiao Chau territory.

Fired at Laurier's Car.

OTTAWA, Aug. 25. — What is thought to have been a bullet from a revolver or rifle, pierced the glass windshield of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's limousine on O'Connor street. No one was in the car at the time but the chauffeur, Aldege Giroux, who was on his way for Lady Laurier, who had been making a call. Giroux says he heard a whizzing sound close to his head and then a click as the shield was pierced. He stopped the car, but could see no one. The hole in the glass shield is cut clean, just as if done by a bullet.

French Mint Coining Silver.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—It is reported that the French mint is rushing the coinage of silver, and has issued about 4,500,000 frs. in the last ten days. It is expected 15,000,000 frs. in silver will be coined on this movement.

Fail To Invest Ostend.

OSTEND, Aug. 25.—The Germans have failed to invest this city thoroughly. Uhlans who got as far as the outskirts and learned there were no troops in the city, proceeded southward.

Woman's Magic.

Lady Hester Lucy Stanhope, when staying at Walmer Castle in 1804, quite unwittingly accomplished the feat of changing the uniform of a regiment of the county militia. The anecdote, which illustrates a curious streak of vanity in old-time army officers, appears in an account of Lady Stanhope's life by Mrs. Frank Hamel.

"Somebody asked me before a great many officers what I thought of them," said Lady Stanhope, "and I said that they looked like so many tinned harlequins. One day, soon after, I was riding through Walmer village, when who should pop out upon me but the colonel, dressed in entirely new regimentals, with different facings, more like those of a regiment of the line.

"'Pray pardon me, Lady Hester,' he began. So I stopped, and he addressed me. 'Pray pardon me,' said the colonel, 'but I wish to know if you approve of our new uniform.' Of course I made him turn about, and I inspected him round and round—pointed with my whip as I sat on horseback, first here and then there—told him the waist was too short and wanted half a button more, the collar was too high, and so on. And in a short time the whole regiment turned out with new clothes."

Pigeons Beat an M. P.

Mr. Handel Booth, M.P., was defeated by his constituents' pigeons in the recent race from the House of Commons to Pontefract—a distance of 170 miles.

The birds were released at a quarter to ten in Palace Yard in the presence of Mr. Lloyd George, the Speaker, several M.P.'s, and a large number of spectators. Mr. Booth at the same time left in a taxi-cab and express to Doncaster, which left King's Cross at 10.10.

Meanwhile the pigeons, with a favorable wind, were traveling to Pontefract at a pace so terrific that the first arrived there at 1.35, or 3 hrs. 50 mins. for the 170 miles—more than forty-four miles an hour.

Mr. Booth only arrived at Pontefract fifteen minutes after the first bird. Nineteen pigeons were there before him, and to the owner of each he presented half a sovereign.

George IV.'s Hoardings.

One of the most inveterate hoarders on record was George IV. Not only was he averse to destroying books and papers, but he preferred everything that could possibly be kept. When he died all the suits of clothes he had worn for twenty years were discovered and sold by public auction. His executors also found secreted in various desks, drawers and cupboards numerous purses and pocketbooks crammed full of money to the extent, it is said, of $100,000, together with more sentimental treasures in the form of locks of hair from the tresses of forgotten beauties of the court. — London Graphic.

Cloven Hoof and Red Herring.

During a debate in the Australian House of Representatives a Labor member charged the Ministry with "hiding under the garments of their purity the cloven hoof which is to undermine the democratic institutions of this country." Another member taunted an opponent with "having climbed down the back of a red herring."—London Mail.

Crown Prince Dead?

LONDON Aug. 25—Refugees coming from Germany state, according to The Evening Standard, that reports persist that Crown Prince Frederick William is dead.

This is the latest of a series of reports representing that the heir to the throne had been stabbed by a Socialist, had been wounded in battle and other stories of a similar character

THE MARKETS

Latest Quotations in Grain, Dairy Products, Live Stock, etc.

CHICAGO, Aug. 24.—Profit-taking was the feature of the wheat market today, but Saturday's advance was fairly well held. Final prices ranged ⅛c higher for September to ½c lower. Corn closed ½c to 1c down, oats ¼c higher for September to ½c lower, and provisions 7½c to 50c depressed. Wheat opened easy, bulged, reacted to the lowest of the day and then steadied around Saturday's close. The September-December difference narrowed to 4c.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, Aug. 24.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 103 cars, comprising 19 7 cattle, 1269 hogs, 605 sheep and lambs and 235 calves.

Butchers' Cattle.

Choice steers, $8.60 to $9, and one extra choice load at $10.10; loads of good, $8.25 to $8.50; medium, $7.50 to $7.75; common to medium, $7.25 to $7.50; inferior heifers, $6.50 to $7; choice cows, $6.75 to $7; good cows, $6.25 to $6.50; medium cows, $5.75 to $6; common cows, $3 to $4.50; choice bulls, $6.75 to $7.25; common bulls, $5 to $6.25.

Stockers and Feeders.

Deliveries were moderate and demand fair. Prices were about steady on a slow market, as buyers as a rule wanted better quality. Choice steers, $7 to $7.40; medium steers at $6.75 to $7; stockers, $5.50 to $6.50.

Milkers and Springers.

Choice milkers and springers sold at $75 to $100; good, $60 to $70; medium to good, $45 to $55.

Veal Calves.

Receipts moderate and values practically unchanged. Choice veal calves $10 to $10.50; good, $8.50 to $9.50; medium, $7.50 to $8.50; common, $6.50 to $7.50; inferior at $5.50 to $6.50.

Sheep and Lambs.

Sheep, light ewes, $5.75 to $6.25; heavy ewes and rams, $4 to $5.50; yearlings, $6.75 to $7; lambs, $7 to $8.50; culls, $5.50 to $6.

Hogs.

Selects fed and watered $10, and $10.25 weighed off cars.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Aug. 24.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, west end market, the receipts of live stock for week ending Aug. 22 were 2600 cattle, 1800 sheep and lambs, 2600 hogs and 1100 calves. The offerings on the market for sale this morning amounted to 1800 cattle, 1000 sheep and lambs, 1500 hogs and 800 calves.

The feature of the trade continues to be the brisk demand from local packers, for canning stock, and as more than 50 per cent. of the offerings of cattle were that grade a very active trade was done at firm prices. Sales of bulls were made in round lots at $5 to $5.50, and cows at $3.90 to $4.50 per 100 pounds. The reason for such a brisk demand for this class at this season of the year is the fact that packers generally have received large orders from the Dominion Government for canned beef, and the indications are that the trade in this class will continue active until these orders are filled. There was no important change in the condition of the market for butchers' cattle, prices being well maintained under a fairly good demand and small supplies. A few loads of choice steers changed hands at $8.50 to $8.75, and small lots at $9 per 100 pounds, but the demand was principally for good steers at $8.25 to $8.50.

EAST BUFFALO LIVE STOCK.

EAST BUFFALO, N.Y., Aug. 24.—Cattle—Receipts, 5000; slow, good, steady; others, steady; prime steers, $9.25 to $9.75; shipping, $8.50 to $9; butchers', $7.50 to $8.50; heifers, $6.50 to $8.25; cows, $4 to $7.25; bulls, $5 to $7.50; stockers and feeders, $6.25 to $7.50; stock heifers, $5.25 to $6.

Veals—Receipts, 1425; active; $5 to $12.

Hogs—Receipts, 14,000; slow, heavy, $9.40 to $9.50; mixed, $9.50 to $9.55; yorkers, $9.25 to $9.60; pigs, $8.75 to $9; roughs, $8.15 to $8.25; stags, $6.50 to $7.50.

Sheep and lambs—Receipts, 6000; active, steady; lambs, $5 to $9; yearlings, $4.50 to $7; wethers, $6 to $6.25; ewes, $2.50 to $5.75; sheep, mixed, $5.75 to $6.

German Paper Threatens.

LONDON, Aug. 25. — The London newspapers yesterday quoted the German newspaper Taglische Rubdechau as declaring that Belgium bitterly will rue the day she dared to oppose her mighty neighbor. Great Britain, the German newspaper also says, will pay dearly for her interference in this war by seeing the permanent establishment of a German naval base on the coast of Belgium.

The Pan-Germanic organ declares that the portions of Belgium now overrun by the German army will be permanently incorporated in the German Empire.

Irving's Distrust.

In her memoirs Ellen Terry says of Henry Irving: "Stoker and Loveday were daily—nay, hourly—associated for many years with Irving; but, after all, did they or any one else really know him? And what was Henry Irving's attitude? I believe, myself, that he never wholly trusted his friends and never admitted them to his intimacy, although they thought he did, which was the same thing to them."

SCARE FOR GUARDS AT FORT HENRY

Two Men Held as Spies Secreted Knives on Their Person

KINGSTON, Aug. 25. — A scare was created at Fort Henry yesterday when it was found that two of the German spies incarcerated there had concealed a couple of knives on their persons, which had been given to them to eat their meals. They were confiscated by a guard.

The horse used by the Austrian convict, who made his escape from the penitentiary, was found tied to a tree in Ferguson's Bush, ten miles from Kingston yesterday afternoon. There is no trace of the convict.

J. H. Berger, an ex-German officer, was taken here from Windsor and is now a prisoner at Fort Henry. He was placed under charge of a guard from the 14th Regiment.

First British Casualties.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—The first list of the casualties sustained by the British expeditionary army on the continent was published here yesterday.

It contains but three names. One of them is that of the Earl of Leven and Melville, a lieutenant in the Second Dragoons, Royal Scots Greys, who was dangerously wounded Aug. 22, apparently in the cavalry fighting at Waterloo. The other wounded men are a sergeant of the Royal Flying Corps, and a captain of engineers.

Italy Threatens Austria.

GENEVA, Aug. 25.—(Via Paris.)—Italian troops, according to thoroughly reliable information reaching here, are concentrating on the Austrian frontier.

The French frontier on Switzerland has been virtually stripped of its garrisons, owing to partial mobilization by individual summons and not by public order.

According to reports in Geneva, the Italian army has been raised to 800,000 men.

Holland Seizes Wheat.

OTTAWA, Aug. 25. — J. T. Lithgow, Canadian trade commissioner at Rotterdam, Holland, has cabled the Department of Trade and Commerce that Holland has seized all the wheat in the warehouses and on ships in Dutch waters. It is believed the seizures include a large amount of Canadian wheat. No explanations is given.

The Great Northern Railway Company will install gas electric motorcars for its short-line work.

More Food Advances.

MONTREAL, Aug. 25. — The following advances in prices went into effect in Montreal yesterday, in addition to the one cent advance in bread, previously announced:

Cocoa 10 per cent, coffee 5 cents per pound, biscuits (sweetened, imported) 25 per cent., jellies and jams (imported) 25 per cent., jellies and jams (Canadian) 5c. per pound, sugar 1c. per pound, confectionery 1c. per pound, cigars, cigarettes and tobaccos (not yet decided), ten 10c. per pound, liquors $1 to $2 per case.

ON A WAR FOOTING

CANADA is going to find out, within the next few months, what it means to be "on a war footing."

Just what it means depends largely on how we meet the situation. It might mean continued dulness, depression, "hard times"---if we were to persist in thinking and talking "hard times."

It may, just as reasonably, mean prosperity ---if we keep our heads and go after business in the right spirit of aggressiveness.

We might well follow the lead set us by some of our large industrial concerns.

An excellent example is furnished by our three leading automobile manufacturers.

One—making a high-priced car—has given instructions for the most aggressive selling campaign the company has ever undertaken, backed up by a big campaign of advertising in the newspapers.

Another, who makes various-priced cars of high quality, had a large announcement of 1915 models in a long list of papers the very week after war was declared.

A third—a Canadian branch factory of a United States concern making a popular-price car, is announcing an important price change—and taking larger space than ever before in Canadian newspapers to tell the story.

And this, be it noted, is the attitude of the three big men in an industry that the pessimists have been predicting would be seriously affected by the war. Their unshaken confidence, their greater-than-ever determination to market successfully a class of product that is always hard to sell, should be an inspiration to the rest of our industries. These three manufacturers have tested advertising, and have confidence in its efficiency in stimulating business in times of war as well as in times of peace.

Instead of retrenching, the business men of Canada may well emulate the action of the motor car manufacturers, and go out after business in the most aggressive way possible.

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room, you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

PETES FELL ON TAYLOR IN FIFTH FOR THREE RUNS; BRANTS HELD TO ONE TALLY

Bob Sterling Helped Along the Good Work With Two Hits, one a Three Bagger

Playing errorless ball, and with the handsome "Nemo" Nasher at second the Brantford aggregation opened their final series with the Petes yesterday afternoon at Riverside Park and fell before the Blountmen by 4-1. It was the same old tale of the luck being against the tailenders. When hits meant runs or when a hit meant runs in fact the necessary bingle wasn't forthcoming.

Taylor, who is in charge of the team in the absence of Manager Deneau, who fractured his ankle at Ottawa, decorated the mound himself and while the Petes fell on him at times, he tightened up on several occasions and rushed batsmen back to the bench. Bob Sterling who fulfilled similar duties for Messrs. Blount and Co. was inclined to be a trifle wild but delivered the proper thing in the proper time. Right off the reel the first three men got on but not a score resulted.

The feature of the little attraction was the hitting of Dudley, late of the Hamilton Home Rule Club, who covered the initial sack for the Red Sox had four hits in four times up. Another man on the field who batted .1000 was Bob Sterling having a triple and a single out of two trips to the pan. On the other occasion he secured a passport, stamped Dudleyville.

Speed Kelly got away with a couple of nice pegs, particularly in third innings when he caught Nasher off third and Dudley off first.

Jocko Halligan was the infliction wished on us this week by President Fritz and the same Jocko is as blind as ever.

The game :—

First Innings.

Brantford. Long opened with a single over second. Nemo Nasher walked and Dudley filled the bases with a long hit to left. Cosma missed three and Roth popped an infield fly. Burrill lifted a long fly which Blount gathered in. No runs, 2 hits, no errors.

Peterboro. Blount went out short to first. Welsh singled, went to second on a passed ball and to third on Dolan's infield out. Rooney went out, Taylor to Dudley. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Second Innings.

Brantford. Fried walked, Lamond flied to King and Taylor hit into a double, King to Fox to Dolan. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterboro. Byrne singled. King walked. Fox hit along third base line and Byrne was forced out. Fox run for second and King started for third too late being an easy out, short to third to second. When the smoke cleared Fox was back on first and was later caught stealing. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Third Innings.

Brantford. Long singled as did Nasher. Dudley beat out an infield hit and Long scored on Kelly's bad throw to first. Cosma flied to Blount, Nasher was caught off third and Dudley was caught off first. One run, three hits, no error.

Peterboro. Kelly lifted to Cosma, Sterling walked, Blount skied to centre, Welsh hit to Roth who threw to second forcing Sterling out. No runs, hits or errors.

Fourth Innings.

Brantford. Roth went out, Sterling to Dolan, Burrill hit out a long single and stole second. Fried secured a pass, Lamond skied to King and Taylor fanned. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterboro. Dolan dropped one in front of the plate and was out, Lamond to Dudley. Rooney beat out an infield hit as did Byrne, but the former was forced at third when King hit to short. Byrne and King stole but Fox missed three. No runs, 2 hits, no errors.

Fifth Innings.

Brantford. Long went out, King to Dolan while Nasher followed suit via the Byrne-Dolan route. Dudley hit but was left stranded when Cosma dropped one in front of the plate and went out, Kelly to Fox. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterboro. Kelly was out, Fried to Dudley and Sterling poled out a three bagger. Blount beat out an infield hit and Bob scored on Welsh's long double to left. Dolan lifted a sacrifice fly to left on which Blount scored and Welsh took third. Rooney singled over second scoring Welsh. Rooney was caught attempting to steal. Three runs, four hits, no errors.

Sixth Innings.

Brantford. Roth singled, Burrill struck out and Roth was caught stealing. Fried went out Fox to Dolan. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterboro. Byrne missed three, King flied to left and Fox fanned. No runs, hits or errors.

Seventh Innings.

Brantford. Lamond grounded to Byrne, Taylor went out, Sterling to Dolan and Long skied to Rooney. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterboro. Kelly grounded to short, Sterling singled to centre and Blount walked. Welsh also got a pass filling the bases and Dolan lifted a sacrifice fly scoring Sterling. Blount and Welsh were stranded when Rooney fanned. One run, one hit, no errors.

Eighth Innings.

Brantford. Nasher popped to Byrne, Dudley got his fourth hit but was forced at second when Cosma hit to King. Roth lifted to Rooney. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterboro. Byrne fanned, King grounded to third, Fox poled a long two bagger but was out trying to stretch it to a triple. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Ninth Innings.

Brantford. Burrill out, third to first, Fried popped to King and Lamond ended it by grounding to Fox. No runs, hits or errors.

COMMENT As You Like It

"Speed" Kelly still continues to demonstrate the ability of his salary whip. His throwing has been a feature of a couple of games out of every series the Petes have played this season. It is very probable that he will step up a rung on the base ball ladder this season. At that he would be a good speculation.

The fans are very thankful that one Mr. Lush is performing in other fields, but, considering a couple of Mr. Halligan's decisions yesterday there are two poor umps on the Fitz circuit this season.

The big game in the Mercantile league is to be played to-morrow evening at 5.30, on Riverside, when the De Laval and Bankers will clash.

Dudley had four blows in four trips to the plate yesterday. That's not going bad after Hamilton handing him to the tailenders because of his inability to connect.

Nemo Nasher is the same pretty child as he always was. He continues to murmur "Stay with him boy."

Charley Pick, the speedy infielder of Toronto International League squad has been sold to the Chicago American League team. He will report at the end of the season.

Boston Braves dropped one to the Chicago yesterday while New York marked time. That gives the Giants the lead again as follows :

New York	59	48	.551
Boston	59	49	.546

FORMER PRIZE FIGHTER ENLISTS

Jack Munro With Princess Pat's Infantry

Ottawa, Aug. 25.—Jack Munro, the former famous prize fighter, ex-mayor of Elk Lake, is one of the volunteers in the Princess Patricia light infantry. He came down from the mining country and enlisted. Munro is a Nova Scotian by birth, though he lived most of his life in the western states.

MERCANTILE LEAGUE GAME TO BE PLAYED THURSDAY EVENING

On Thursday evening, at 5.15, on Riverside park, the crucial game of the Mercantile league will be staged, when the De Laval and Drafting Room, the teams tied for first place, will do battle. It is anticipated that a goodly number will be on hand to see the conflict. The opposing batteries will be Gorman and Stanton, Carson and Taylor. A. Quinlan will handle the indicator. The change in date was made to-day.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

Relief Station.

My very warmest thoughts today
  Go out to Cousin Jim.
I wonder if he'd like to have
  Me drop a note to him.
For my vacation days are not
  So very far away.
And on his farm it wouldn't cost
  A single cent to stay.

For he possesses acres broad
  And has a spanking pair
Of trotting horses that are built
  To take one anywhere.
His table groans with choicest food,
  And there I would be strong,
For if I went I sure would take
  My appetite along.

A hammock swings beneath the shade,
  His porch is broad and deep,
And on a sunny afternoon
  A pleasant place to sleep.
His rolling fields are fair to see,
  The stock is sleek and plump,
His cows are trained to furnish milk
  That never saw a pump.

I know I would enjoy the time.
  I wonder would he say,
"Come out and make yourself to home,"
  Were I to write today.
I wonder if he would attempt
  To even up old scores
For boyish pranks should I come out
  And set me doing chores.

Had Proof.

"Who ever saw a purple cow?" asked the scoffer, looking at a collection of art posters.

"That is no sign there isn't any."

"Good enough proof for me."

"Well, it isn't conclusive. I should judge to look at it that the milk I get came from a blue cow."

An Exception.

"You never can tell what you can do until you try."

"Oh, yes, you can."

"I'd like to know how."

"That's as easy as catching cold. There is Bill Johnson eternally telling what he can do, and no one ever saw him trying yet."

Wasted Eloquence.

"O Liberty, what crimes are committed in thy name!" shouted the speaker.

"What crimes?" asked one who wanted to know.

"That speech, for instance," volunteered one in the audience.

Naturally.

"How do you feel?" breathlessly inquired the friend who has come running up to discover the result of the accident.

"All run down," replied the man who had just been bowled over by a large red automobile.

Desired to Settle.

"Hear about Wilson?"

"No; what about him?"

"Wants to marry his landlady."

"Is that so? I didn't think he owed that much on his board."

Homemade Pie.

"That man has an adamantine jaw."

"Sure enough."

"Wonder where he got it."

"Probably his wife does her own cooking."

Experienced.

"We should always make hay when the sun shines."

"Would you call a grass widow likely material?"

Busy Times.

This little joke upon the hen
Projected by some awful men—
They're going to rig electric light
And have her laying day and night.

Showed It.

"What college did you graduate from?"

"None of them."

"Let me congratulate the colleges."

Considerate.

"Mother, why do they play some of the music so low and some so loud?"

"So that the people who are hard of hearing can get their money's worth."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Amplifying It.

"I understand Colonel Flushby gave a good account of himself in the war."

"So he did and has been giving a better one ever since."—Baltimore Sun.

Coal In the Arctics.

Coal can be mined in the Arctics as easily as and much more conveniently than gold. Underground work is just as satisfactory there as elsewhere. It is just as warm in the bowels of the earth at Cape Farewell as it is in Pennsylvania, and by storing the winter's output and doubling the number of steamers to freight away this reserve stock during the summer the problem will solve itself.

At Mercy Bay, 500 miles north of Great Slave Lake, McClure, the seeker for the northwest passage, in 1852-4, during the three winters he was frozen up in the region made historical by Franklin's fatal expedition, where in the mazy channels between the islets he lost all hope of working toward the Pacific, his ships burned coal found by search parties before the hapless company abandoned the vessels and started south, in the hope of reaching Canadian Indian settlements, every soul perishing on the way.

1 o'clock this morning the sextette had been gathered in at headquarters.

While the local police were bringing in their men, Superintendent Rogers, of the provincial police, left for Hamilton in a high-powered automobile. Two men were arrested there before midnight, their homes searched and the men sent to police headquarters in that city.

At each home visited by the police a careful search was made. A patrol wagon visited the Keele street house, where it is said a quantity of books were carried away.

Worked All Night.

As soon as the men were lodged in headquarters, Mr. H. H. Dewart, K. C., appeared with Walter Brecknell, court stenographer. Behind closed doors each man was interviewed. No information could be obtained as to the result, but it is said lengthy statements were obtained from each man. The interviews started at 1 o'clock. At 4 o'clock this morning the men were sent to Agnes street police station.

Raid Was Planned.

Owing to the suddenness of the arrest of the different men, little detailed information was obtainable last night. Mr. Dewart was apparently apprised beforehand of the event, and seemed to be acting under advice. He refused to be interviewed. Two high-powered automobiles stood at the entrance to police headquarters on Albert street all night, and were frequently used by messengers despatched by Mr. Dewart.

BOOKS BOUND IN GOLD

Costly Volumes Which Have Been Made for Connoisseurs

One thousand four hundred pounds is the value set upon a magnificent specimen of present-day English bookbinding about to be sent to America. The book is an illuminated manuscript of some of Keat's poems, and has just been completed after two years' work. The poems are written and illuminated on vellum, and illustrated with original water-colors, while the morocco cover is elaborately gold-tooled, inlaid with over 4,400 pieces of colored leather, and set with over 1,000 precious stones.

This book was designed and bound by Mr. George Sutcliffe, the noted bookbinder of Poland street, London, who has evolved many original ideas in bookbinding. He was the first to use jewelled decorations—pearls instead of white leather, garnets instead of red leather, and so on. That such work pays is evident from the fact that Mr. Sutcliffe now employs eighty men.

The illuminated manuscript of Keats referred to is the most elaborate specimen of binding executed by Mr. Sutcliffe since he designed a jewelled Omar Khayyam, which was purchased by the German Government for the Frankfort Museum twelve years ago, and in the decoration of which twenty-one opals were used. Another specimen of Mr. Sutcliffe's art is a sumptuously-bound copy of Shelley's works, each flower on the hawthorn decoration being set with a pearl.

Volumes in modern binding which sell for $1,000 to $2,500 each are by no means uncommon. Not long ago, for instance, a set of Dickens was published, the price per volume being $1,000, each book being bound in vellum and enclosed in a casket of white silk and leather.

It was a marvellous production, but scarcely so interesting as the Hon. Walter Rothschild's book on "Extinct Birds," which represented many years of labor and cost its author something like $100,000 to produce. Mr. Rothschild stipulated that the book should be turned out in imperishable form, as it was improbable that the subject would ever be done again and he wished the work to endure for all time. Only 300 copies were printed in English for private circulation, the price of each copy being $125.

Parents Bereaved.

The death occurred today of Frederick Honeysett, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Hockey, 450 Mark St. The funeral will take place tomorrow to Little Lake Cemetery.

BRITISH ADMIRALS

Veterans Not as to Age But in the Point of Service, in the Majority of Cases

The naval correspondent of the Loudon Times writes:

A glance at the fleet commanders as a whole shows that, comparatively speaking, this is the day of young admirals. There are hardly any offiers flying their flags in the fleet who can be called veterans in point of age, though the term may be used in regard to their services, for the majority have had over 40 years in the navy. In the first fleet the oldest officer, Vice-Admiral Sir Douglas Gamble, is 57, and the youngest, Rear-Admiral Sir David Beatty, 43. The average age is about 52 years. This affords a contrast to the custom in many navies which employ only admirals of between 60 and 70 years of age.

Sir John Jellicoe, who, as commander-in-chief of the home fleets, is in supreme command in the North Sea, was 54 in December, and has been in the navy since 1872. He is a gunnery specialist, winning the £80 prize for gunnery when at college as a lieutenant in 1883. Twice he has seen war service, first in the Egyptian war of 1882, and secondly in China in 1900, when he was wounded in Sir Edward Seymour's expedition to relieve the Peking legations, of which expedition he was chief staff officer. His thoroughness as an administrator has been shown as naval assistant to the controller, director of naval ordnance, third sea lord and second sea lord, which latter post he has just left. Afloat, he has been rear-admiral in the Atlantic fleet, vice-admiral commanding that fleet, and vice-admiral commanding the second division of the home fleet. When in command of the "Red" fleet during the 1913 manoeuvres he showed his skill in raiding the Humber and other east coast places.

Rear-Admiral C. E. Madden, chief of the staff to Sir John Jellicoe, is a brother-in-law of that officer, both admirals having married daughters of Sir Charles Cayzer. Entering the navy in 1875, Read-Admiral Madden also served in the Egyptian war and specialized in gunnery. He has been naval assistant to the third and first sea lords, chief of the staff in the home fleet, and private secretary to the first lord. Promoted to flag rank in April, 1911, while serving a term of two years as fourth sea lord, he has since flown his flag in the first battle squadron and third and second cruiser squadrons, leaving the latter on July 29 to become third sea lord, an appointment now, of course, in abeyance.

Vice-Admiral Sir Lewis Bayly commands the first battle squadron, flying his flag in the new battleship Marlborough. He is 56 years of age and has been in the navy since 1870. A torpedo specialist, he obtained the £80 prize for this branch at Greenwich college in 1884. On two occasions he has seen war service, in Ashanti in 1873-4, and during the Egyptian war of 1882; he was also employed against the Congo pirates in 1875. As commodore of the home fleet destroyers he did much to promote the efficiency of the flotillas, and was afterwards placed in command of the War College from 1908 to 1911. Since then he has commanded the first battle cruiser squadron for two years, and the third battle squadron for a year, his present command dating from June 22 last.

Vice-Admiral Sir George Warrender has the distinction of commanding our most powerful battle squadron, the second, for its eight ships are all armed with 13-5 in. guns. He joined the navy in 1873, and was 54 years of age on July 31. Twice he has seen fighting on land, in the Zulu war of 1879 and the China war of 1900, in the latter of which he was flag captain to the rear-admiral of the China squadron. As a commodore and rear-admiral he was commander-in-chief in the East Indies in 1907-9, and after two years in the second cruiser squadron in 1910-12, he was appointed to his present command on December 16, 1912, his flag flying in the King George V.

Vice-Admiral E. E. Bradford, in the third battle squadron, has charge of our principal pre-Dreadnought battleships, in one of which, the King Edward VII, his flag flies. He is a gunner specialist, like Sir George Warrender, than whom he is one year older. Entering the service in 1872, he was in the Egyptian war of 1882. In 1890 an essay from his pen on the maritime defence of the United Kingdom and its trade in a war with a naval power was placed second in the competition for the United Service Institution's gold medal. For some time he was Sir Arthur Wilson's flag captain in the Channel fleet, and as a rear-admiral he was in the second division of the home fleet in 1909, and in command of the training squadron in 1911-13.

Vice-Admiral Sir Douglas Gamble, with his flag in the Dreadnought, is in command of the fourth battle squadron. He was 57 years of age in November last and has been in the navy since 1870. While no war service has hitherto fallen to his lot, he has given evidence, both in commands afloat and in the intelligence department at the admiralty, of his energy and capacity. He was selected in 1909 as naval adviser to Turkey, and his excellent work at Constantinople considerably raised the efficiency of the Ottoman fleet, which he twice took to sea for cruises. From 1910 to 1912 he commanded the sixth cruiser squadron, and he hoisted his flag in his present appointment on July 1.

Rear Admiral Sir David Beatty, commanding the first battle-cruiser squadron, in the Lion, won early promotion to the rank of commander for distinguished services with the Nile gunboats in 1898, and also early promotion to that of captain for gallantry in China in 1900, so that he reached flag rank at the age of 39. Since then he has been naval secretary to the first lord, and he took up his present command in March, 1913. His well-known courage and dash should find full scope with the splendid battle-cruisers in the squadron of which he is in charge.

Rear-Admiral the Hon. S. A. Gough-Calthorpe, commanding the second cruiser squadron, in the Shannon, is a torpedo officer of scientific attainments, and his sound judgment was revealed during the assessor. He was promoted to the rank of commander for services during the Brass River and M'Well expeditions and on the West and East African coasts in 1895, and during the Russo-Japanese war was naval attache at St. Petersburg. He was rear-admiral in the first battle squadron during 1913, and took up his present post on July 29.

Read-Admiral W. C. Pakenham, commanding the third cruiser squadron, in the Antrim, knows what a modern fleet action is like from his experience in the Russo-Japanese war, when he was on board Togo's flagship. He was fourth sea lord from 1911 to 1913, and hoisted his flag in his present command last December. He is 53 years of age, the oldest of the cruiser admirals of the fleet, but a man of unrivalled experience and knowledge of modern naval fighting.

Commodore W. E. Goodenough is the officer in command of the first light cruiser squadron, his pennant flying in the Southampton. He is 47 years of age, and since 1880 has been in the navy, as his father, Commodore I. G. Goodenough, C.B., C.M.G., was before him. He was in command of the Royal Naval College, Dartmouth, in 1905-7, and has since commanded the Albemarle, Duncan and Cochrane, in the last-named of which vessels he escorted King George to India for the Durbar and asisted at the relief operations after the Messina earthquake, receiving the Order of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus from the King of Italy.

Rear-Admiral Hugh Evan-Thomas, who is serving in the first battle squadron, with his flag in the St. Vincent, is new to war service; but his abilities are indicated by his employment as private secretary to the first lord in 1905-8, and in command of the Dartmouth College in 1910-12. He is 51 years of age and entered the navy in 1876. Twenty years ago he was Admiral Sir Michael Culme-Seymour's flag-lieutenant in the Mediterranean, and 10 years ago he was Lord Charles Beresford's flag-captain in the Channel. He obtained his flag in July, 1912, and took up his first and present flag command in December last.

Rear-Admiral Sir Robert Arbuthnot, of the second battle squadron, in the Orion, is generally recognized as a man of ideas, which he expounds with characteristic energy. When passing for lieutenant he won the Goodenough medal for the best gunnery examination. It was his misfortune to be severely injured in a 6-inch gun accident in the Royal Sovereign off Platea in 1901. The attention he has given to the internal economy and organization of warships finds reflection in his "Battleship Commander's Order Book" and "Battleship's Station Bill." In 1903-4 he was Lord Fisher's flag-captain at Portsmouth. Promoted to flag rank in July, 1912, after nearly two years as commodore of destroyers in the home fleet, he hoisted his flag in his present command in Ooctober last, at the age of 49.

Read-Admiral M. E. Browning, flying his flag in the Hibernia as rear-admiral of the third battle squadron, has been in the navy since 1876, and is now 51 years old. Like Sir R. Arbuthnot, he was injured on peace service, losing his left hand in an accident in the Inflexible in 1889. He has twice seen war service, in the Egyptian campaign of 1882 and the China rebellion of 1900, being mentioned in the despatches for his work in the latter.

Rear-Admiral Archibald G. H. W. Moore, C.V.O., C.B., third sea lord on the board of admiralty, hoists his flag in H. M. S. Invincible, and will be succeeded as third sea lord by Rear-Admiral Frederick C. T. Tudor, C.B., at present director of naval ordnance.

Captain Morgan Singer, A.D.C., R.N., has been selected to succeed Rear-Admiral Tudor as director of naval ordnance and torpedoes.

It is further announced that Rear-Admiral Sir David Beatty, K.C.B., M.V.O., D.S.O., commanding the first battle cruiser squadron, has received the acting rank of vice-admiral.

The following flag officers have hoisted their flags in ships of the second and third fleets:

Vice-Admiral the Hon. Sir A. E. Bethell, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., in H.M.S. Prince George, as vice-admiral commanding battleships of third fleet.

Rear-Admiral William L. Grant, C.B. in H.M.S. Drake.

Rear-Admiral H. L. Tottenham, C.B., in H.M.S. Albion.

Rear-Admiral D. R. S. De Chair, C.B., M.V.O., in H.M.S. Crescent.

Rear-Admiral H. H. Campbell, C.V.O., in H.M.S. Bacchante.

Rear-Admiral R. S. Phipps Hornby, C.M.G., in H.M.S. Doris.

Rear-Admiral R. E. Wemyss, C.M. G., M.V.O., in H.M.S. Charybdis.

Rear-Admiral Cecil F. Thursby, C.M.G., in H.M.S. Queen.

Rear-Admiral J. M. de Robeck, in H.M.S. Amphitrite.

SMALL CROWD FOR ANNUAL OUTING

The annual excursion of Lansdowne Lodge Sons of England was held last Saturday to Harwood via Steamer Stoney Lake. The excursion was in every way an enjoyable one, the weather being bright and warm, and the Opera House Orchestra provided excellent music. Their selections were well chosen and both trips the orchestra played almost continuously.

Unfortunately the crowd was small and the receipts were correspondingly so and unless the Lodge comes to the assistance of the committee there will be nothing for the hospital ship fund. It is to be regretted that the public did not support the excursion better.

SILENCE FALLS ON THE FIGHTING IN SOUTHERN BELGIUM

Bomb Throwing Exploit Promises to Become Matter of Widest International Consideration

BOMBS WERE THROWN ON HOSPITALS

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 26., 4.40 p.m.—Since the withdrawal of the allied armies to the defenses of the French frontier, virtually no news has reached the public of military operations in Southern Belgium. Owing to the difficulty of compiling the correct list along such an extended frontier, no details of British casualties which Premier Asquith estimated today at two thousand, have been received.

The delay is increasing the distress of anxious relatives of men at the front. The announcement of the losses however only seems to have intensified British determination, judging from the extra work being performed by recruiting officers today. The tenacity of purpose was further evidenced by Premier Asquith in the House of Commons this afternoon in making announcement that he proposed to ask King George to convey to the King of the Belgians, the great admiration with which Great Britain regarded "the heroic resistance of his army and the people to the wanton invasion of their territory and an assurance of determination of this country to support in every way, efforts of Belgium to vindicate her own independence and the public law of Europe."

The Premier declared further that the Belgian Government was taking steps to get established facts of German atrocities as related in a statement given out yesterday by Belgian Minister here, to the knowledge of the whole civilized world.

London, Aug. 26.—The bomb throwing exploit of a Zeppelin airship at Antwerp promises to become a matter of widest international consideration. The Belgian authorities claim the attack was a clear violation of article 26 of the fourth Hague convention.

One account says 26 lives were lost, although it is reported only 12 bodies were recovered from the ruins of the wrecked houses. A semi-official despatch received here by the Chronicle says 900 houses were slightly damaged and 60 nearly destroyed. The despatch says: "For the first time in history a great civilized community has been bombarded from the sky in the dead of night. Count Zeppelin has performed the greatest feat of his life. He has thrown bombs on hospitals where Belgians were attending German wounded. He has staggered humanity.

"On August 5 the German commander at Liege warned General Leman that if he did not surrender, a Zeppelin fleet would move against Belgium. The Germans have been as good as their word."

London, Aug. 26—Despatches from Antwerp say the Belgian royal family will abandon the temporary palace in the city, on account of the attack by a Zeppelin airship, and it is also stated that the American minister to Belgium, Brand Whitlock, has sent an energetic protest to Germany against this style of warfare.

PARIS CONFIDENT.

Paris, Aug. 26.—The French war office was silent this morning. No official announcement has been issued. Unofficial military opinion is that fighting along the French-Belgian frontier continues. Quiet confidence exists in Paris that the allies will hold off the German attack and take the offensive when the proper hour arrives.

AUSTRIAN VICTORY.

Berlin, Aug. 26.—Via Wireless—Official reports made public in Vienna say a battle of three days' duration at Krasnik, in Russian Poland, ended yesterday in a complete Austrian victory. Russian forces were repulsed along the entire front of 42 miles and are now in full flight in the direction of Lublin.

PRINCE FREDERICK SLAIN.

Berlin, Aug. 26.—According to an official announcement made here to-day, Lieut-General Prince Frederick of Saxe Meiningen was killed by a shell before Namur on Aug. 23.

RUSSIAN VICTORIES.

London, Aug. 26.—1.15 p.m.—The Russian embassy is in receipt of telegrams from the general staff at St. Petersburg, which announce fresh Russian victories against both Germany and Austria.

These messages declare Russian troops now occupy the whole of the eastern and southern half of Eastern Prussia.

ANNEX NORTH SEA PORTS.

London, Aug. 26.—The military correspondent of the Times to-day says: "We and the Dutch need have no doubt that the annexation of all North Sea ports from the Straits of Dover to Emden will follow German success in war—success which would only be a preliminary to the concentration of all German effort upon the subjugation of England."

INDIA'S SENTIMENTS.

Calcutta, Aug. 26.—The representative of the Bengal moslems has telegraphed the grand vizier at Constantinople, offering congratulations to His Imperial Majesty on the occasion of the feas of Bairam and expressing gratification at Turkey's neutrality and British assurance of Turkey's integrity. He adds that "Indian Moslems who consider loyalty to the British crown their first paramount duty, would greatly deplore any estrangement between England and Turkey."

GUELPH LOSES SKATING RINK

Adjacent Buildings Damaged by Smoke and Water

Canadian Press Despatch.

Guelph, Aug. 26.—The most spectacular fire ever seen here resulted in the destruction of the Victoria skating rink one of the largest in the province, early this morning, and some damage by smoke and water to adjacent buildings. The loss is about twenty-five thousand dollars.

SUPREME EFFORT BY THE GERMANS TO MAKE THEIR WAY INTO FRANCE

All is Being Hazarded on the Success or Failure of This Blow

Ostend to be Used as Base of Operations Against England

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 26. — The Daily Mail corespondent at Ostend says: "It was a great day when the British general staff with their men arrived. The inhabitants went wild with enthusiasm. "The British army has come to Belgium," exclaimed the townspeople gleefully and nothing was too good for them. The troops advanced to battle positions at three o'clock in the morning and at four o'clock, eight German aeroplanes appeared whereupon a flock of British aeroplanes rose like birds to drive them away. Then artillery began to talk and the air became thick with powder. A great battle had begun and forward went the infantry. Rifle and maxim gun fire added to the boom of the big guns. Sunrise mingled with the glow of burning forests and the flash of guns.

This was Monday. The battle continued Tuesday and probably will continue for several days.

The great battle now in full swing is the supreme effort on the part of Germany to break into France and the effort which if stopped means disaster for three-quarters of a million German soldiers. All is being hazarded on the success or failure of this blow.

The Daily Mail believes the Germans will occupy Ostend as a base of operations against England. Ostend is only sixty-six miles from the British coast and if the Germans establish themselves there and bring up their heavy artillery they may render it dangerous as a base of operations against England.

The Times says British troops troops made themselves at home at Mons where they were observed sitting on the bank of the canal, using their rifles with bayonets for fishing rods.

ENEMY IS REPULSED

Were Retired by French All Along the Line

Belgians Destroy Defensive Works of the Invaders

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 26.—The German forces delivered an attack on the French southern frontier yesterday (Tuesday). They were repulsed and retired all along the line.

The text of the announcement is as follows:—

"It is officially announced that on August 25, the French on their southern frontier were attacked in force by the Germans. The attack was repulsed and the enemy retired all along the line."

London, Aug. 26.—A despatch from Antwerp to the Exchange Telegraph Co. says Belgian operations beyond Malines were continued throughout last night. Belgian forces succeeded in destroying the defensive works constructed by the Germans.

London, Aug. 26.—Premier Asquith read a telegram in the Commons to-day from the British commander-in-chief in West Africa, saying that the authorities in the German colony of Togoland had offere dto capitulate on terms, but he had answered that their surrender must be unconditional.

STOPPED GERMANS SIX TIMES

Canadian Press Despatch.

Paris, Aug. 26.—According to Englishmen arriving from Mons, the British army was attacked six times by six different bodies of Germans and beat them all off. They report the allies made a hecatomb of the Germans near Mons.

Certain parts of the field, they declare, were covered with German dead, piled so high theTurcos had difficulty in getting over the bodies to attack the Prussian guards.

KITCHENER PREPARED TO SERVE FOR THREE YEARS

BRITISH TROOPS WERE GALLANT

War Secretary Speaking in Parliament, Says Expeditionary Force Will be Steadily Increased Until Thirty Army Divisions of 450,000 Men Are in the Field in Six Months.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—In concluding his speech in Parliament yesterday, Earl Kitchener, War Secretary, said:

"Over seventy battalions have with fine courage already volunteered for service abroad. When they are trained and organized in larger formations they will be able to take their places in the line.

"The hundred thousand men asked for in the first place have already been virtually secured.

"The Empire with which we are at war has called to the colors almost its entire male population. The principle we, on our part, shall observe is this: That while the maximum force undergoes constant diminution, the reinforcements we prepare will steadily and increasingly flow out until we have an army in the field which in number will not be less than in quality and not be unworthy of the power and responsibility of the Empire.

"I cannot at this stage say what will be the limits of force required or what measures may eventually become necessary to supply and maintain it.

"The scale of the field army which we are now calling into being is large and may rise in the course of the next six or seven months to a total of thirty divisions to be maintained continually in the field.

"But if the war should be protracted, and if its fortunes should be varied or adverse, exertions and sacrifices beyond any which have been demanded will be required from the whole nation and Empire. And where they are required, we are sure they will not be denied to the extreme needs of the state by Parliament or the people."

An army division consists of 15,000 men, so that Earl Kitchener's estimate is that 450,000 British soldiers may be fighting on the continent within six months.

He told his hearers that this war undoubtedly would strain the forces of the Empire and entail big sacrifices. He laid emphasis on the fact that his position in the Cabinet involved adherence to neither party. He said:

"The terms on which I am serving are the same as those under which some of the finest portions of our manhood, now so willingly stepping forward to join the colors, are emerging. That is to say, my term of office is for the duration of the war, or for three years if the war should last that long.

"It has been asked why this period has been limited. It is because if this disastrous war be prolonged, and no one can foretell for a certainty its duration, that after three years of war others will take our places and see this matter through.

"Our expeditionary force has taken the field on the French northwest frontier and advanced to the neighbodhood of Mons (in Belgium)," Lord Kitchener said, "Our troops already have been for 36 hours in contact with the superior forces of the German invaders. During that time they maintained the best traditions of the British soldier and behaved with the utmost gallantry. The movements they have been called upon to execute have been those which demanded the greatest steadiness in a soldier and skill in the commanders."

Premier Asquith, in a brief statement to the Commons, said the casualties to the British were estimated at something over two thousand.

WITH THE BOYS AT VAL CARTIER

Local Officers Hold Provisional Commands

ALL IN GOOD SPIRITS

57th Contingent Wins Praise for Work and Nunbers

Major Eastwood is in receipt of a letter from Major Bennett who in part states that the 57th Regt. form a part of the first Battalion, which also forms a part of the 1st Infantry Brigade.

Col. Clegg is provisionally in command of the 1st Battalion, Major Bennett is in command of one company, and Major Mills is quarter master, these two appointments being provisonally also.

The first battalion is composed of a number of corps, among which are 3rd Dragoons, 26th Dragoons, Mississauga Horse, 13th Light Horse, the 55th, 54th, 14th, 47th, 46th, 45th, 96th, 98th and Governor General Foot Guards. Lt. Col. Turner is in command of this brigade. The strength of the 1st battalion is placed at 1400 men.

The camp is dry and level, and the food is good and very plentiful, the men are rapidly working out their organization and are reported to be in best of spirits. The 57th regiment is commanding a great deal of praise both on their work and their number. Outside of the 38th of Brantford, Peterboro sent the largest contingent of any place in Ontario excluding of course Toronto. Kingston sent only 75 men.

Faith is undoubtedly a very good thing and makes a fine anchor, but it is no substitute for a lead pipe cinch.

Infernal Machine Discovered in Box Delivered For Deposit.

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 26.—"An attempt to blow up one of the chief London banks," says the Evening News, has led to an official warning to all banks to examine thoroughly upon delivery all deep boxes deposited with them. A harmless looking deep box was presented at a London bank for deposit in the strong room. A sharp ear caught an ominous ticking, and an infernal machine was discovered in the box."

Col. Clegg Replies on Behalf Of Peterborough Volunteers

Mayor Buller is in receipt of the following letter from Col. Clegg, at Val Cartier:—

Valcartier Camp,
Aug. 23, 1914.

Wm. Buller,
Mayor of the City of Peterboro,

Dear Sir,—I wish to take the first opportunity on behalf of the officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the overseas contingent from the 57th Regiment which left Peterboro yesterday, to thank you and the city council for your assurance of care and protection to the families of those who volunteered for service and may be sent to the seat of war.

Your patriotic and earnest words were as an encouragement from their fellow citizens to the men of the contingent and will be remembered should they get into the stress on the campaign.

We arrived safely early this morning and found our camp ready and situated in a picturesque valley, flanked on three sides by mountains and about 15 miles north of Quebec.

Letters, etc., to members of the contingent should be addressed till further notice as below.

Yours very truly,
E. B. Clegg, Lt.-Col.

Care Lt.-Col. E. B. Clegg,
1st Batt. 1st Inf. Brigade,
Valcartier Camp,
Quebec.

SECOND RAID BY ZEPPELIN WAS FAILURE

Precautionary Measures Taken by Authorities in Antwerp

Another Machine Falls to Ground on the British Lines

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 26.—A despatch from Antwerp says another raid on the city by a Zeppelin airship was attempted last night, but was frustrated by measures taken by the military authorities.

Paris, Aug. 26.—A German aeroplane fell to the ground inside the British lines in Qusnoy region yesterday and two German officers on board were killed. Qusnoy is six miles from Lille.

A FAMINE THREATENS BRUSSELS

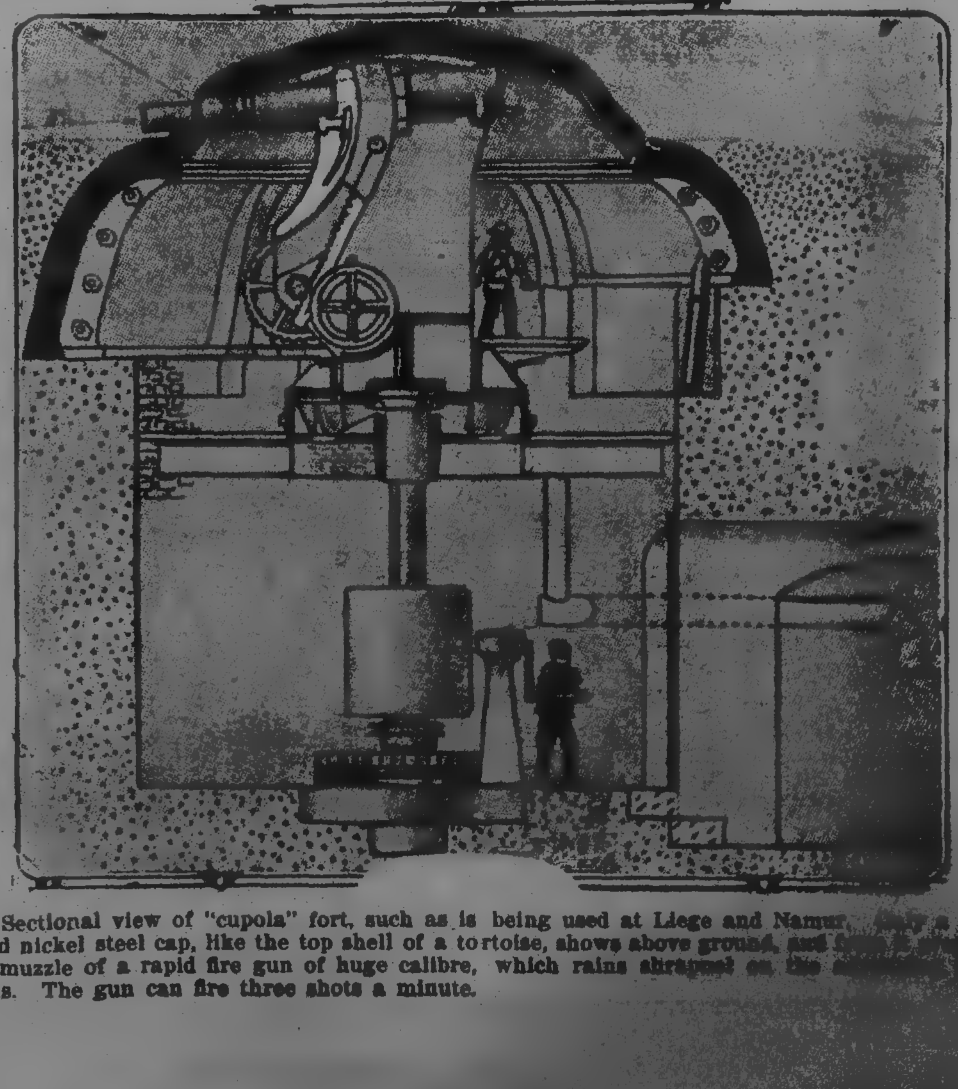
German Troops Commandeered Everything Edible.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—"German officials claim that 300,000 Germans passed through Brussels," says the Brussels correspondent of The Chronicle, whose message was received here by way of Antwerp. He continues:

"Some of the troops seemed in excellent condition physically, and in good spirits, but the general impression is that the great bulk of German troops is exhausted and demoralized.

"Owing to the vast amount of food commandeered by the Germans there is a great scarcity of bread and other supplies, and famine is threatened. All German requisitions for food are payable in scrip, which is being printed freely for the use of officers. Most of the troops are quartered in the barracks, while the officers generally have put up in private houses in parties of seven or eight.

"Characteristic of the detail illustrating the German thoroughness is the fact that they have ordered the use of German instead of Greenwich time."



Sectional view of "cupola" fort, such as is being used at Liege and Namur. Only a polished nickel steel cap, like the top shell of a tortoise, shows above ground, [illegible] the muzzle of a rapid fire gun of huge calibre, which rains shrapnel on the [illegible] Germans. The gun can fire three shots a minute.

A UNITED EAST.

IN commenting on the significance of Japan's action in issuing her ultimatum to Germany, Prof. Arthur M. Wheeler, Yale's noted historian, says in the New York Sun that this movement foreshadowed the beginning of a union between the three great peoples in the East — Japan, China, and India — and that such a union would shake the world.

"If you and I," continued Prof. Wheeler, "could visit the world 500 years from now we would look in vain for the British Empire, the American Republic, or the German Empire. All will have vanished. But China will be as she is today, a great nation. She has lived through the ages, while other empires have flourished and fallen, sustained by some power which it seems impossible to analyze, and she will have continued to live."

Prof. Wheeler characterized the step taken against Germany by Japan as the first offensive movement upon the part of an Oriental nation against an Occidental one, and he prophesies that Germany will swallow her pride, and, acceding to the demands of Japan, withdraw from the province of Kiao-chow. In his opinion it would be extremely hazardous for Germany to meet the demand by force, surrounded as she is by enemies in Europe. Although it will be a tremendous blow to the pride of Germany to swallow the ultimatum, he predicts that she will count the cost and decide that more will be lost by fighting than by surrendering.

If Germany refuses to surrender Kiao-chow," said Prof. Wheeler, "Japan will take it by force. And she will give it back to China, as she has promised. Having made this gift to China, the result will probably be a union between the two nations. This union will be joined by India, which will escape from British dominion and become an autonomous nation. A separation of India and England would be of immense advantage to both nations. It is extremely probable that England would offer no great resistance to the separation. She is not so anxious to hold India as she appears to be. Its principal value is as a market. It is useless as a colony, being already overpopulated.

"Should Japan join in the present war in Europe, a contingency which seems extremely improbable, the situation will be little changed. Germany will have a harder struggle with another enemy to fight against, and that is all. But all indications point to the fact that Japan will not have to go to war, because Germany will give in to her demand, and the casus belli will then be removed. In taking the action which she has taken Japan is observing the terms of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. But if she later finds it to her interest to break this alliance she will probably not hesitate to do so. Alliances are easily broken. Nothing points more clearly to that fact than the action of Italy in the present conflict."

Prof. Wheeler said that he did not think that Japan was influenced in her action by any deal between that nation and a revolutionary party in China, for nothing could be gained by Japan through such a deal. Her action, he says, is taken under the terms of her alliance with England and because she has an intense hatred for Germany. In further commenting on this feature he added:

"The present tangle in which Germany finds herself is due to the blunders which would never have been made with a Bismarck at the helm. In the war with China, Japan captured Port Arthur and intended to hold it. But Russia demanded its surrender, and for some reason Germany stepped in and backed up Russia forcing Japan to surrender the port. This action has always rankled in the Japanese mind and has made Germany an enemy of Japan."

In touching on the significance of this proposed union between the peoples of the East and the probable outcome to the United States and its insular possessions in the Pacific, Prof. Wheeler said:

"Napoleon once said, 'China is a sleeping giant; let her sleep. If she awakes she will shake the world.' The union will mean that China will awaken and with her will awaken India, while to these two will be added the strength of Japan. It will mean a united East against a united West. And the East can put tremendous armies in the field, armies such as the West never dreamed of, armies of hundreds of millions of men.

"The entire relations between the East and the West will be changed. The Powers that at present have footholds in China will be driven out and all hope of a partition of Chinese territory will vanish. The union will probably be a peaceful one; it will commit no encroachments on Western territory, but will put an end to the plundering of Chinese territory and to the continuance of British rule in India.

"With the political awakening of the East will come also an industrial awakening. The nations of the West will be hard put to maintain their industrial supremacy in the face of the great resources of the East.

"This country will not in all probability be drawn into the conflict now raging in Europe. It is, however, impossible to say who will be drawn into it and when it will end. Everything depends upon the first two or three battles. If there should be any trouble between the United States and Japan, which does not seem likely, and Japan should take the Philippines, no great loss would result to the United States."

WHO ARE THE HEATHEN ?

IT IS IDLE to say this war is the Emperor William's only. When the Imperial Chancellor broke the tidings to the German Parliament even the Socialists cheered. There was not one dissenting voice. Moreover, the scandalous treatment of the foreigners who were caught in Germany, especially the Russians, must remind Russia of what she can do in the way of rough treatment herself, even in times of peace. However, it will always remain a mystery why the people of all these nations, seeing the spectre of war steadily approaching, did not demand a peace conference. But they did not. War seems to have been dreaded, but welcomed. The truth is that trade rivalry and increasing population have driven Europe mad. A moment's consideration of the question will show that race rivalry has little to do with it. The most colossal surprise of all is the exposure of the fact that Christianity seems to have counted for nothing. Prayers have not availed—nor fasting. People will ask if it is the intention to send missionaries to the East or to keep them at home. If we are to be known by our fruits, we have sown the wrong seed. Would it not be well for us to turn our attention more to conduct—more to our own actions and less to a reliance upon some outside power to which we appeal for what we can ourselves do? The race is, after all, still in its childish and barbarian stage. We must stop theorizing and get down to practice.

THE AUTOMOBILE IN WAR.

WITH the advent of motor cars, few people thought of them except for pleasure passenger traffic, but gradually they have become a necessary part of nearly all business concerns, and now automobile agents comment on the important part which automobiles will play in the war, saying they will be more valuable than aeroplanes and will not only increase the speed of the initial advance guards' movements, as the Germans already have shown, but will increase the rapidity and reliability of food delivery enormously.

Forces will be much less likely to go to sleep supperless on account of the non-arrival of provisions, thereby removing one of the most critical causes of suffering, exhaustion and illness in great armies spread out over tremendous areas. They will be most useful for the speedy care of the wounded and will save thousands of lives that would have been lost in the days of horsedrawn ambulances.

The French automobile equipment is excellent, fully equal if not superior to the German, being especially strong in large, fast cars capable of taking ten equipped soldiers thirty miles an hour over ordinary country roads. Big agents handed over a large number of brand new high powered fast cars made for the special use of the General Staff's intelligence departments. Able professional chauffeurs attached to factories, among them several of the most celebrated racing drivers, have been assigned for driving high officers on scouting work.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE GOVERNEMNT would be perfectly justified in taking action to put a stop to unjustifiable price-raising by combines or dealers. In reference to this matter, the Government has been informed of instances where arbitrary and unjustifiable price-raising has been practised, and Sir Robert Borden adds this warning:

> "Under the grave conditions which confront us by reason of the outbreak of war, any course which would be offensive or unfair toward the labouring and artisan classes, and generally those possessed of small incomes, is most strongly to be condemned, and will demand the exercise by the Government of all powers at its command."

SIR GEORGE FOSTER, in his speech at the termination of the sitting of the House last week, again demonstrated not only his outstanding ability as an orator, but that he is one of the greatest Canadians of his time.

SEEING that the Globe is so anxious regarding Mr. Gamey's actions, it might extend its field of activities and tell us where the Alliance money went.

WHERE'S Henry Ford now with a fleet of autos for the Canadian contingent?

"MADE IN GERMANY" will soon be changed to "Made in Canada."

STILL no word of where the Alliance money went.

Not a People's War.
Toronto Star.

It is difficult to believe that the millions of quiet folk who make up the German people can approve of a war which promises to almost exterminate the male population of the best part of Europe. Not the industrious workers of Germany, only a ruling few, have brought this about.

Hastened the Pope's Death.
Toronto Telegram.

Whatever Pope Pius could do to maintain peace and prove the ennobling influence of Christianity, he did. But against the mad and barbaric ambitions of Wilhelm the Second all the influence of the Vatican was impotent. The Kaiser wanted war and with blood the soil of Europe is drenched. The folly, the pity, the wanton wickedness of it all, preyed upon the goodly mind of Pius the Tenth till in sorrow he passed. His life is the richest which the ambition of the Kaiser has claimed. His death is upon the head of the Emperor of Germany, and more righteous than ever becomes the world's effort to wreak vengeance upon the Berlin murderer who has abundantly proven himself a menace to civilization and a mocker of the Christian faith.

WAR AND WORK
By Walt Mason

The nations of Europe are wading in slaughter, the sound of their conflict encircles the world; some thrones may collapse and some dynasties totter before the red flags of the fighters are furled. The men of our village are vastly excited, they sit by the pump in the big public square, explaining how Germany's plans should be righted, how Russia and France are both up in the air. They point out the errors of Serb and of Belgian, they criticize legions, the rank and the file, and hope they may ne'er either swallow or smell gin, if they couldn't manage those armies in style. Their wives, in the meantime, are bitterly sighing, the wolves by the doorway all threatening lurk; the children are hungry, for wienerwurst crying; their dads are entirely too busy to work. I'm sorry for Europe that knows not the beauty of Peace, for poor Europe, whose rivers are red; but foremost and first I regard it my dtuy to rustle around for the liver and bread. The first of the month will be here ere we know it, and if I can't pay for my coffee and hash, the grocer will have little use for the poet whose sympathy kept him from earning the cash.

LATEST NEWS PARAGRAPHED

President Wilson yesterday issued a proclamation declaring the United States neutral in the war between Germany and Japan.

The battleship Kilkis has arrived in Grecian waters. This vessel was purchased from the United States and was formerly the Mississippi.

The Commercial Cable Co. announced yesterday at New York that the Shanghai, Tsingtau and Chefoo cables are interrupted. It is believed the Japanese may have cut them.

A corps of American volunteers, 200 strong, marched through Paris yesterday to the St. Lazarre railroad station, to take a train for Rouen, where they will be drilled under French officers.

Rev. Mr. Norman, pastor of the First Baptist Church at Saskatoon, was drowned Monday, according to a message received from La Pas yesterday. He left Saskatoon some time ago on a long canoe trip.

King George and Queen Mary attended the christening of the little son of Prince Arthur and the Princess of Connaught last evening. The ceremony was private, owing to the departure of the prince for active service at the front.

Kaiser Decorates His Sons.

BERLIN, Aug. 26.—(Via Copenhagen and London.—Emperor William has conferred the decoration of the Iron Cross of the second and first class on Crown Prince Frederick William and Duke Albrecht of Wuertemberg. He has conferred also the iron cross decoration of the second class on his son, Prince Oskar.

AIRSHIP CAPTURED.

Belgians Bring Down Zeppelin Machine at Antwerp.

LONDON, Aug. 26. — The correspondent at Antwerp of The Evening News telegraphs that a Zeppelin airship which flew over Antwerp Monday night was brought down by Belgian artillery fire at Hemixem, six miles out of Antwerp. The crew of 15 men were taken prisoners.

Another despatch from Antwerp says that this Zeppelin before it was brought to earth succeeded in dropping seven or eight bombs into Antwerp. One of the houses wrecked by these missiles was situated only 300 yards from the palace of King Albert. Seven persons were killed and six seriously injured by this explosion. Some other houses were half demolished by the falling bombs.

Dance Madness Nothing New.

The polka was comparatively new when Trollope wrote some of his novels. In "The Three Clerks" a young heiress speaks of a certain Frenchman as "the most delicious polkist you ever met. He has got a new back step that will amaze you." There was said to be in practice "every variation of the waltz and polka that the ingenuity of the dancing professors of the age has been able to produce."—Detroit Free Press.

To Surrender Cattaro.

ROME, Aug. 26.—(Via London.) —A despatch to The Corriere D'Italia from Anbivari, Montenegro, says the fortifications of Cattaro, the Austrian seaport at Dalmatia, on the Adriatic, have been completely destroyed and that the Austrian commander is now parleying for terms of surrender.

Austria Expects Japan To Act.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—The Exchange Telegram Co.'s Rome correspondent says that as a result of the Austrian Government having ordered the cruiser Kaiserin Elizabeth to join the German fleet at Tsingtau, the Austrian Government momentarily is expecting a declaration of war by Japan.

PATH OF THE RUSSIANS NOT EASY

Must Make Their Way Through Strong Fortifications

A despatch to the London Daily Mail from St. Petersburg says:

The German defence in East Prussia is based on four parallel and strongly fortified lines running north and south. Each is supported by natural obstacles. The foremost three lines are distinct groups of numerous lakes. The fourth and strongest defence line is the Vistula River, extending from the Russian frontier to the Baltic.

Outside these defence lines the Germans have on the northeast the very strong fortress of Konigsburg, with fortified advance positions at Libau and Tapiau. This is situated on the flank of the Russian line, and must be invested, necessitating the detachment of a considerable force.

Strongly Fortified

The foremost three defence lines are extensively fortified. There are important and permanent fortifications at Allenstein and Boyen, and the whole is filled with lakes, leaving only comparatively narrow defiles for the advancing troops. The country is full of fortifications, partly provisional and partly field works, most of which are armed with heavy guns. A frontal attack would be a very difficult task.

The Vistula, from 500 to 1,000 yards wide, is guarded by six fortresses. The largest are at Thorn in the south and at Danzig in the north. Between them are Fordon, Kulm, Graudenz, and Mariensburg.

Russia's Kitchener

A man entitled to rank among the first as an organizer of victory is compelled to remain far from the battlefield. He is General Soukhomlinoff, the Russian Kitchener, who is now reorganizing the Russian armies. Through him the armies have been irreproachably equipped, and the spirit of the men is the same as the spirit of the nation.

The defeat of three German army corps in Northeastern Prussia was converted into a rout by the timely arrival of another army coming from Warsaw, in the rear of the enemy's position. The Warsaw army, which was very powerful, completely turned the German position at Mazur lakes, and while extending its operations over a wide front westward, headed towards Allenstein. The German twentieth army corps thus became a nut between stout crackers. The commanders of both Russian armies acted with energy and promptitude, worthy executives of the brain dominating the whole army.

In Galicia

In Galicia the theatre of Russian strategy will be on a level with the victorious plan adopted further north. The Austrians in Lemberg probably will be taken in a similar vise. This may be inferred from the fact that one army has reached Rava, to the north of Lemberg. Another army is advancing from the southeast, as is shown by the fact that nine Russian cavalry squadrons have routed the entire Austrian cavalry division at Plukhow. The Austrian force retreating from Vladimir Volhynskiy, Russia, 17 miles from the frontier, towards Sokal, in Galicia, Austral, probably has been cut off. Grand Duke Michael, the Emperor's brother, has returned from abroad, and is going to the front.

MILK AS A FOOD.

It Has More Dry Matter and Nutrition Than Some Solids.

The food value of milk, though a hackneyed topic, is worth a moment's consideration, writes D. S. Burch in Farm and Fireside. Though it is a liquid, milk contains more dry matter than some solids. Skeptics can surprise themselves some dull day by putting a pan of milk in the inner part of a double boiler, evaporating it and observing the dry matter it contains. The figures that follow are interesting, too, from a food basis:

Foods.	Per cent dry matter.	Units of energy.
Milk	12.5	310
Mushrooms	11.9	188
Oysters	11.7	225
Spinach	7.7	96
Tomatoes	5.7	100

Notice that milk contains more food solids and units of energy than any article in the list. Milk also is more nourishing than tea, coffee or the common soups as ordinarily made.

It also has this advantage, that practically all of its solid matter is digested. It really contains no waste.

A quart of milk weighs about 2.1 pounds, which makes milk almost always cost less than 5 cents a pound, the cheapest of all common foods except flour and grain products, cheap cuts of meats and starchy vegetables such as potatoes. All these products require preparation and cooking, which add to all their original cost and should be considered in preparing foods.

The method for selecting the best grade of milk from the kinds available is a question which the consumer must help himself to answer. The best general rule is to observe the keeping quality of the milk. If kept in a clean place at a temperature of 60 degrees F. or less, good milk will remain sweet twenty-four hours after delivery.

Art and Children.

"What has art done for children?" This question was recently put to Walter Crane, the English illustrator, who has done so much to educate the childish eye for the beautiful.

"When we began to work and inaugurated the change from the dry little wood cuts and too often crude and vulgar illustrations and made as beautiful picture books as we could for children," said Mr. Crane, "we simply followed our personal tastes and delights, working as artists, and we thought chiefly of giving pleasure to ourselves and the children and not of any theoretic good that might accrue to them in after years as a result of what we did.

"Picture books are a necessity, especially to children. They think in pictures instead of in words and learn from them too. Drawing to a child is a language. Every teacher should be able to draw so that he can illustrate his meaning to his young pupils in the way they understand best. And children should be encouraged and taught to draw before they are taught to read."

MODERN JERUSALEM.

Very Different From the Ancient City in Its Oriental Setting.

Probably no modern city is more disappointing to the expectant traveler than is Jerusalem. We think of it in its ancient glory. We picture to our imagination the magnificent temple with its golden roof and the other great buildings of the hill of Zion. We read of its being the rendezvous in passover times of a million pilgrims, and we naturally think of it as an enormous city, comparable to London or New York of the present day. We think of it in its oriental setting of 2,000 years ago, but as we approach in a modern railway train and climb the steep ascent which leads to the city behind an American engine our illusion disappears.

At last the guard calls out "Jerusalem!" and we disembark a mile from the city, get into a rickety modern hack, which has evidently done duty in some more civilized community, and are bounced over the rough roads and the intolerable cobblestones within the gates, until at last we are landed at our modern hotel, so different from the khan of ancient times.

And here our disillusion has only begun. The city of which we read as accommodating 1,000,000 guests on the feast day could hardly today entertain 1,000 strangers within its walls, and since a multitude of pilgrims come every year from Russia and Italy and France and Germany, these nations have erected great hotels outside the walls for the accommodation of pilgrims.

But these, fine and even magnificent as they are, take us not back to the Jerusalem of 2,000 years ago, but tell us only of the modern city, where half a dozen great nations are building these hotels and hospitals in order to gain political and commercial advantage and patiently awaiting the time when they can oust from his possession the Turk who has so long held sway within the sacred city.—Christian Herald.

PAWNSHOP RUNNERS.

A Curious Feminine Profession That Exists Only In London.

A police court case has called attention to the existence in London of a vocation which is not known to exist anywhere else in the world. It is that of pawner, a profession given over entirely to women who, in the poorer districts of London, undertake for a small compensation to carry the goods of their necessitous but sensitive neighbors to the pawnshops. Most of this work of pawning is done for women who are ashamed to be seen entering a pawnshop, but some of it is done for other women who are too busy to attend to the formality.

In certain districts these pawners are known as "runners," and they live on this work, charging from 1 to 2 cents for each journey, according to the means of their clients. In one of the meanest streets of the east end, which has a pawnshop at either end, two women ply a busy trade as pawners.

One of these women is a widow known and trusted in this work, and she has built up a big connection in the neighborhood. She uses a perambulator and is frequently seen passing along the street with a load of miscellaneous articles destined for the hungry maw of the pawnshop. Monday morning is her busy day, as hundreds of ill paid casual laborers living in the district depend many times for their week's maintenance upon pawning something that day.—London Cor. Philadelphia Press.

Professor Bates was quizzing a student named Pond, who seemed to know nothing of the subject in hand. "Are there no fish in this pond this morning?" he exclaimed at length.

"Yes, professor," replied the student, "but the Bates no good."

He Admitted It.

"This is a fine time of the night to be coming home."

"You can't start an argument with me that way, my dear. I agree with you."—Detroit Free Press.

Great Expression.

"They tell me, Grimly, that your daughter sings with great expression."

"Greatest expression you ever saw. Her own mother can't recognize her face when she's singing."

CRETONNE COVERS.

They Have Superseded All Other Fabrics For Summer Upholstering.

CRETONNE CUSHION CHAIRS.

This is a cretonne season so far as house furnishing is concerned. Cretonnes face us on every side. They are used to cover walls, as door or window hangings, as bed coverings and even in upholstering summer furniture.

Two attractive summer chairs of wicker are pictured here. Owing to their shape, the mattress style of cushion is not adapted to them. They have cushions covered with handsome cretonne in futurist patterns.

SUMMER SHOPPING.

Leisurely and Systematic Ways of Doing It Will Prevent Exhaustion.

A plentiful supply of small change is often of great help to the summer shopper. Much tedious waiting may be avoided if one always has the right change. In most of the department stores, of course, shoppers must wait for certain formalities to be gone through with, whether they are to receive change or not. But at certain counters in these stores—at the notion counter usually and sometimes where toilet goods and soaps are sold—the shopper who has the exact change may pocket her purchase and leave immediately. And in anything but a department store exact change makes quick purchasing easy.

If you feel tired while shopping, rest. Exhaustion from heat can almost always be avoided. Rest is one way to avoid it. There are pleasant rest rooms in most of the big department stores, clean and comfortable, where you can relax for half an hour an hour if need be, and regain strength and composure.

If you are very tired, if your head throbs with heat, if you feel really ill from fatigue and warmth, select a comfortable chair, take off your hat, close your eyes and force yourself to relax. As soon as you are really refreshed go home. Leave the rest of the shopping for another day.

The slogan "Shop early!" ought to be sounded in the summer time, both for the shopper and for the clerk, for in summer the early part of the day is surely the coolest. Moreover, in most of the big cities the stores close early in summer, and the woman who shops late in the afternoon is keeping the clerks from much desired rest and recreation.

Cutting Small Pieces of Ice.

When you have a large cake of ice and want a small piece to put in a glass you are somewhat helpless if you have no ice pick at hand. Use an ordinary pin instead of an ice pick and you can have the ice in pieces the size you desire.

Press the pin into the ice as far as it will go and work it back and forth slowly and steadily until the ice splits. Then put the pin in a new place and make another cleft. In this way you can break off piece after piece of any desired size.

THE FASHION BUDGET.

Tub dresses are made with straight gored skirts.

Colored handkerchief linen dresses are in great demand.

White serge suits are brightened by a touch of brilliant color.

Amber tipped parasols are an English idea that seems to take.

Many shades of green and greenish grays are seen in dress materials.

Pretty buttons are of galalith decorated with gilt on Chinese characters.

The curiously carved wooden beads from the east are among the most artistic.

Seaside Care of the Hair.

Most people, even those who are accustomed to give the hair careful attention, are careless of their locks while staying at the seashore. As a matter of fact, more destruction may be wrought there in a month than can be remedied in six.

Before entering the surf it is a good plan for bathers to place a wet sponge at the back of the neck and let the water fall down the spine. This is to equalize the temperature. If one plunges head first into the water there will be a sensation of dizziness and fullness in the head. This shock affects the scalp and incidentally the hair.

The very best treatment for hair at the seashore is first to use the wet sponge as directed and after coming from the water to take the juice of a lemon and pour over it a cupful of boiling water. When this is sufficiently cool saturate the hair with it and dry with warm towel. In ten minutes rinse off with warm water.

Shampoo the hair frequently, using the yolk of an egg well beaten with a cupful of hot water and twenty drops of the spirits of rosemary. Rub this into the scalp, and after ten minutes rinse with warm water and dry.

When inconvenient to shampoo brush the hair well and use the following scalp wash:

Extract of witch hazel, one pint; eau de cologne, eight ounces; chloroform, three drams.

This treatment will cleanse and make the hair soft, glossy and fluffy.

After the Sea Bath.

Many women who bathe in the ocean have no idea of the damage done to the hair by allowing it to dry by sitting in the sun upon the beach.

The salt, wet hair and the sun's rays combined have a decidedly injurious effect upon the coloring matter of the hair. It fades blond hair into streaks of dirty yellow and dark brown or black hair into burnt reddish color.

Also, it renders the hair bushy, harsh and brittle. Then the fine, sharp sand cuts and irritates the scalp to such a degree as to give the impression of a scalp disease having been contracted. In fact, this sometimes actually happens owing to the itching and consequent scratching of the scalp.

There are also germs and microbes in salt water which can, of course, take up their abode in the hair.

The Soap For Summer.

Be careful in regard to the kind of soap you use in summer, and only use soap in washing the face at the night toilet.

Pure castile soap is the very best kind to use. It does not dry the skin and leaves it smooth and soft.

Both morning and night rinse the face in cold water after washing. This is a splendid complexion tonic.

Try softening the water in which you wash with a little oatmeal. The oatmeal should be sewed up in a thin muslin bag and allowed to soak in the water.

You've no idea how wonderfully refreshing to the skin it really is.

Bran Bag For the Skin.

Some women find soap irritating to the skin. The best thing to do in such a case is to use a bran bag instead. When the face is in need of a thorough cleansing, after a trip in the train, for instance, a cold cream bath will remove the dirt, and the bran bath will finish the work in a satisfactory way.

To make a bran bag mix equal quantities of powdered oatmeal and bran together and to a pint add one-half cupful of powdered soap. To this add about one ounce of powdered orris root. Fill small bags and use in the bath.

Protection From the Sun.

Before going out, lightly dab a little nongreasy face cream over the skin and then dust lightly over with some very good face powder. This effectively protects the complexion from the evil effects of exposure to a very hot sun, which, in spite of its health giving properties, serves to dry and burn the skin, causing it to wrinkle also if one does not take some such simple precaution as that prescribed.

A little sunburn is becoming, but too much exposure to sun and air is fatal to all complexion beauty.

Nerve Tonic.

When you are tired and nervous a good rubbing all over the body with the lotion given here will be very restful. Lie quietly in bed after the rubbing for half an hour and you will then feel equal to taking up the daily tasks again. Take diluted alcohol, six ounces; cologne water, six ounces, and tannin, ten grains.

Autumn Loss of Hair.

It is a well known fact that during the autumn the hair falls more freely than at any other season of the year; consequently one should really give the hair greater attention for some weeks previous and so prevent wholesale loss of it.

Skin Tonics.

Lemon, orange and cucumber peels are excellent for the complexion. Let them soak in water used for the bath, as they not only soften but tone and freshen the complexion, keeping the flesh healthy and firm.

England has one coachwoman.

TALKING FROM THE CHEST.

Not Necessary to Put a Telephone Transmitter to the Mouth.

In case one does not care to stoop to a telephone while talking, or does not care to put the transmitter to the mouth, he can make himself heard by very simple means. Simply place the abdomen or the chest against the mouthpiece of the transmitter and talk into the open air, and the sound will get to the party on the other end. The whole chest wall and the wall of the abdomen vibrate in unison when the mouth is speaking, as they are a great sounding board, and they will transmit the proper sound waves to the diaphragm. This is easy to try and astonishing in result.

Another peculiar thing noticed in telephones at times is phantom talk heard in a receiver when one is waiting for central to give connection. Odd scraps of conversations may be heard in this manner. They are probably due to conversations going on over wires lying in close proximity to the one that you are using—such conversations causing small oscillating currents which, by the process of induction, cause small oscillating currents to take place in your line of like character.—New York World.

Few Beds In Bagdad.

About 60 per cent of Bagdad's population possess no beds. These poor people rest on blankets spread on the floors of their houses in the winter and on the roofs in the summer. Owing to the excessive heat of these regions sleep is made impossible elsewhere than on the roof or in the open gardens. It is an interesting sight to see how the women at sunset emerge from their houses to prepare the evening meal on the roof and spread the bedding for the night. Inasmuch as the climate is very dry, there is little to fear from exposure to the night air. While a considerable number of the roofs are surrounded by latticework to insure a certain amount of privacy, by far the larger number are quite exposed to the gaze of curious and inquisitive neighbors.

Scotland's Patron Saint.

Why was St. Andrew chosen as the patron saint of Scotland? This question has been asked many times, but the archdeacon of whom Dean Hole tells may be considered to have discovered the most satisfactory solution of the problem. "Gentlemen," said he (he was speaking at a St. Andrew's day banquet at the time), "I have given this difficult subject my thoughtful consideration, and I have come to the conclusion that St. Andrew was chosen to be the patron saint of Scotland because he discovered the lad who had the loaves and fishes."—Dundee Advertiser.

A Difference.

"Say, mister, I hear you want a new office boy?"

"That's so."

"I'm the guy. What's the pay?"

"But I don't think you will do."

"What's the matter? Don't you want a new kid?"

"Yes, but not a fresh one."—Detroit Free Press.

Temperature of Soil.

Beyond a depth of three feet the temperature of the soil does not vary very much from day to day. At sixty feet it is impossible to measure any change due to changing seasons; at forty feet it is barely measurable. At twenty-five to thirty feet a change from season is quite perceptible, though the change takes over six months. At three feet the average annual means is 45 degrees F.; at twenty-five feet a degree more.

Studies in Canadian Imperialism

Canadian Imperialism in War Time

.... "Meanwhile the Mongolian sits in his inscrutable Orient, gazing with squinted eye upon the scenery, and congratulates himself upon the insanity of these Christian nations in slaughtering each other instead of combining to meet a possible colored conflict to come."

(Written specially for the Review by J. H. Laycock, M.A.)

The German Peril has come out from the shadows. It has shown that it is not the immaterial, ghostly illusion, the creation of hysterical minds, that a certain class of imperilistic, decentralizationists considered, but an actual, fire-breathing, fighting monster, the spirit of Kaiserin despotism, seeking on the one hand to check at the sacrifice of Germany's strongest sons, the Socialistic attack upon the Prussian autocracy and the Prussian bureaucracy, and, on the other hand, to further the cause of Teutonic Napoleonism in Europe and the world. The Austro-Hungarian emperor realized in the Servian propaganda one more step towards the inevitable dissolution of his whirlpool of subject nationalities into the separate channels of Slavism, Magyarism, Germanism and Latinism, and the Kaiser saw that a main pillar of the Triple alliance was crumbling, and that therefore the most audacious infant of Europe should be crushed at once, even if his sovereign rights must be violated. Therefore the Kaiser's hypocritical efforts, efforts in the interests of peace must be made by means of demands in St. Petersburg, Paris and London, rather than in Vienna, where they would have been more becoming, in view of Servia's humble attitude. The Teutonic attitude, in a untshell, is, Peace, if you do as we desire, otherwise war. Therefore, war it is.

Boch has declared that war is becoming impossible because of the magnitude of the forces engaged and the deadliness of the weapons; Norman Angell has led people to believe that war on a large scale is impossible because of the intricacy of modern commerce; and the German war lord has flung down the steel gauntlet in reply. The German march towards a place in the sun, the whole place, must proceed even if civilization must retreat for a generation. In the face of such facts, the pacificist argument of imperial decentralizationists is pierced to the heart.

Militant Canadian Imperialism.

Everywhere is heard the marching of men. The over-sea states did not wait for the bugle call of empire; and this time Canada's voice was not the last. An imperialist centralizationistic government was in the saddle. Flour to help feed Britain's millions was purchased. Organization of thousands of volunteers proceeded at once. Wide-awake, the administration forestalled the declaration of war by purchasing two extra submarines from Chile for the protection of the Pacific coast, and by proceeding to put the Niobe in commission. The Canadian spirit everywhere is for defensive war.

This aggressive Canadian attitude is more than any aggressive Canadian nationalism realizing that at times a defensive imperialism is politic, and that for the time being, when the empire is at war, Canada is at war. It is the whole-hearted recognition of practical conditions, that the time for world peace has not yet arrived, and that imperial solidarity is a necessity when ultimatums are issued, cannon mounted, flags flown and mad militarism let loose. It will result with many a criticism of the men who in the past blocked the progress of imperial centralization, the unification and the improvement of the over-sea land forces, the construction of Dreadnoughts for the imperial fleet, imperial centralization which would have met the existing crisis more effectively.

Liberal Defence.

The Liberals raise now the cry of patriotism to conceal their previous lack of imperial patriotism. They assert that the Conservative party in its renewed attack upon the Liberal policy of speeches rather than action, developed in the winter of 1912-13, are seeking to take advantage of a grave international crisis to advance base partizan ends. They point to the fact that in war time the once despised Rainbow and Niobe are fitted out for action, and that therefore the dismantling of them was for partizan ends. They cry with satisfaction, "Good for the 'Tinpots'," when they relate how the Rainbow picked up off the coasts of California the small British gunboats, the Algerine and the Shearwater, and brought them safely to British Columbian shores. They declare that if the Liberal government had been continued in power to carry out its policy of cruisers and destroyers, our coasts would be safe to-day instead of being practically unprotected.

Liberal Argument Answered.

Unfortunately for Sir Wilfrid Laurier's followers, this is a stern occasion, when the Canadian people, with the fresh, blood-red data of war at hand, cannot help but re-open the question of the wisdom of the Liberal policy in ignoring the advice of General Hutton and Lord Dundonald, for the efficient reorganization of the Canadian militia, and, later on, for the rapid construction of Dreadnoughts. In these turbulent times the voters of the Dominion cannot help but doubt whether men who failed to see the emergency and were therefore only wishing to build a Canadian fleet for holiday parade, can be trusted in the future with the problem of imperial defence, which has proved so necessary. The criticism of the Liberal policy does not involve the question of seeking partizan ends an attitude which would be quickly censured by the Canadian public, on account of the present situation; it involves the court martialing politically of those who are responsible for the neglect of the Dominion efficiently to prepare in peace for war. The Liberal apologists conveniently ignore the facts that the prime reason for the dismantling of the Niobe was the inability to secure sufficient men to man her; that, in any event, the elapse of much time was necessary before Canadian seamen could be trained efficiently for the purpose; and, lastly, that it is the presence in Canada of retired British naval men, responding to the call of duty, which now renders possible the putting out to sea of this ship. They overlook, also, that the Rainbow, in its Californian exploit, had to steal back to Canadian waters to avoid the attack of the far more modern and efficient fighting machines, the two German cruisers, the Leipzig and the Nurnberg, and seemingly now prefers to leave to the Japanese warship, the Idzumo, the dangerous task of seeking out and destroying the Teutonic pillagers of imperial commerce in the western Pacific.

The reason that the Canadian shores are not now more open to German attack is largely the fortunate fact that the war when it has come is not a struggle between Britain and Germany alone but between the Triple Entente and the Dual Alliance where a navar standard, easily two-power in its scope, exists in our favor. The North Sea and Baltic fleets which have bottled up the German squadrons seemingly in the Kiel canal are the real defenders of the Canadian coasts today, and in battle array there may be found "the Commonwealth" and "The Zealandia," but no "Canadiana." Let Sir Wilfrid Laurier tell the reason why.

Immigration and Imperial Defence.

From the Imperial point of view, already the war has been of great value in revealing the relation of Continental European immigration to the imperial problem of defence. Immigration has stopped with the war and emigration has begun, although undoubtedly, after the flames of the battlefield have been quenched, hard times in Europe will increase the efflux to Canada manifold, and if Germany remains a ruined battlefield, the Dominion will receive from thence the great numbers of this progressive people that she has long desired in vain.

During the past decade Canada has received from the two nations now at war with the Empire, Germany and Austria-Hungary, 36,299 immigrants and 191,850 immigrants respectively. In 1913-1914 5,537 from the former country and 28,323 from the latter passed through the portals of the Dominion. 15,849 Germans and 71,849 Austrians have arrived during the last three years and consequently cannot be legally naturalized. Bulgaria, Servia, Greece, Italy, Belgium and Russia, other nations of interest in the present conflict, during the same decade, have contributed to Canada 14,122, 1,038, 7,182, 112,730, 14,661, and 91,863 immigrants respectively. The attitude of all these men to the world war is hence of paramount interest, especially in view of the debateable proposal from Ottawa to amend the immigration act to exclude immigrants of nationalities now at battle with Great Britain, whether coming from Europe or the United States.

If for one moment the question of the nationality of the immigrant could be set aside and his natural inclinations judged we would probably find that his heart was with us in the struggle. They too would probably have cheered Colonel, the Honorable Sam Hughes when he spoke on August 14th, on Champ de Mars to the 5,000 volunteers of the Montreal garrison, and said, "If Germany succeeds in this war Belgium and Holland, and probably Denmark, will be annexed; Britain will become a second rate power; France will be wiped off the map, and we shall, in all probability, become subjects of that nation which denies the people that measure of liberty which we enjoy. But it is not the intention of Canadians that we should become slaves. We all know that our liberties are at stake, and to a man we Canadians are ready to do our duty." These new Canadians, naturalized or soon to be naturalized, usually know only too well what the oppression of military autocracies, bureaucracies, and dominant races means. They cannot help but realize that the Triple Entente, at least Britain and France, are fighting the battle of the small nationality, and are seeking through the defeat of the Kaisers the triumph of democracy and anti-militarism.

The Natural British Allies.

The nationalistic element, however, cannot be ignored. In the case

UNIQUE TATTOO

Big Musical Number of Exhibition is Along Original Lines

Grand Stand performances at the Canadian National Exhibition are a source of never-flagging interest and amusement to thousands of citizens who enjoy the varied programmes year after year, as well as to the many outsiders to whom they come as a distinct novelty. Among the attractions the tattoo is always most enthusiastically received and this year it promises to be exceptionally interesting. Ten bands, comprising four hundred musicians, will develop the theme of peace between Canada and United States along original lines. They will represent the four nationalities — American, French, British and Canadian, and with the wave of patriotism that has swept over the country, the scene can be depended upon to create an atmosphere of unrivalled enthusiasm. After a short programme by the massed bands, following the march in to the accompaniment of regimental airs, the lights go out. Then an illuminated Stars and Stripes appears at one end of the arena and at the other a Union Jack. The bands play "Peace, Perfect Peace," and a huge dove settles down over the sister flags, providing a most impressive finale to the three hours' entertainment.

HANGMAN ELLIS AS A VOLUNTEER

Is Said to Have Served With Kitchener at Khartoum

The Brandon Sun reports the fact that Arthur Ellis, official executioner to the Dominion Government, passed through Brandon on his way to join one of the eastern regiments.

Ellis is the man who officiated at the hanging of Robert Henderson, at the local jail.

He is said to have served with Kitchener at Khartoum and in the Soudan, being present at Omdurman. He has two sons already on the way to the front.

Ellis' headquarters have been at Westminster, B. C.

HUMAN BRIDGE FOR ARTILLERY

Experiences in Battle Told by Wounded French Soldiers

London, Aug. 26.—The correspondent of the Daily Mail describes a visit among the French, who were wounded in the battles of Vosges, and have been sent to Vichey, whose palatial hotels have been transferred into hospitals.

"I talked with many of these wounded," he said. "Three men who fought side by side said:—"It is probably our own fault that we are here. Our major fell at the first volley, and then all the other officers at succeeding volleys. When we found ourselves without officers we, not bothering about what was going on at the front, rear or flank, fixed bayonets at 1,200 yards and went at them, singing all the way. We were just fifty yards from the enemy when we were downed."

"In an adjoining cot was a peasant soldier who told me this story: "At Cirey a shell fell full on my knapsack, sending me sprawling face downwards. I did not stir, expecting every moment to be blown to atoms. After what seemed a half hour, seeing that the shell had not exploded, I hunched up my shoulders and the shell gently rolled off. It is a pity it was so big, as otherwise I should have brought it back as a trinket for my sweetheart.

"A wounded artilleryman contributed the following experience: "I witnessed one horrible scene. The Germans were shooting from the deep trenches among which our artillery was doing terrible work. But as fast as a German dropped a fresh man took his place until bodies of the Germans were on a level with the surface of the earth works. At this moment a German battery was ordered to advance. The heavy wheels sank in the trench, but the drivers furiously lashed their horses and finally dragged the guns across the human bridge."

of immigrants from the lands of Triple Entente and its allies the tendency of this factor is usually to augment the enthusiasm for the defence of the empire both indirectly and directly. We have all heard of the French reservists singing the "Marseillaise" on their way to the front. We have all realized the consequent enthusiasm of the French Canadian at the British action in assisting in the protection of the land of his ancestors, an enthusiasm which is bringing the two main races of Canada into a concord hitherto unequalled. We have all read of the Canadian Belgians hastening homeward to die for their dear old home. And of late we have had much interest in the eagerness of French, Belgian, and Slav reservists, unable to return to their own land, to enlist in a foreign speaking section of the Canadian contingents.

Immigrants from the Triple Alliance.

But with the exception of Italy, the immigrants from the lands of the Triple Alliance are placed in a painful situation. It is only natural that these settlers who have come to our Canada so recently, should have an overwhelming interest in the protection of their kinsman beyond the sea. The call to the reservists to return to Europe by way of New York, it is undeniable, found many Hungarians, Austrians and Imperial Germans, eager to respond to patriotism or to the innate love for fighting provided that the consuls would assure them that their passage would be paid back. Many others were compelled to respond as they realized that failure to do so would bar their future return to the land of their fathers. Many more felt the terror of the old officialdom even in the Dominion and seemed unconvinced that their country had no power to punish them for disobeyal or to enforce a government order coming thousands of miles. The vast majority of these foreign-speaking Canadians however have a general air of indifference regarding the outcome of the war strangely contrasting with the buoyant enthusiasm of the British, French, Belgian and Servian volunteers and reservists. It is a significant fact that as soon as it became apparent that the empire would never permit the return of reservists to the Dual Empire and to Germany, the number of applicants for consular certificates to show that they were prevented by lack of shipping facilities or lack of means from responding to the summons of the fatherland promptly increased. In this time of stress and strain it is a pleasing sight for immigrationists to see that German Canadians of the second and third generation from Berlin, Ontario, have offered their services to the Canadian government in the European war, probably from the mixed motives of gratitude to the land of their adoption, antagonism to the Prussian military and despotic control of the rest of Germany, and the recognition that the strong arm in this war is a strong arm in defence of democracy and the liberty of the smaller nationality. Lastly as far as the Italian immigrants are concerned, the same motives causing the peninsular government to remain strictly neutral are influencing them to desire the success of the Entente Cordiale and its allies: the racial regard for their Latin brothers of France and French Canada, the feeling that their allies by treaty opened an aggressive war without consulting them, the antagonism to the ambitions of the Dual Monarchy in the Balkan peninsula, the innate hatred for the Austrian who oppressed them for generations and who still stamps under his iron heel men of Italian blood and speech, and the knowledge that they would have much fighting with few of the spoils of victory.

Attitude of Oppressed Nationalities.

The attitude of the immigrants of the oppressed nationalities in Russia, Austria-Hungary, and Germany next calls for attention. All of the prominent Hebrew organizations combined in showing their loyalty to the British flag and in offering volunteers, a feeling bound to increase in view of the changed attitude towards the Jews of Russia, our ally. The attitude of the Poles and Ruthenians, or more properly, Ukrainians, was at first a problem of doubt. Naturally the impression would be that they would prefer the less severe despotic sway of the Dual Alliance to that of the Czar; but other factors enter into consideration.

Poland and the other oppressed nationalities of Europe have traditionally regarded Britain as their friend in any struggle for liberation. The Czar's proclamation promising the Poles automony within the empire is one of the most significant documents of the day. "The Russian army brings you," it reads, "the solemn news of this reconcilition which effaces the frontier severing the Polish people who act conjunctly under the sceptre of the Czar of Russia. Under this sceptre Poland will be borne again, free in her religion, her language and autonomy. . . . Russia from the shores of the Pacific Ocean to the North Sea marches in arms. The dawn of a new life commences for you. In that glorious dawn is seen the sign of the cross—the symbol of suffering and the resurrection of a people." Few Canadian Poles are optimistic enough to believe that this war will also favour the downtrodden even as the Crimean conflict led to the emancipation of the Serbs and the Russo-Japanese struggle to the inauguration of parliamentary institutions. The history of Poland has been so strewn with broken promises that its patriots in the Dominion as elsewhere believe that Britain and France have answered the perpetual prayer of Poland to force Russia to grant autonomy. Still it should be no occasion for surprise that the Russian bureaucracy, ambitious to establish a Pan-Slav empire, should realize the danger of giving to the Polish revolutionaries in a general European war the opportunity to strike for which they have so long waited; should see that their colossal dream is more possible through stressing the racial rather than the orthodox note; and should therefore seek the hearty co-operation of Slav, whether Greek or Roman in religion, whether Polish, Czech, Ruthenian or Serb in nationality, by hinting at the possible policy of autonomous Slav States within a Slav Empire. The immediate effect of the policy is to plant once more the seed of hope within the Polish Canadian breast, and to make his sympathies lean strongly towards the success of the British Empire and its compatroits in this war.

The proclamation of Russia to the Slavs of the Austrian province of Galicia also shows that the Russian people regard this conflict as a war to liberate the "Russia subjected to foreign power": "As tempestuous torrents break through walls of rock to join the sea, so ther exists no force which can arrest the Russian people in their rush toward unification." The new democratic tone of Russia may also bring the Canadian Ruthenians into closer sympathy with Britain and her allies. As the Orthodox Ruthenians and Slavs in the Dual Monarchy have been effected most by the Pan-Slavist campaigns of Russia and Servia, so likewise have the Roman and Uniat Catholic Ukranians and Croatians been least influenced. Thus it is no occasion for surprise that Bishop Budka, Ruthenian Bishop of what he calls "the Canadian Ukraine" should, in the days when it was uncertain whether Britain was to be dragged into the war or not, have counselled his clergy and all of the faithful to respond to the call of Austria and to defend Galicia "from the greed of Russia, ... and the iron hand of the Muscovite despot." Such letters should be treated by Canadians with toleration: the position of Austria and German subjects in Canada such as Bishop Budka, and of the Ruthenians who desire to return to protect their relatives in the old land is different from that of Canadian Ukrainians who have been naturalized and taken the oath of allegiance to the British crown. Professor Dr. Alexander Sushko represented well Catholic Canadian Ruthenian opinion when he wrote, "the Ruthenian Ukrainians of Canada who have settled in this new country, are sincerely attached to our new Fatherland, for which we are always ready, in case of necessity, to give up our property and blood." A meeting of Orthodox Ukrainians in Winnipeg, naturalized and unnaturalized, declared that Bishop Budka misrepresented them before their "fellow citizens of Great Britain" and asserted their loyalty to "King George" in this resolution: "That we wish to express in the name of all the Russian Orthodox immigrants through the English press our loyalty to Great Britain. We are prepared to give our lives for the defence of Great Britain and her king." These words form Canadian testimony of the tendency of Orthodox Ruthenians to consider themselves "Russians," and brings to our doors the fruit that the Russian Pan-Slav campaign has been bearing in the Austrian provinces of Galicia and Bukovina, while the reference to the King and to Great Britain rather than to Canada shows that these settlers have the true imperial idea of empire first, dominion second, in spite of the declaration of Canadian nationalists, so-called, that in Continental European immigration lies the greatest obstacle to imperial consolidation. These peoples are loyal to the British flag, willing to support the imperial arms everywhere except in a struggle with their European relatives.

Relation of the War to Imperial Consolidation.

The war is bound to hasten consolidation of the empire in either alternative. The partial shattering of the conclusions of Boch and Angell, and the elimination of buffer states, is bound to disturb the balance of the world power and to whet the appetite of the victors. Visions of this being the last world war are premature. The military consolidation of the empire at least, if not entire consolidation, should be an actual fact within five years.

If Germany wins on land, this is certain, of Russia wins, it is just as certain, if Russia wins, it is just as great a tendency, since the domestic revolution and the defeat by Japan, to regard the Muscavite empire as an unweildy conglomeration of oppressed nationalities, bound to fall to pieces when struck by a great power, and to overlook the vital bonds of race, religion, and civilization. This is a religious war; the Orthodox priests are in the van of the Russian advance on Protestant Germany and Catholic Austria-Hungary. It is a radcial war; the Romanoff autocracy is promising autonomy to Roman Catholic Poland and greater freedom to the Jews in order to prevent internal dissention and religion knifing Pan-Slavism. It is preeminently a war of civilizations: the Byzantine standard striving with the higher western for supremacy. Mad Austria in its unwise onslaught on Servia has given to the Czar perhaps the only war which can construct out of his subjects an harmonious, aggressive war machine; and mad Prussia in its march to European hegemony is causing internecine conflict between the forces of western civilization and enabling the segments of Byzantium to unite. While Britain, France, Germany, and Austria weaken their vitality in hard fought and long drawn-out combat, the Northern peril will increase, for the Slav portions of Austria-Hungary and Germany will crumble far more rapidly than the Teutonic parts. The less progressive sections of Europe, the fuel to fire a despot's ambition, border on Russia and the Balkan States. The experience in active warfare during the last decade has been confined almost solely to the Russian and Balkan peoples, a fact which will probably enable them to make more rapid progress in territorial acquisition than the Anglo-French alliance. Another factor in the Muscovite favor is the advantage of semi-primitive, self-supporting agricultural peoples over highly developed industrial nations in long, protracted warfare.

Who thinks that the Russian, with the Tartar so close to his skin, will tamely resign the spoils of victory at the behest of a triumphant Anglo-French alliance when the latter has an army smaller in numbers and strength? Or that the French, in view of this contingency, will resign control of conquered sections of Germany which would supply additional men to meet the new peril? Who can say that a second war may not result between a Russian-Balkan alliance and an Anglo-Latin Entente Cordiale?

Meanwhile the Mongolian sits in his inscrutable Orient, gazing with squinted eye upon the scenery, and congratulates himself upon the insanity of these Christian nations in slaughtering each other instead of combining to meet a possible coloured conflict to come.

Yes, Britain imperial centralization is a necessity and no distant dream.

ADJOURNED CASE FOR ONE WEEK

City Solicitor Has Other Cases for Magistrate's Ruling

The case of Albert E. Peake, traveller for a firm at Toronto, charged with an alleged breach of the Transient Traders' Bylaw No. 1773 has been adjourned for a week. When brought up in Police Court this morning the defendant's counsel, F. D. Kerr, admitted that Peake canvassed orders in the city and displayed samples of the goods and had not taken out a license. He was not on the assessment roll. City Solicitor Gordon, who conducted the prosecution had a list of similar cases which he wished Magistrate Dumble to pass upon.

The customary railbirds gave way to a large number of merchants who were interested in the case.

PETERBORO MAN WITH SECOND WILTS REGIMENT

Mr. Chas. Coleman has received a letter from Charles Payne of 73 Smith Street, who with about forty other reservists of the Second Wilts Regiment, sailed on the Lusitania for England, stating that the party is in good health and spirits and eager to reach the front.

Mr. Payne served in the South African war. He leaves a wife and four young children to pray for daddy as he fights for his country.

THE UTILITIES COMMISSION IN SHORT SESSION

The Peterboro Utilities Commission met yesterday afternoon and dealt with several minor matters. It was decided to lay a six inch main on Romaine Street from the Monaghan Road east as far as the material at present on hand would carry. The salary of T. Scott, an employee at the pump house, was increased $5.00 per month, making it $80.00. A communication was received from the Quaker Oats Co. asking for a connection to be made between the Hunter Street main and the six inch main on their property. The Superintendent informed the Commission that the cost would be about $50.00 and it was resolved that the work would be performed if the Quaker Oats Co. would pay the cost.

Manager Howse submitted specifications for electric meters and he was asked to obtain prices on them.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

CHILDREN AND BAND CONCERTS

Editor Review,

Dear Sir,—The action of a policeman at the band concert last evening in ordering children to the care of their parents, or else to go home at 9 o'clock, was noted with approval by the undersigned and probably by the majority of the audience. Those who love music prefer to hear it without that admixture of discordant and unnecessary noise made by excited children at all band concerts hitherto held in the park. The privilege thus to behave at any concert is neither an advantage to children nor to any else. It is a nuisance. Why has the lawful and simple remedy been so long delayed?

GENERAL ATTACK BY THE RUSSIANS SEEMS NEAR

But Road to Berlin is Beset With Many Forts and Papers Have Exaggerated the Russian Successes, But General Staff is Well Satisfied With Progress—Vanguard Are Too Impetuous.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—According to reports from St. Petersburg, the progress which the Russian army is making in its warfare against Austria and Prussia is satisfactory to the general staff, which is being accompanied by the Czar. The soldiers in the first line of the advance number 4,000,000, and a general attack is imminent in East Prussia. The advance is hindered by many forts, which must be overcome before Berlin will be endangered by the hard-fighting Cossacks. The Austrians have withdrawn before the onslaught of Russians, and the latter now control several passes in the Carpathian Mountains and along the Sereth river.

The Russian embassy here points out that the newspapers have exaggerated the victories of their army.

Telegraphing from St. Petersburg, the correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Co. says:

"The principal Russian losses in Prussia up to the present have resulted from the determination of the rank and file of the Russian army to get at the enemy. Although the mounted guards in the centre have suffered heavily, the infantry advances have been more than satisfactory. The enemy is virtually cornered in eastern Prussia."

A despatch to The Daily Mail from St. Petersburg says:

"The German defence in East Prussia is based on four parallel and strongly fortified lines running north and south. Each is supported by natural obstacles. The foremost three lines are distinct groups of numerous lakes. The fourth and strongest defence line is the Vistula river, extending from the Russian frontier to the Baltic.

"Outside these defence lines the Germans have on the northeast the very strong fortress of Konigsberg, with fortified advance positions of Libau and Tapiau. This is situated on the flank of the Russian line and must be invested, necessitating the detachment of a considerabel force.

East Prussia Evacuated?

PARIS, Aug. 26.—A despatch from St. Petersburg says that the Germans have evacuated east Prussia and that Austria has declared war on Japan.

The Russian War Office some days ago pointed out that it is hardly worth while to become too enthusiastic over early reports of Russian successes in eastern Prussia, because before a real advantage could be gained there, it would be necessary to take a strong line of forts, including Konigsberg, Posen and Thorn. There is no news of these strongholds having fallen. It is also to be remembered that early French successes in eastern Prussia were contradicted by later reports.

FATE OF FRANCE DEPENDS ON BATTLE NOW RAGING

Alsace Has Been Evacuated in Order to Strengthen Army at Maubeuge, Where Momentous Conflict is in Progress.

PARIS, Aug. 26.—The War Office has issued the following official announcement:

"The commander-in-chief, requiring all available forces on the Meuse, has ordered the progressive abandonmen of occupied territory. Muhlhausen has again been evacuated."

"A new battle is in progress between Maubeuge (department of the Nord) and Donon (department of Doubs.) On it hangs the fate of France. Operations in Alsace along the Rhine would take away troops upon which might depend victory. It is necessary that they all withdraw from Alsace temporarily, in order to assure its final deliverance. It is a matter of hard necessity.

"West of the Meuse, as a result of orders issued on Sunday by the commander-in-chief, the troops which are to remain on the covering line, to take up the defensive, are massed as follows: The French and British troops occupy a front passing near Givet which they gained by hard fighting. They are holding their adversaries and sharply checking their attacks.

"East of the Meuse our troops have regained their original position commanding the roads out of the great forest of Ardennes.

"To the right we assumed the offensive, driving back the enemy by a vigorous onslaught. Gen. Joffre stopped pursuit so as to rearrange his front as decided upon Sunday. In this attack, our troops showed admirable courage. The sixth corps notably inflicted punishment on the enemy close to Virton.

"In Lorraine the two armies have begun a combined attack, one starting from Grand Couronne De Nancy, and the other from south of Luneville. The engagement, which began Monday, continues at the time of writing. The sound of cannonading is not heard at Nancy, as it was Monday."

"The fifteenth corps, which suffered heavily in the last fight, had the gaps in its ranks filled, and formed part of one of the two armies. It executed a brilliant counter attack in the valley of the Vezouse. The attitude of the troops was splendid, effacing all memories of their conduct on Aug. 20.

"Notwithstanding the fatigue of the three days battle and the losses they have undergone, the moral of the troops is excellent and they are anxious to resume the fighting. The outstanding incident on Sunday was the fight between Algerian and Senegalese riflemen and the Prussian guard. Our African soldiers hurled themselves with unbridled fury on this solid body and the attack became a hand-to-hand combat, in which the guard suffered heavily. The German Emperor's uncle, Gen. Prince Adalbert, was killed and his body taken to Charleroi.

In the north, detachments of German cavalry, which appeared Sunday in the neighborhood of Lille, Roubaix and Tourcoing, were observed Monday near Douaai. This cavalry cannot advance much further without the risk of falling into the British lines, which have been reinforced by French troops."

Following is the statement issued at the close of a hurried war council here, for which generals of the general staff were summoned from the front:

"There is no doubt in the minds of the President and his Ministers, in our final success. Every engagment in which the enemy suffers losses only weakens him the more. The Germans are far from their main base. We were brought closer to ours by falling back on French soil. We are content to remain on the defensive for the present, but our time is coming."

Following the report here that the German armies are about to execute a concentrated advance on the French capital, France has been bracing up the lines of her forces to-day, to meet the advance of the Germans along the Luxemburg frontier, whither they are approaching, what might seem to soldiers of less courage in overwhelming numbers.

At the same time, the French have boldly renewed the offensive in Belgium. The admission is made at the French War Office, according to despatches that France has been defeatfeated at Lorraine and that the Kaiser's troops are aggressively engaged on French soil, massing at Luneville, Blamont and Cirey, forcing the French to retire on their barrier fort line extending from Verdun to Belfort.

No less than 700,000 Teutons are now said to be about to hammer at this line of forts and the huge army is being reinforced daily.

The official statement from the French War Office relative to the victory at Malines, Belgium, of an army of French, British and Belgians, says:

"The German offensive movement in the north, which was stopped Monday, appears to have been resumed. The enemy is, however, being held back by a French army acting in conjunction with a British army and a Belgian army. The Belgian army came from Antwerp. The armies of the allies surprised the enemy and drove back advance detachments."

NATIVES IN COLLUSION WITH ENEMY FRENCH SAY

PARIS, Aug. 26.—A despatch received here from Bourges gives the recital of a French officer wounded in Lorraine. He sets forth how the Germans were aided by the local inhabitants, who had prepared for every eventuality.

The officials of villages in Lorraine fell upon the necks of the French troops when they came into town and greeted them as saviors. No sooner had they done this than they would go to the edge of the village and hang out French flags, big white sheets, etc., to indicate to the enemy the exact position of the French soldiers.

The mayor of one village tapped a French field telephone wire for the benefit of the enemy, after having offered a room in his house for the installation of the station. A local schoolmaster corrected the range of the German guns by moving the hands of the church clock.

At Dieuse, the French were persuaded that they would meet no opposition. Despite these assurances, however, they came upon concrete trenches filled with German troops and supported by quick-firing guns.

REFUGEES POUR IN

Maastricht is Scene of Most Acute Misery

MAASTRICHT, Holland, Aug. 26.—This city presents scenes of suffering and misery seldom seen. Across the neutral frontier have come hundreds of refugees, without money, without food, and with only the clothing they stand in.

Refugee camps have been established by the Dutch Red Cross and feeble efforts are being made to relieve the suffering of the men, women and children who fled their Belgian homes before the German advance.

Several hospitals have been improvised. Here the sick and the wounded are being treated. Meanwhile the roads toward Belgium have been barricaded and the Dutch troops have been massed to see that the neutrality of the nation is not violated.

BRITISH FORCES IN NEW POSITION

LONDON, Aug. 26.—War experts declare that Namur is of great importance to the Germans in the present campaign. Referring to the situation the official bureau has issued the following statement:

"The British forces have reached their new position. Fighting is going on continually, but the enemy has not effectively harassed our operations and the movement has been effected with great skill by the commander of the first and second army corps. The casualties are not heavy and have not been estimated. Two German army corps opposed our forces."

Still Watch For Convict.

KINGSTON, Aug. 26. — Armed guards are scouring the bush near Inverary for the Austrian convict who escaped a few days ago from the penitentiary. The convict, at the point of the guard's rifle that he had in his possession, held up a man near Inverary and stripped him of his clothes. It is believed the convict is in hiding in the bush.

GETS TWO YEARS

MONTREAL, Aug. 26.—Vassal L. Delmege, the collection clerk who was said to have stolen sums of money from the Merchants' Bank, variously estimated at from $50,000 to $100,000, and who was specifically charged with misappropriating money aggregating $8,383.75, was yesterday morning sentenced by Judge Bazin in the Court of Special Sessions to two years in St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary.

Judge Bazin in rendering judgment said that he had taken into consideration the fact that the prisoner had made substantial restitution to the bank, so far as he and his friends had been able to do so; that this was his first offence and that he was a young man.

People Crowding Into Ostend From All Points

LONDON, Aug. 26. — From all parts of Belgium refugees are arriving at Ostend, says the correspondent of the Reuter Telegram Co. Some come from distant Charleroi and other towns along the Sambre, where they say they were being deafened by the roar of artillery, more guns being in action than they ever thought existed.

These people, of all classes, are on a level, the rich, or those who were rich, finding it just as difficult to get the necessaries of life as the poorest. The hotels are crowded by people of means, who, having lost their baggage, have nothing but what they are wearing. Many young men, who belonged to the civic guard, but who were disarmed and deprived of their uniforms, are going about in the cheapest clothes, purchased in the streets of Ostend.

"Every boat to Folkestone," adds the correspondent, "is said to be the last, and every day there is a rush to the quay, for nobody wants to be in Ostend when the Uhlans arrive, and rumor has them coming hourly."

SENSITIVE SEISMOGRAPHS.

They Serve Other Purposes Than Recording Earthquakes.

Contrary to popular belief, earthquakes are by no means rare occurrences. As a matter of fact, practically all places on the surface of the earth experience some kind of tremor or shake at least once an hour, and lesser tremblings are even more frequent. This fact has been established since the opening throughout the world of stations where seismographs record the slightest movement of this earth of ours.

The seismographs can be made to serve several other useful purposes besides the recording of earthquakes. Some of them are so delicate that a railroad train running a mile away will affect them.

Seismograph records have frequently been produced in court to show that the operation of heavy machinery produced sufficient vibration in near by buildings to make the owners of the factory liable for damages.

Probably the most unusual purpose to which the seismograph has ever been put is that of determining the amount of vibration in a locomotive as a result of unbalanced driving wheels. Engineers have devised some ingenious methods of cutting down this vibration, which means a greatly decreased consumption of coal.—New York American.

CHICAGO, Aug. 25.—Wheat again responded to the bugle call today and registered a gain of 3½c to 3⅝c on the theory that Europe would have to pay the price. The prices constituted new high levels for the crop. Corn advanced ¾c to 1⅝c and oats ⅞c to 1¼c, while provisions concluded the session 7½c lower to 22½c higher, except September pork, which was neglected and dropped to 65c.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 25.—Wheat prices were decidedly unsettled and the range of fluctuations unusually wide. Sentiment generally is that wheat may be worth money later, the heavy movement, however, tending to check the bullishness. The weather continues unfavorable, rain having been general all thru the west.

Winnipeg wheat opened unchanged to 2½c higher and advanced 2½c to 3⅛c from Monday's close. At noon prices were: Oct., $1.09; Dec., $1.09⅛, and May $1.15⅛. Trading in futures was light, and on the close there were further sharp advances.

Closing prices were 4⅛c to 4⅝c higher.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 25.—There were a few loads of Manitoba spring wheat sold over the cable today, this being the first business reported since war was declared. The enquiry for oats from London and Glasgow is fair, but owing to the small supplies now available on spot and in the west, little business can be done. The local market is firm with a steady demand for car lots. In flour the feeling is strong owing to the further sharp advance in prices for wheat in the west but prices show no change. A number of cars of American winter wheat flour have been imported and sold, duty paid, at $5.75 to $6 per barrel in jute, ex-track. Demand for millfeed is fair. Rolled oats were strong and 45c per bag higher. Baled hay was active with prices tending upward. Butter is quiet but firm. The demand for cheese is good and a fair trade was done over the cable.

The Backbone of National Prosperity

FARMING is by common consent the basis of our national wealth and prosperity. The farmers of Canada have, for the past two years, been getting top prices for what they have had to sell and have been able to obtain what they have had to buy at moderate prices. The war means better times for farmers.

Where the foundations of national wealth and prosperity are sound and assured, hopefulness may build her structures with confidence.

Business in Canada can and will be good if our business men will do their utmost to keep the bottom in business. Advertising is a good workman for this purpose.

OVERSEAS NATIONS MUST SHARE BURDEN

LONDON, Aug. 26.—The publication of Lord Kitchener's hint in the House of Lords yesterday that the war might last for three years had a depressing effect on the reading public in London. The statement followed an explanation of his position in the Cabinet. He predicted conflicts which would put the forces of the whole British Empire to the test. He asserted that the people would be called upon to make great sacrifices in the present struggle and declared that "The preservation of our position in the world will be shared by our dominions which are now sending contingents and lending assistance of every kind to the Mother Country."

The Evening News says: "Not only are we not beaten, but we do not intend to be beaten. We are going on till we win, but we need men, and we need them now."

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "This thing will be fought clean through to a finish, and the end will only come when victory has crowned the standards of right and freedom."

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, David Lloyd George, yesterday introduced a bill in the House of Commons enabling him, instead of actually issuing notes to bankers, to issue certificates, so as to give the bankers the benefit of state credit without actually taking out notes.

The Chancellor considers that this will undoubtedly be of great advantage in assisting them to finance trade.

GAVE FALSE EVIDENCE

ST. CATHARINES, Ont., Aug. 26.—Hazel Taylor, ward of the Hamilton Children's Aid Society, had signed a statement that she gave false testimony before Magistrate Campbell of St. Catharines against Nelson Hodgkins, Gainsborough Township, at whose home she lived, charging the aged man with assaulting her. Hodgkins had been committed for trial at the next assizes here, but the case will not now go to trial.

THE SPORTING WORLD

BLOUNTMEN AGAIN HELD BRANTS TO SINGLE TALLY

Jinx Chase Was Jolted Despite His Extra Work With the Club.

The Petes added another to their win column yesterday afternoon and simultaneously kicked Brantford down another peg. The gallery in the ball lot was well filled with the fair populace, it being their day, and, needless to say, the 3-1 victory suited them to a nicety. The game wasn't exactly a pitcher's duel, but one of thost swatfests where the fielders had their share of the work.

Louie Schettler was sent to the slab and had six strike-outs to his credit, as compared with Chase, his opponent's three. This said Chase is an old Peterborough jinx, but when he found he couldn't fool them at the plate, he tok revenge while at bat and secured three swats in three trips. Roth, the third sacker from Deneautown, had three out of four.

The features of the game were the fielding of Burrill and a one-hand spear by Fox on the last man up.

First Inning.

Frantford—Long went safe on Fox's error, and Nasher sacrificed him to second. Dudley skied to Blount and Cosma struck out. No runs, no hits, one error.

Peterboro—Blount lifted to centre. Welsh popped to Chase, and Dolan flied to Burrill. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Second Inning.

Brantford—Roth singled over King's head; Burrill sacrificed him to second, and he took third on Fried's infield out. Lacroix went out, Fox to Dolan. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterboro—Rooney walked and Byrne sacrificed him to second. King popped to Roth, and Fox fanned. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Third Inning.

Brantford—Chase burned one over short, and took second on Long's infield out. Nasher flied to Rooney and Dudley grounded to Dolan. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterboro—Kelly opened with a double to left. He went to third when Chase threw low to Nasher in an attempt to get him off the bag. Schettler singled, scoring Kelly and Blount sacrificed him to second. Welsh fanned, but Dolan singled over short and Schettler counted. Rooney went out, Fried to Dudley. Two runs, three hits, one error.

Fourth Inning.

Brantford—Cosma fanned. Roth bit to centre. Burrill singled to left. Fried struck out, and Schettler handled Lacrioux's grounder and touched first en route to the bench. No runs, two hits, no errors.

Peterboro—Byrne grounded to short. King poled out a triple to left. Fox fouled to Roth, but Kelly went out, third to first. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Fifth Inning.

Brantford—Chase doubled to left. Long skied to Welsh, and Nasher to Blount. Dudley lifted to Rooney. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterboro — Schettler scratched one over Nasher's head. Blount sacrificed, Chase to Dudley. Welsh flied to Burrill, a nice catch by the right gardener. Dolan singled, scoring Schettler, but was caught stealing. One run, one hit, no errors.

Sixth Inning.

Brantford—Cosma walked. Roth singled. Burrill poled a sacrifice fly to Blount, Cosma scoring. Roth was out stealing, Kelly to King, and Fried popped to Fox. One run, one hit, no errors.

Peterboro—Rooney flied to short. Byrne fouled out to Lacroix, and King flied to Burrill. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Seventh Inning.

Brantford—Lacroix grounded to Fox. Chase singled through second. Long flied to Rooney and Nasher fanned No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterboro—Fox missed three. Kelly grounded to Nasher, and Schettler lifted to Burrill. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Eighth Inning.

Brantford — Dudley skied to Blount. Cosmo fanned, and Roth flied to Rooney. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Peterboro — Blount went out, pitcher to first. Welsh lifted to Cosma and Dolan hoisted to Burrill. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Ninth Inning.

Brantford—Burrill struck out. Fried flied to Rooney and Lacroix drove one over Fox's head which the short fielder speared. No runs, no hits, no errors.

COMMENT

As You Like It

Doc Reisling's Londoners, who are making such an attempt to beat the terrible Shag for the Canadian league [illegible], will play their final series with the Petes to-morrow, Friday and Saturday. The games to-morrow and Saturday will be called at 3 o'clock.

"Hal" Chase hits the pill as though he meant to slam it out. Peculiar swing for a pitcher.

Billy Garlow, erstwhile hurler for the Hams, is playing good ball for the Lewiston club of the New England league. In a recent game with Manchester, he held them to a solitary bingle and won 1-0.

Louie Schettler continues to be the leading strike-out artist of the Canuck league.

Chester King appears to prefer batting against port-siders. His three-bagger yesterday was ticketed for a home run had the ground been hard.

Speaking of Garlow and other former Canadian league players, does anyone remember George Dunlop, the 1913 shortstop of London, who was sold to Cleveland? He was kicked back so far into the bushes that he refused to report and has been suspended. The last place he was ordered to was the Grand Island team in the Nebraska State league. That's class D ball.

There isn't a shortstop in the big leagues batting over .280, and the only men up that high are Herzog and Fletcher. The average in the American league is .238 and in the National .260. Frank Fox is batting .218.

FIFTEEN C.P.R. EMPLOYES ARE NOW UNDER ARREST

Toronto, Aug. 26. — Fifteen employes of the central division of the Canadian Pacific Railway are now under arrest on charges of conspiring to defraud the company. To the six arrested late Monday night and early Tuesday morning, ten more were added yesterday. Seven of these were aprehended in Toronto, while the other three were caught in North Bay by the Provincial Police. It is expected that more arrests will follow today. Those already apprehended are :—

Henry Coker, conductor, 103 Gore Vale Avenue ; R. Goggin, conductor, Toronto ; James Burton, 139 Galley Avenue ; Fred C. Lee, chief information clerk, 1140 College Street ; P. E. McCarl, dining and sleeping car conductor, 333E. Harbord St. ; Alex. McNeilly, conductor, 770 Keele Street ; Fred Hartley, conductor, 485 Brunswick Avenue ; William Mitchell, conductor, 134 Annette Street ; Richard Reid, bartender Sudbury ; Wilmot Wilson, conductor, 132 St. Clarens Avenue ; Joseph Edgar, conductor, 358 Shaw Street ; W. Page, baggageman, Toronto ; J. Walters, conductor, Toronto.

The six who were arrested on Monday night and Tuesday morning appeared in the Police Court yesterday morning. They were [illegible] by T. C. Robinette, who secured a remand for one week without plea or election. With the exception of Lee and Reid, all the accused were admitted to $2,000 bail. Lee and Reid were released on $3,000 bail.

The charge against the men is that they have conspired to defraud the railway company by charging certain persons less than the regular fare, and in place of returning the money to the company have pocketed it themselves. They are also accused of allowing certain persons to ride free.

WHITES MUST BOW.

How Black Haytian Plucked the Cigar From Mouth of Canadian.

Certain Canadians from whose cheeks the tropical tan has not yet faded are un-Booker T. Washingtonish enough to wish that the colored ruler of Hayti had, like Pharaoh, hardened his heart and refused to pay that little item of $62,000. This was the bill rendered recently by Great Britain for the destruction of a Britisher's sawmill in one of the perennial revolutions. The dusky potentate who rules at Port au Prince was informed that he had until just six o'clock to come across with the coin. Otherwise, the cruiser Suffolk would put one of King George's officers in charge of the custom house. After a very brief deliberation, Hayti's Government touched the National Bank for the amount and paid over the gold.

These Canadian tropical trippers who took in the sable isle on the Panama cruise, have a grudge against Hayti and its native population, hence their expressed wish that the President would dare attempt to beard the Lion.

Hayti, the negro republic, is a land where the white man gets off the sidewalk to let his superior black brother pass. Here the brash colored man is at his brashiest, and gets away with it every time. Negro policemen back him up. Negro soldiers back them up, and higher up still are ebony officials and an Ethiopian President.

Notwithstanding Hayti is a popular port of call and here the Canadian contingent spent a day — and what a day!

One of the number was walking up a main thoroughfare with a friend enjoying a perfecto, when suddenly a native sprang out from an alleyway, grabbed the torch from the gentleman's astonished mouth and made off with it.

Just at this time another Canadian was haggling with one of the vociferous crowd of cabbies.

The avaricious Jehu demanded $5 for his fare, whereupon the passenger beckoned a policeman. Clutching the $2 proffered to the driver, this guardian of the peace dashed off with it, followed by the infuriated cabby.

More serious than funny was the predicament that another party from the same ship got into when, after viewing the old cathedral they turned to find the door locked and themselves confronted by a naked dirk in the hands of a ransom-demanding guide.

"Why doesn't the steamship company police this wharf?" angrily asked one passenger who had been jostled by some Haytians.

"It's a wonder (pointing out over the harbor) that that dinky Yankee gunboat of yours wouldn't do something to keep this place in order," retorted the steamship officer.

All visitors were disgusted with the filth of Port au Prince and the lawless disorder of its negro population, one of the Canadian squad commemorating his impressions in verse.

A Medal of Blood.

Garibaldi was once presented with a medal made of his own blood. The giver was Dr. Manini of Naples, who was well known as a petrifier and preserver of the human body. Dr. Manini in offering the gift to Garibaldi said that whenever the general looked at it it would brace him up for the last fight, and across the medal were engraved the words, "The Blood of Garibaldi Is Forever Red." The strange medal is preserved by the general's descendants.

Where are the mighty men of old
Who used to tear around
And gather glory tinted gold
And other nations pound?
Alas, they all are laid away
Safe in the halls of fame!
But we have other men today
Who get there just the same.

Where are the men who used to plow
The mighty, raging main
And scuttle every passing scow
On which their guns might train?
They lie some forty fathoms deep.
Long since are hushed their knells.

BRING THE FARMERS AND UNEMPLOYED TOGETHER

Editor Review,

Sir,—Many men in the city with families and without, are out of work. From what they say to me I believe that most of them are capable of doing ordinary unskilled farm work. On the other hand I have met many farmers who complain of not being able to get "help." Why can these two "wants" not be brought together? It would be greatly to their mutual advantage and would relieve the anxiety incident to the prospects for the winter.

Yours,
J. H. BURNHAM.

MABEL HACKNEY LEFT PROPERTY VALUED AT $25,000

London, Aug. 26.—Letters of administration have been granted of the estate of Mrs. Mabel Lucy Irving (Miss Mabel Hackney), of 27 Gilston Road, The Boltons, South Kensington, S.W., the well known actress, who perished with her husband in the Empress of Ireland disaster on May 29.

She died inestate, and the grant states that her husband, Laurence Sydney Brodribb Irving, is also dead, and that there is no evidence to show which of the two was the survivor.

As she died without child or father letters of administration have been granted to her mother, Mrs. Susan Lucy Hackney, of Nottingham, who has valued the property at $25,000 gross.

Mr. Laurence Irving left property valued for probate for $4,500.

TEA MEN FACE GREAT DIFFICULTIES

"If the embargo is lifted it will certainly have a good effect on the tea trade, for as it is we will have no tea in three weeks or less," said the manager of the "SALADA" Tea Co. when told that a cablegram stated that the tea embargo was to be raised, "although we are cutting down all orders to the smallest possible dimension. For instance we had orders from Detroit last week for 42,000 lbs. We cut these down to less than 20,000 lb.—so throughout the U.S. as well as Canada. If it is a fact that the embargo is to be taken off it will still take five weeks to get teas here from London, and it may take very much longer, because of the difficulties of getting steamers to carry.

To be sure we have lots of difficulties with which to deal besides the embargo—freights have nearly doubled—war risk insurance — the impossibility of obtaining exchange on London, which none of the banks here have to sell—at least they had not two or three days ago when we were trying to buy.

To add to our troubles, on Friday last we received a telegram stating that the S.S. "Keelong" had arrived at Boston with a lot of tea for us which we hoped to have rushed here, but the American Express Co. who were to rush the shipment up here, advise us that the steamship company are holding up the whole cargo. We have other teas on the "City of Norwich" and the "City of Durham," both of which are some place in the Mediterranean, but away behind time.

As to the future of tea—we are just as much in doubt as though we were not in the trade at all. We have never had so much worry and trouble in our forty years' experience. This has been chiefly brought about by abuse from our customers for not delivering them their orders in full, when we positively have not the tea to deliver.

The public can depend on the "SALADA" Tea Co. serving them as it has for twenty-five years back, with the finest quality of tea at the very lowest price at which it can be sold.

VICTORIA PRESS PAY TRIBUTES TO LATE COL. ROGERS

Canada Never Produced Finer Type of Citizen Says Victoria Times

THE FUNERAL

Victoria, B.C., papers which have just been received pay glowing tributes to the late Col. H. C. Rogers, whose sudden death shocked the citizens of Peterboro, with whom the late Colonel had been associated for so many years. The following is taken from the Victoria Times:

The funeral of the late Col. Henry C. Rogers took place this morning from the residence of G. H. Barnard, M.P., Rockland Avenue, the cortege leaving the house at 11 o'clock and arriving at St. John's Church at 11.30. The church was crowded, most of the leading society and professional classes of the city being noticed among the congregation. The service was conducted by the Very Rev. Dean Doull, Revs. F. H. Fatt and William Barton, the selected hymns being "Abide With Me," and "Lead Kindly Light."

The solemn message of the ninetieth psalm was impressively given. The pallbearers who bore the casket to the hearse were old friends of the deceased, and included Colonels Lawson, Wadmore, A. W. Jones, Majors Ridgway Wilson and Walsh, and Hon. D. M. Eberts, K.C., M.P.P. Interment subsequently took place at Ross Bay cemetery. A very large number of floral tributes, some of them from public bodies with which the deceased had been connected, bore tribute to the high respect in which he was held by his contemporary generation.

The late Col. Henry C. Rogers, who died suddenly at the summer residence of his daughter, Mrs. Harold B. Robertson, on Friday when visiting Shawnigan lake, was a well known figure in the city, and at all patriotic demonstrations, being particularly regular in his attendance at gatherings of the Canadian Club. He came from Peterborough in 1909 to join his children, most of whom were already settled here, being accompanied by Mrs. Rogers, who died about one year ago. Since then he had made Victoria his home.

His last act was a patriotic one, the bidding farewell to a son, Capt. G. H. Rogers, who left on the last Empress to sail for India to join his regiment, the 11th Rajputs, Indian army.

The colonel was born in Grafton, Ontario, on July 16, 1839, and as a young man went to Peterborough, where he engaged in commercial pursuits till his appointment as postmaster, which office he held for 37 years, retiring in 1909. He joined the militia as a young man, and with his regiment, the Peterborough Rifle company, he served as lieutenant at the time of the Fenian raid.

He was appointed captain of No. 1 company of the 57th Battalion of Infantry when it was organized, holding the captaincy till 1872, when he retired with the rank of major. He next organized C troop of the Third Canadian Dragoons, ranking as captain, and rising to lieutenant-colonel. In 1895 he assumed command of the regiment, retiring four years later when he reached the age limit. He received Fenian raid and long service medals.

The deceased gentleman was very favorably known during his residence in Victoria as a genial and courteous friend, and his decease will be sincerely mourned by many. He had spent the summer largely at Shawnigan lake with his daughter and son-in-law.

Canada never produced a finer type of citizen than Coloned Rogers, whose death was reported in the Times on Saturday. The Colonel was honorable in his dealings with all men, was highly esteemed by all who had the privilege of knowing him, with his simple, unaffected manners and very attractive personality. He was a true gentleman of the old school and served his country faithfully in many capacities. His family have the sympathy of the community in their bereavement.

LABOR MEN NOT AGREED AS TO WAR

Winnipeg, Man., Aug. 26. — The Bricklayers and Masons' International Union, at a meeting here, decided to pay the dues of members who had enlisted for war service.

This fund carries a death benefit of 500, and as some 70 members have enlisted, the action of the union is noteworthy.

As a protest against the position taken by the Trades and Labor Congress in opposition to war, a resolution was adopted to the effect that the union would no longer send delegates to the Congress. It was also decided not to take part in the Labor Day parade.

GREAT CARDINALS AS CANDIDATES FOR PAPAL CHAIR

Cardinal Merry Del Val not Mentioned for Pontificate

The eyes of all christendom will be fixed upon the Vatican when the cardinals of the Sacred College will meet in conclave early in September to elect a successor to the late Pope Pius X. It is taken for granted, of course, that the new Pope will be an Italian ecclesiastic, following the tradition of the Church.

Of the thirty odd living Italian cardinals, a dozen at least can no longer be considered candidates for the pontificate on account of their age. Cardinal Di Pietro is 86, and Cardinal Agliardi, 82.

A conclave never considers as a possible candidate a cardinal over 70. The usual age is between 58 and 70, but there is no fixed minimum age limit.

The outstanding figure in the Sacred College for many years was Cardinal Rampolla, who died on December 17, 1913. His election to the chair of St. Peter was prevented in 1903 by the exercise of the veto at the instigation of the Emperor of Austria. This veto was abolished by Pope Pius X. shortly after his election. Had he lived, Cardinal Rampolla might have reached the papal chair on this occasion, for his following was powerful, and his friends are a factor to be reckoned with in the Sacred College. This group includes such men as Cardinals Agliardi, Rinaldini, Gasparri, Lorenzelli, Di Pietro, Martinelli, Falconio, Granito del Belmonte, and Vico.

Merry Del Val's Position.

Cardinal Merry del Val is not mentioned as a candidate while he has against him the tradition according to which never in the history of the Papacy, has a Secretary of State succeeded directly to the Pope under whom he has served.

In addition to those mentioned, seven other cardinals are ineligible. They are Cardinal Boschi, Archbishop of Ferrari, aged 76 years; Cardinal Prisco, one of the last survivors of the Leo Cardinals, and also Archbishop of Maples, who is 78; Cardinals Vincenzo and Serafino Vannutelli, who are respectively 18 and 80; and Cardinal Gotti, the strenuous perfect of the Propaganda, who is 80.

This also explains why many of those who, in 1903, were regarded as most likely to succeed in the final selection of a new Pope, are today no longer available as candidates. Cardinal Gotti, who was then the candidate of the Rampolla party, polling in the first ballot twenty votes against 29 given Cardinal Rampolla.

The Conclave of 1903.

The outcome of the 1913 Conclave was a complete surprise to all. Cardinal Sarto had never been spoken of as a possible "papabile." However, after Cardinal Puzne registered the veto against the election of Cardinal Rampolla in the name of the Austrian Emperor, the Conclave looked around for a man who had no programme and no known ideas as to the management of church affairs. Cardinal Sarno was then chosen out as a compromise candidate. But he did not want the exalted office. In the Conclave he put aside those who proffered their support and begged that they find another candidate. When the ballots began to turn strongly his way, he became his own most strenuous opponent. He took the floor to entreat the Sacred College to desist from the idea of electing him, and strove to show wherein he lacked the requisite necessary to equip him to occupy the papal throne. But his words had a contrary effect. In the dignity, the humility and the great breadth of learning disclosed in these discourses the Patriarch of Venice stood before his colleagues as the one man to be placed at the head of the Church. He was chosen on the sixth ballot.

The Chancery Group.

Cardinal Maffi, the scholarly Archbishop of Pisa, seems to have little chance. His first lieutenant, Cardinal DeLai, has been mentioned, but is not considered a strong candidate.

Cardinal Ferrati, Secretary of the Congregation of the Holy Office, belongs to what in Vatican circles is known as the Diplomat or Chancery set. This set comprises the most influential Cardinals, who for years have been entrusted with the most delicate missions abroad, always working under the direction of Cardinal Rampolla, where he lived. It was Cardinal Rampolla who made their fortune, and who, from time to time, called the Pontiff's attention to their work in the interest of the Church.

The Academy Group.

Another group to be considered is the so-called Academy set, which comprise the theologians and those who have served the Church in the high seats of culture. It is a small but powerful group of men who, under Pius X., have defended the dogmatic integrity of the Church from the attacks of the revisionists. Cardinal Gotti, the evenerable Carmelite Father, Prefect of the Propaganda, is considered the most learned of them all. At 35 years of age he occupied the most important post of theologian to the Vatican Council, and since 1904 had been directing the work of codification of the Canonical Laws. Around him we find Cardinal De Lai, energetic, active, Patron of the Pontifical Theological Academy; Cardinal Lualdi, Archbishop of Palermo, Professor of many years at the Milan Seminary; Cardinal Maffi, who at 21 was already Professor of Philosophy at the Paris Seminary, and who afterwards acquired a great reputation as a naturalist and a meteorologist. The elevation in 1911 to the red hat of Cardinal Billot, Professor of Theology at the Gregorian University in Rome, and of Cardinal Lugare, Assessor to the Holy Office, the most important Congregation, presided over by the Pope himself, has greatly reinforced this party.

For a long time Cardinal Maffi's rival in Cardinal Gotti's sympathies was Cardinal Richelmy, Archbishop of Turin, who is also considered a moderate, combining the best qualities of the priest with those of the diplomat. His old friendship for the Royal House of Savoy, ruling in Italy, however, has utterly ruined his chances, and today he is no longer considered a safe man from the point of view of the Vatican tradition. Cardinal Ferrari, Archbishop of Milan, is also known as a "papabile." He is 64.

As to the foreign members of the Sacred College, it is quite impossible to say which of the strong Cardinals they will individually support. Generally they are classified by nations. German and Austrian Cardinals are supposed to be with Cardinal Gotti, while France, Spain and South America are regarded as supporters of the late Cardinal Rampolla's group.

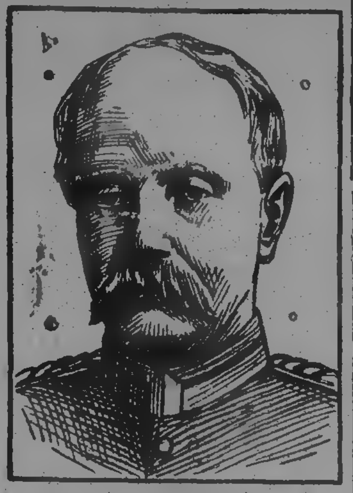
SIR JOHN BY COLE READE, K.C.B., IS A CANADIAN

British Surgeon-General, Who Was Born in Perth, Ont., in 1832, Had For Godfathers Sir John A. Macdonald and Col. By.

Surgeon-General Sir John By Cole Reade, K.C.B., Honorary Surgeon to H. M. the King, attained his 82nd birthday on the 7th July. The Surgeon-General comes of a race of soldiers, and his name, as well as that of his three brothers, are all recorded in the "Distinguished Canadians in the Imperial Service" volume. Sir John was the youngest son of the late Col. Sir George Hume Reade, K.H., formerly commanding the 3rd Regiment of Canadian militia. He was born in Perth, Ont., in 1832, and educated at Dr. Wilkie's School in Quebec, and afterwards at Edinburgh University, his two godfathers being the great Sir John A. Macdonald and Col. By, of Bytown, now Ottawa. Sir John entered the Army Medical Corps in 1853, being attached to the Rifle Brigade. He served throughout the Crimean campaign, 1854-5, being present at the battles of Alma, Inkerman, Balaclava and the siege of Sebastopol (twice wounded, medal with three clasps, Turkish and French medals); in the Indian Mutiny at Lucknow (medal with clasp); on the staff of Lord Roberts in the Afghan war (1879-80), mentioned in the despatches (medal); was sometime professional assistant to the Director-General, Army Medical Department; C.B. (Mil.) 1886, K.C.B. (1903), Senior Knight of Grace of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, Honorary Surgean to Queen Victoria, King Edward VII., and the present King.



SIR JOHN BY COLE READE, K.C.B.

Sir John, who married a daughter of the late Major-Gen. J. D. D. Bean, has no son living. His nephew, the Rev. G. G. Harper Reade, is Anglican rector at Blind River.

Sir John's elder brothers, also Canadians, were distinguished soldiers in the Imperial service, Surgeon-General Herbert Taylor Reade, V.C., C.B., winning the Victoria Cross at the assault at Delhi for conspicuous gallantry. The great Victorian novelist, Charles Reado, was a cousin of Sir John's. He is the last, with but few, if any exceptions, of the survivors of Lucknow.

England Leads In Roads.

Foreign Governments and municipalities are copying the English methods of road improvement.

"We are well aware," says a Road Board official, "that other countries are taking a practical interest in all we are doing. We are continually receiving inquiries from other parts, notably America."

Tropical countries especially have found it to their advantage to take a leaf from England's book, said the official. Bombay, for example, is experimenting with dust-preventers. Contractors are agreed that England is the Mecca of foreign engineers who are interested in road-making.

France in particular is most anxious to maintain the well-known excellence of its main roads, and only recently a little deputation from Paris crossed over to London to study our highways and system of traffic regulation.

STREETS OF LONDON

Unusual School Teaches Location of 33,000 of Them.

The Knowledge of London School, in Brixton, London, is one of the most unusual educational institutions in the world. It is here that taxi drivers are coached for the severe examination that Scotland Yard imposes in the interest of the public. There are 33,000 streets in London and the taxi driver is expected to have a working knowledge of the whereabouts of most of them.

All sorts and conditions of men are candidates. A few of their old occupations as entered in the books of the school include footman, journalist, chemist, musical artist, army coach, optician, musician, army lieutenant, timber merchant and publican. The best students, according to statistics, and those who pass Scotland Yard with the greatest ease, are those who formerly filled the comparatively humble position of car men. The army coach who entered for the course recently gave it up in despair. Instruction by map and text book indoors is employed as well as motor excursions into every corner of the metropolis.

There is not limit to the number of times a candidate may enter the examinations, which are held weekly, and most candidates present themselves from 12 to 15 times. One man is known to have had 25 tries. His final parting with the examiner was quite pathetic.

There are two examinations. In the first the candidate must answer 14 out of 18 questions and must be able to place correctly six squares, clubs, hospitals and public buildings. In the next no mistakes are allowed; the candidate is not allowed to correct an error; and even those who get through say pantingly that it is the most stringent examination in the world, unless, indeed, Chinese savants can match it.

A story illustrating the encyclopaedic knowledge of the London taxi driver of to-day has to do with a joker accosting a taxi driver at Charing Cross the other day.

"Drive me to the Land of Promise," he said, as he entered the vehicle.

"Land of Promise? Yes, sir," replied the taxi driver.

The joker got into the car, wondering how the driver would extricate himself from the position. Twenty minutes later the man in the taxicab found that he himself was the butt of his own joke to the extent of half a crown, for at the corner of a little thoroughfare leading from Hoxton street to Shoreditch workhouse the words on the name-plate of that street were "Land of Promise." Then he got into the taxi again and rode back to Charing Cross with very high respect for the Baedeker-like knowledge of the man in front.

IN JUST HALF A CENTURY.

Maoris Have Been Raised From Savagery to Civilization.

Only a little over 50 years ago reckoned among the most vicious tribes of cannibals in existence; to-day, good citizens of New Zealand and some of them members of the New Zealand Parliament—that, in brief, is the history of half a century of progress among the Maori tribes. Once tribal feasts in which human captives were the principal feature of the bill of fare were periodical forms of entertainment in the regions controlled by the tribe chiefs. Now even the women descendants of the cannibals exercise the right to vote.

"When the English first occupied the islands in the early part of the last century," states a report made recently, "it is estimated that there were about 100,000 Maoris in New Zealand. They were divided into tribes, each tribe having its unwritten laws regarding land, cultivation and other social matters. The tribes were constantly fighting.

"The English found that they had a genius for war, showing unusual skill in building, fortifying and defending stockades. They found them also tillers of the soil and that as carvers and decorators they were unrivalled in the oceanic world, and that they displayed great originality in design and perfection in the execution of rock paintings and in carving the ornamental figures of their dwellings, their boats and sacred inclosures. The Maoris were also noted for their tattooing, which was designed to ornament the body. Whoever refused to undergo the protracted tortures of tattooing required at every important event of his life was regarded as a person by his own consent foredoomed to slavery.

"There are about 35,000 Maoris left. These have retired to the northern provinces of New Zealand, where certain reservations have been set apart for their exclusive property. The Maori children attend schools regularly. Such of them as continue into the higher branches of learning are said to be worthy rivals of white students. Some of the Maoris have become landed proprietors. They are proud of their right to vote, and especially of the fact that their women were given this privilege at the same time that it was given to the white women of New Zealand."

It is said that tattooing among the tribes is now rare, and that the Maoris, to greater extent than any other group of savages, have indicated that man can be raised from savagery to civilization within one generation.

Our Insignificant Earth.

If the earth should be annihilated the planets Venus and Mercury would fall a little nearer the sun and move around it a trifle faster, while all of the outside planets, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and Neptune, would move away from the sun slightly and traverse larger orbits, moving a little slower thereon. The earth is so small, however, that only professional astronomers, armed with very accurate clocks and telemicrometers, could hope to measure the minute disturbances.

SIR WALTER GILBEY HAS DEVOTED LIFE TO FARMING

Veteran Agriculturist, is a Familiar Figure in London Clubland.

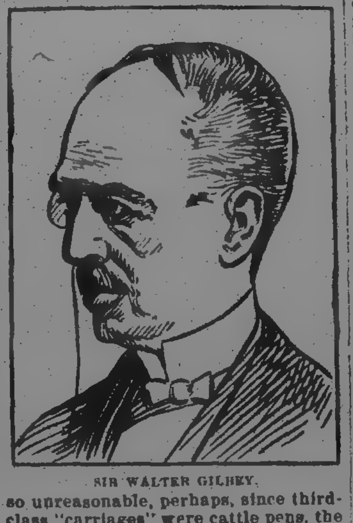
There has been no keener observer of life since the reign of William IV. than Sir Walter Gilbey, who recently celebrated his eighty-third birthday.

The veteran agriculturist, stockbreeder, sportsman, merchant, and author has had a particularly varied and interesting life, and confesses that "to have lived through the Victorian age, witnessing one by one its enormous changes, is to have laid up a store of recollections which has never been equalled in previous generations."

Curiously enough, Sir Walter, who a few years ago talked somewhat reproachfully of the introduction of the motor-car into his beloved domain of the horse—indeed, he would not allow a car into his grounds—considers that the greatest boons to the multitude among recent inventions are motors and bicycles. And nowadays, although he is still as keenly interested in horses as he was a quarter of a century ago, he never travels in any vehicle but his motor-car, and in it he takes long rides every day of his life.

What a contrast to the days which he recollects when dog carriages and carts were largely used in the country. Sir Walter can recall the use of dogs for draught work being prohibited in London in 1839, but remaining legal in the country for another fifteen years. All sorts and conditions of men used dog carriages, from small tradesmen to poorer people who could not afford a pony.

Sir Walter, too, remembers the dying out of coaches, and the general antipathy to railways, which was not so unreasonable, perhaps, since third-class "carriages" were cattle pens, the permanent way ill laid, and the trains wretchedly lit.



SIR WALTER GILBEY.

Sir Walter, who might well be termed the "G.O.M. of Agriculture," for he has been indefatigable in the cause of cattle and the land for many years past, has had a particularly varied career. During the Crimean War he volunteered for work in the Army Pay Department, and served in a convalescent hospital on the Asiatic shores of the Dardanelles. On his return to England he and his brother conceived the happy idea of starting a wine business for the million, and the result exceeded their fondest expectations. From the first the business was a great success, and being admirably managed, was soon bringing in a handsome fortune. To-day Sir Walter is rich beyond the dreams of avarice, and one of the most respected men of his time.

It was in his prosperity that he began to turn his attention to practical farming, and his interest in horses is not altogether unconnected with the fact that his father was a coach proprietor. The English hackney and heavy horse have, it has been said, come to be the most splendid animals of their kind in the world largely through his efforts. It was Sir Walter who paid a record price for a hackney when he gave $25,000 for the famous Danegelt.

Not only, however, has Sir Walter won fame as a breeder and exhibitor of live stock, but such interests as small holdings, the rural housing question, fruit growing for jam makers, lavender and other flower culture for perfume manufacturers have all claimed his special attention. And with all the hard work which has crowded his strenuous career, he has found time to plead the cause year after year of the Agricultural Benevolent Society.

Personally, Sir Walter provides quite a picturesque figure. In dress and general bearing he still clings to the mid-Victorian style. His frilled shirt, with a small white cambric tie and high stiff collar, .. buff waistcoat, and closely-fitting drab box-cloth trousers were familiar features in clubland. When out walking he invariably carries a large black-rimmed monocle, and a little ash stick cut from the hedge and utterly innocent of ornament or ferrule.

Sir Walter confesses that to-day he feels quite young, in spite of his eighty odd years. To daily exercise in the open air, coupled with simple living, he ascribes his good health, and has said more than once that he will live to be a centenarian. He is, by the way, a great believer in the virtues of the onion as a food, and that vegetable forms a large part of his dietary.

Well Paid Waiters.

In the west end of London there are scores of waiters whose incomes range from $2,000 to $3,000 a year from tips alone.

Such Vanity.

"I have always wanted to enjoy the peace and quiet of farm life."

"Why don't you? You're rich enough to do as you please. I should think you'd buy a place in the country and spend the rest of your days in rest."

"I would, only I'm afraid my friends would think, if I gave up the gay life, that I must be getting old."

Must Have Been a Prize.

"But how could you tell, darling, that I had never proposed to any other girl?"

"Because you were not married," she murmured rapturously and admiringly.

No Longer a Secret.

"So that great inventor is dead and his wonderful secret is lost"—

"Not at all. He told it to his wife just before he died."

"Yes; that's what I mean."

BATTLE OF BANNOCKBURN

The Clan That Saved the Day For Bruce Celebrates.

The Oban Times of July 4 states that a deputation from the Clan Donnachaidh, the Robertson Clan Society, took part in the procession to Bannockburn on June 27th to celebrate the 600th anniversary of the famous battle fought in June, 1314, by the Scots, under Bruce, with the English, commanded by Edward II. The company traveled in two brightly decorated motor cars, the one flying five Royal Scottish flags and showing green bracken ferns and the dress and hunting tartan of the Clan, and the other with a St. Andrew's Cross of fresh bracken covering the top, from which hung, beneath festoons of the red tartan, a large wreath of green bracken and thistle, with silk streamers of broad blue ribbon ("an riban gorm," the national streamer of Scotland) and of the red tartan.

From time to time on the way to the field the pipes played "Donnach Mhor's March to Bannockburn," and when it was reached three kilted men and the Clan secretary laid the wreath on the Borestone.

The wreath had this inscription: "To the illustrious memory of King Robert the Bruce, and to the brave memory of his kinsman and supporter in weal and woe, Duncan of Athole, our Chief, and of our clansmen who with him left their mountains to do or die for Scotland, as the name of Robertson still commemorates."

The spectators seemed so pleased with this ceremony that for a few minutes the singing of "Scots Wha Hae" was suspended, and "Three cheers for Clan Donnachaidh!" were enthusiastically asked for and given.

It was fitting that this Clan should take so prominent a part in the celebration, since the story goes that it arrived late at Bannockburn on the fateful day in 1314, but at an auspicious moment, when the sudden onrush of a new host turned the wavering tide of battle into glorious victory. It is said that Bruce in despair had cried, "I would give my right hand for Donnachadh Reamhair this day!" when the tartans of Duncan and his clan were seen coming over the hill. The clansmen were in their best spirits, as on the way from Athole they had found the shining crystal which has ever since been the luckstone of Clan Donnachaidh, and had taken it as a forecast of success to Bruce's arms. With a sudden storm of arrows, an overwhelming rush, and shouting fiercely their well-known ancient battle-cry, they swept with their wolf-head standard into the thick of the fight, and once more Robert Bruce had to thank the stout arms and warm hearts of the Clan Donnachaidh. That Donnachaidh's heart was warm and kind beyond usual Bruce had found when, a forlorn and rugged fugitive, he had sought refuge with the great Chief in Rannoch. All that the most noble hospitality could do for him was done—his weary body fed and clad in Donnachadh's tartan, the rest soothed by Donnachadh's own hands on the sweet strings of his harp, and eventually his battles in that neighborhood fought and won.

After Bannockburn, Bruce, in recognition of what he owed to Duncan of Athole, requested him as a favor to name his eldest son Robert, after him. So the name came into the family, and when surnames were adopted this crystallized into Robertson.

Royal Generosity.

In a one-roomed cabin on the shores of Broadhaven Bay, County Mayo, the wife of a man named Frank Bournes, of Carrowteighe, Ballina, recently gave birth to three children, who did not long survive their birth. The King's bounty was not, therefore, available; but His Majesty, having been informed of the poverty and long illness of the poor woman, already the mother of several children, sent a donation of $10. These poor people live some forty miles from the nearest railway station, and fifteen miles from the nearest doctor, unless a ferry, by day only, reduces the distance.

"JIM" CORNWALL THE BOOSTER OF PEACE RIVER

The Man Who is Perhaps Better Known Than Any Other in Canada's Far Northwest Established Steamers Where the Railways Did Not Dare to Go.

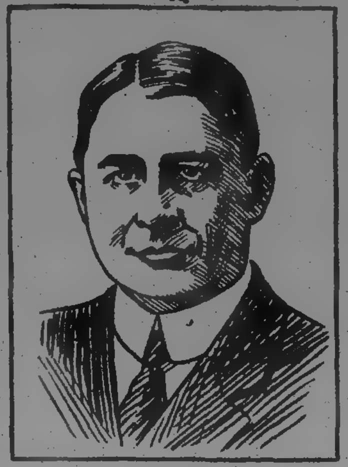
Always in a new land, where a vague fear of the unexplored and untested halts the settler and bids him "think twice," there arises one man of bolder confidence to stamp out a trail and establish the all-important precedent. Every great agricultural section of America has surrendered to axe and plow in its day, not by the sudden marauding of a thousand pioneers, but by the coming of one man, usually a master-character, who broke the spell, dissipated the ghosts, and held up a flag for a human stampede.

Jim Cornwall of the Peace River Country, up toward the top of the inhabited Canada, is just that man.

Before the day of Cornwall's coming, the Peace River ached for a champion. Inside the bogie barriers of remoteness lay an infinitude of fertile miles where a whole nation might wax fat. But no one rose to say so—only a skimpy blue book now and then to tell its blessings. No railway took much interest, farm syndicates sniffed at the northernness of its location. Only a nomadic farmer here and there, who had nibbled at its riches, dared give it a signed testimonial.

Fifteen years ago from the forecastle of an Atlantic liner stepped a sailor-man, one James K. Cornwall, and bought a ticket for Edmonton. The Yukon gold rush had driven its yellow fever into men's brains and a pathetic procession passing northwesterly across the continent into the land of ice and expectation. Spying the breakers ahead, the sailor-man prudently cast anchor half-way to disappointment. Taking fresh bearings by the tales of newly-arrived trappers and Hudson Bay Co. servants he struck north into the lone wilderness that the Hudson Bay Co. for 250 years of fur-breeding zeal has fought to keep free of humanity. He saw the Athabasca river with its prodigal waste of water falls. He broke the surface of the earth upon its banks and knew the promise of mineral booty. He tested its waters and found them stocked with food enough for a marching army. Further north and west he forced his way, portaged to Lesser Slave Lake, thence to that mighty Peace river, broad as Mississippi and just as long. There he stood one early morning, like Stanley before Nianza, marvelling, unbelieving, thrilled to his heart's core, for here at his feet lay a new and a great country. Next afternoon he was applying for work at the first settlement, for he had decided to sign his letters "Peace River Country" all the days of his life.

With a foresight shared chiefly by his own unfaltering confidence, Cornwall undertook to put steamboats on the navigable rivers to save an overland trek for that army of settlers he knew had to come. He sailed them on Lesser Slave Lake and the Peace river, real steamboats, with electric light in the staterooms and linen sheets and Parisian menu cards—years before any railway would venture to couple them up with the great arteries of immigration; last year, however, the Canadian Northern Railway opened a line to Athabasca Landing and gave Peace River kingdom the one muscular impulse it most needed.



"Jim" Cornwall.

The northland is filled with stories of Jim Cornwall. In Edmonton, whether at the club or some half-breed hang-out you may hear how he swam down the river half the night one autumn pulling behind him an upturned canoe on which lay a helpless comrade. And after that you may hear how he carried medicine and sick room dainties hundreds of miles into the camps of the Crees to help some stricken 'lunger.' His diary of action, crammed as it is into perhaps two score years and five, touches nearly every country on the globe and most divisions of society.—Robson Black in Toronto Star Weekly.

Dwarf Elephants.

The Island of Malta is the only known spot where remains of dwarf elephants are found. There are several places on the island where the bones of these miniature pachyderms have been unearthed, and hundreds of skeletons have been secured in whole or in part. One of these was a full grown specimen less than two and a half feet in height and could not have weighed over 600 pounds when in flesh.

Scarce Eggs.

In the whole world there are but seventy specimens of the eggs of the great auk.

PURE PRUSSIC ACID.

Just a Smell of This Deadly Poison Would Kill Instantly.

The discoverer of prussic acid was instantly killed by inhaling one whiff of his own handiwork.

Pure prussic acid is never sold or handled. The smell of it is always fatal. It kills not in three minutes or half an hour, but the instant it enters the lungs as a gas. The mixture ordinarily sold as prussic acid is 98 parts water to two parts of the drug. Even in this form it is very deadly. A 20 per cent mixture of the acid would kill nearly as quickly as if pure.

Atropine, though it has no harmful odor, is so deadly that as much of it as would adhere to the end of a moistened forefinger would instantly cause death.

Cyanide of potassium has a pleasant smell which is not injurious, but a small quantity swallowed kills at once.

Pure ammonia if inhaled would cause death almost as quickly as prussic acid.

When a carboy of nitric acid is broken some one has to suffer. It will burn wood, eat through iron plates and destroy whatever it touches. Such an accident once happened in an acid factory. Every one ran away, leaving the acid to amuse itself by setting fire to things. Soon it was seen that the building would be destroyed and hundreds of people thrown out of work, and four men volunteered to put out the fire in the acid room. They succeeded and came out all right. Five hours later all were dead.

Unlucky Thirteen Defied.

"A successful defiance of the "13 superstition" has been made by a family of Dover, Eng., over a long series of years. Twenty-seven years ago W. I. Newman, his wife and family, a total of 13 persons, had a group photograph taken. Eleven years ago they were again assembled and another 13 group was photographed. This week the family of 13, still complete, were once more mustered from various places, the photographer was again visited, and a good group secured.

WHEN BRITISH REGIMENTS RESIGNED

Curragh Episode is Not the First One in British History.

The cavalry crisis at the Curragh recalls how, in 1783, the old 77th Regiment, commanded by Col. Gordon, refused en bloc to go to India, and voiced their reasons in a barrack room song:—

If it were to fight with France or Spain
With pleasure we would cross the Main;
But for like bullocks to be slain—
Our Highland blood abhors it.

The question of this wholesale resignation came before Parliament, and the regiment was ordered to be disbanded forthwith at Perth.

Another Scotch regiment, the Black Watch, being brought to London from Scotland in 1743, on the pretext that George II., never having seen a Highland regiment before, wished to inspect them, turned about and marched home when they found His Majesty not in London to meet them. He had left the previous night for Hanover. They accordingly believed themselves the victims of a trick to reduce the number of Stuart supporters in Scotland. They were overtaken by a superior force in the Midlands and forced to capitulate. The regiment as a whole was then banished to Flanders; 200 of the men—all of good family—were sent into exile, and many were court-martialled, whilst three ring-leaders were shot on Tower Hill.

Another instance of a regiment's desire to be quit of service wholesale occurred in 1807, when 300 men, chiefly Irishmen, of the 28th Foot, stationed at Maldon, Essex, feigned blindness in order to procure their discharges and escape being sent abroad. They bluffed the doctors for a time by applying an irritating ointment to their eyes, declaring they had caught the disease from afflicted soldiers just home from Egypt. But the ruse was discovered, and the ringleaders were tried under the Mutiny Act.

SALMON ARE PENITENT THAT IS WHY THEY SEEK FRESH WATER SAYS GUIDE

It Is to Get a Change of Scene, Occupation and Diet That the Finny Denizens of the Deep Take to the Rivers—They Have a Profound Distaste for Food When They Leave the Briny.

Salmon fishermen will not lose much sympathy over the complaints of the net men at their lack of success the first part of the season.

As a matter of fact, until the really warm weather set in the salmon were content to remain in salt water. June had about gone before the snow disappeared from near the head waters of the best rivers, consequently not many fish went inland until the end of the month—the best of the run coming on after the holiday season set in.

As the largest fish are usually the first comers, this is important, yet it would be imprudent to claim that the fish will be any the better this year because their annual trip to the country has been delayed. In fact, as anglers well know, it happens at times that salmon fresh run from the sea are in very inferior condition when they have started late in the season upon their trip.

Still, as a rule, the fish are in such splendid order when they leave the sea that one wonders why they found it necessary to go to fresh water at all.

Until it is remembered that fat is really a disease, and in many cases indicates need of change of scene, occupation, or diet.

"Come along, come along o' me, and I'll pretty soon show 'e why the salmon run out of the wee brooks and rivers into the salt water. "Yes, I'll show 'e just I will."

Many an angler will recognize the speaker from this little sample of his delightful obiter dicta. He is a well-known guide on the Grand River of Gaspe, and a thoroughly well-informed authority on fishing.

As he spoke he led the way to a large ice house where lay numbers of the finest of the salmon caught by the deep sea fishermen, kept there until the summer marketing season. At least one of these, a strikingly beautiful male fish of 30 lbs., had not yet been opened. It was, indeed, a surprise to one familiar with salmon killed in fresh water, which never contain any evidence of their taking food. There was one seven-inch haddock and four or five large herrings in the paunch of the opened fish.

"More'n what ye would eat in a day, isna' it? Sic a fish as that would eat his weight every two days, if he had his wish. Where would he be getting all that, think ye, in a [illegible] stream, or in a big river either?"

"How full must the sea be of fish and fish food when countless thousands of such greedy things live and grow fat in it?" mused his greybeard pupil.

"Ah weel, the salmon's no' sic a fule as to tak chances of being left hungry there, ye see. He goes straight away for the first drove of herrings or haddocks, or even caplin, if nothing better is thereabouts, and just lives with the crowd, as well as on 'em. No getting away from the bonny big chaps, for they can swim some, I tell 'e.

"The boats get 'em in the nets when they are after the other fish ye see; that's how all these got caught last winter and spring."

"But I was always told that in the sea the salmon fed on crabs, or crawfish, or things of the shell families, which accounts for their color," said the other.

"Eh, man, but that's main fuleishness," was the reply. "Why a salmon would be clammed to death before he'd fill himsel' wi' sic wee culch as that. It's something big he's wanting and color, d'ye see? It's fat fish oil as gives the color."

"If they are so well fed in the sea, why do they ever leave and go up the rivers?"

The old man locked the icehouse door, and, taking out his pipe, answered to the following effect:

"Of course the salmon is a fresh water fish, made for rivers and lakes. For the first year he couldn't breathe in the sea at all. Salmon eggs perish if the salt water comes near them. It is only an insatiable appetite which sends him to the ocean. The food he gets there in such quantities develops not only size but fat as well, and brings on a satiety which, every season, sickens him against eating at all. He runs up to the inland resorts, for the same reason that the jaded dyspeptics go to the sea to try the effect of a change, and to rest."

In fact the salmon have in the early summer such a perfect distaste to food that for some months they fast entirely and eat nothing. Pretty nearly all the wild things of the woods as well as of the waters have similar habits of abstinence, some taking no food from autumn to spring. So the church may have been going back to nature when she prescribed seasons of fasting for her people.

It is as a penitent that Sandy pictured the salmon going into retreat in fresh waters, that he may rid himself of the fatty effects of over-indulgence.

The keen-sighted observer further remarked that salt water was certain to produce thirst sooner or later. Salmon are not naturally sea dwellers, and after a few months become so clogged with brine, and parched with thirst, that they just hae to run back for their native river.

"Certainly, that's natural. Who doesna' a' times crave for a drink frae the old well head, or the wee bit springle under the big stane?" The sentimental sweetness of the idea was impressive and led to an attempt at mutual satisfaction, with the best available substitute for childhood's native fluid.

Practical.

"I am down to my last penny," said the street mendicant, addressing a man who looked as though he might have money and sympathy, "and I don't know what to do."

"Only have one penny left?"

"That is all."

"There is a box around the corner that you can drop it into and get a stick of gum."

Moving Pictures Backward.

An interesting feature of cinematograph theatres in Singapore is the way they cater to the poorer native classes, by arranging benches made of planks at the rear of the stage or screen. Admission to this part of the house is ten cents local currency or about 5.7 cents Canadian gold, and it is not unusual to have nearly one thousand people witnessing the pictures from the other side. They are compelled, of course, to view the picture backward, but it seems to make little difference, as they do not read the English description and receive their sole amusement from the attractiveness of the picture itself.

This feature is depended on by the theatres for a goodly portion of their revenue. Admission to the front part of the building seems exorbitant compared with similar shows in Canada, the general price being $2 local currency, or $1.14 Canadian.

Some of the buildings used for motion picture purposes in Singapore are ordinary frame structures with thatched roofs.

A Tree That Grows Butter.

At Sierra Leone, on the west coast of Africa, there is a tree which furnishes the natives not only nuts which they prize highly, but also butter which may become an important export commodity. It is already exported to Europe, where it is used in the manufacture of artificial butter.

The shea tree produces a nut covered with a soft pulp, which is in turn covered with a smooth skin easily removable when the nut ripens. The pulp is sweet and wholesome. It may perhaps be used for the manufacture of alcohol. Candles and soap also may be made of it.

The nut is about 60 per cent. "butter," which is edible. The tree begins bearing at the age of 15 years and reaches its full capacity at about 25 years. The butter plantation then lasts indefinitely if jungle fires do not get it.

For the Children

Marie Danaher, Prize Baby of Brooklyn.

© 1914, by American Press Association.

There was a great parade of babies in the borough of Brooklyn, New York city, a short time ago. It all came about through the advent of baby week, which was celebrated throughout the city. The parade was made in automobiles, and hundreds of little folks were in line, accompanied by their mothers and admirers. The president of the borough and other high officials reviewed the parade, together with thousands of people who are interested in the welfare of children. The winner of the prize given for the best baby in Brooklyn was little Miss Marie Danaher. Marie is twenty-seven months old, and she won with a percentage of 98.07. That means that she came pretty near being a perfect baby —that is, so far as health is concerned.

An Extinct Bird.

The great auk, which once lived in great numbers along the North Atlantic coast, going in summer as far north as Iceland or Greenland, is now absolutely extinct. All that is left of this once great bird tribe is a few stuffed skins in museums. The auk was about the same size as a well grown goose, and when standing erect had a height of about two feet. The pursuit of this awkward and harmless bird for its valuable feathers led to its final complete destruction.

Same Spelling, Two Meanings.

1. The man's face began to ----- when he found he could not get a ----- berth in the sleeping car. 2. The farmer must --- corn in order to have some for his --- and her children.

Answers: No. 1. Lower, lower; No. 2. Sow, sow.

Curious Jellyfish.

A retired mariner says he saw many strange inhabitants of the sea when he was going about the world in a square rigger, but a sight which impressed him most was the peculiar form of a jellyfish. It was about eight inches long and shaped precisely like a horse, having a long, flowing mane, fetlocks and the various other appurtenances.

What sailors call "Portuguese men of war" are jellyfish shaped like a boat. Each carries large sail, resembling isinglass, which bellies out with the wind and causes the fish to cut through the water at a surprising speed. The "Portuguese men of war" are numerous in the Indian ocean.

"You do?"

"Yes."

"But don't you hate to lay yourself open to the charge of gross egotism?"

Strenuous.

"I never worry over spilt milk."

"You don't?"

"I don't."

"What do you do about it?"

"Go after the fellow who spilt it."

Curious.

"He says he is self made."

"I wonder."

"What do you wonder?"

"Where he found a pattern small enough."

This Picture is No. 18 In Our SUMMER PASTIME

There will be seventy-five in all. Each picture represents the name of a player of baseball, football, lacrosse or hockey. This picture represents what? Is it SCOTT? Is it KILTY? We will tell you. The name indicated by the picture is that of the well known Canadian ball player,

DOC. REISLING

There's a lot of fun in the Summer Pastime game. There's money in it, too. The way to win is to study every part of the picture and to make sure that the suggested word or combination, like rye and sling, constitutes a player's name. Few persons know the several thousand names in the field of sports and nobody can think of all constantly. The best safe guide to finding the correct names represented by the pictures is to look up each idea in the guaranteed Summer Pastime Handbook. Perhaps you never heard of Mr. Reisling or you may not have thought of the name in connection with the picture. But if you had the Handbook, you would look up Scot, basket, rye, etc. Then you would find the name Reisling and you would know you are right. Get the Handbook and Win.

WOMAN IN BAD CONDITION

Restored To Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Montpelier, Vt. — "We have great faith in your remedies. I was very irregular and was tired and sleepy all the time, would have cold chills, and my hands and feet would bloat. My stomach bothered me, I had pain in my side and a bad headache most of the time. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me lots of good and I now feel fine. I am regular, my stomach is better and my pains have all left me. You can use my name if you like. I am proud of what your remedies have done for me." — Mrs. MARY GAUTHIER, 21 Ridge St., Montpelier, Vt.

An Honest Dependable Medicine

It must be admitted by every fair-minded, intelligent person, that a medicine could not live and grow in popularity for nearly forty years, and to-day hold a record for thousands upon thousands of actual cures, as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, without possessing great virtue and actual worth. Such medicines must be looked upon and termed both standard and dependable by every thinking person.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

RIOT OF POSTAGE STAMPS.

A Room and Its Furniture Literally Covered With Them.

Within easy walking distance of the old cathedral town of Chichester, England, is the Rising Sun, in North Bersted, a house of interest to all who collect stamps, for the little inn contains a room that is covered, every inch of it, with postage stamps!

Ceiling, walls, doors, chairs, tables, picture frames—all parts of the room except the floor—are thickly covered, while from the ceiling hang long festoons and ropes made of bundles of stamps for which there was no other room. There are fully 2,000,000 stamps pasted up and 1,000,000 more in these festoons, while great bundles, one of which holds 60,000 stamps, hang among the heavy loops.

But it is not only the amazing number of stamps that attracts the visitor's attention. There is evidence on all sides of great ingenuity. The pictures inside the stamp covered frames are of stamps themselves. The ceiling is ornamented with a great star. The arms of the neighboring town of Bognor are over the fireplace and the tablecloth shows the Eiffel tower! Queen Victoria is surprisingly lifelike in carefully chosen stamps of different colors. The Prince of Wales' feathers and the crown are also represented. Most of the stamps are penny English stamps, but there are others from all over the world. One door is a bright yellow, covered entirely with the Swan River stamps of Western Australia.

It is all the work of the landlord, who, already a stamp collector, thought of this as an amusing way of disposing of duplicates. He finished the room in celebration of the queen's jubilee.—Youth's Companion.

There may be a bright side to everything, but if so some things are certainly preparing to spring a surprise.

Good Form

Training Maids.

A little patience and system in dealing with maids, especially if they be young ones, without very much experience, will often work miracles. Even if they are older and can justly claim to be experienced, there is always much for them to learn in entering a new household.

Every mistress has her own particular way of having certain things done, and the new girl must conform to this way even if she has been accustomed to doing the same work in a different manner.

One mistress encourages her "green" girls by engaging them at a small wage and increasing it as they master various menus. When the maid can prepare all of them she is given the sum that her ability would earn for her anywhere.

It is not hard to teach a girl to cook by this system. Most girls will take a deeper interest in their cooking than they will in many other branches of housework, and if instructed by this or some other equally good and definite system they will try harder and hence learn more rapidly than when instructed in a haphazard way.

Correct Stationery.

The newest note paper is very long and very narrow and fits into envelopes of precisely the size of the unfolded sheet. This style is smartest in dark cream and pale gray tones.

Then there are the sheets of heavy linen in buff, blue and gray that must be once folded lengthwise to fit into their envelopes, and there are the sheets of very thin but stout white paper which fold once to fit into square envelopes lined with a color. These formerly were used only for foreign correspondence, but now they are coming into domestic use.

Correspondence cards never have been daintier, and everybody is now using them at the slightest excuse. Some of them are absolutely square, and some of them are long and narrow, with beveled edges.

Artistic Compliments.

It is not the compliment that is, so to speak, laid on with a trowel that really reaches our hearts. No; it is the delicate and subtle sort that we do not recognize as a compliment.

This species is best and most successful when it is expressed by deeds rather than by words.

Let some one show a decided liking for our society when there are others present who are more attractive or clever or famous and how can we help but be pleased?

If their amusements and interests take a second place and ours usurp the first, then that, too, is a delightful form of flattery.

Table Usage.

Good manners at the table stamp the well bred person. The knife is used only in cutting the food, never to raise any particle of it to the mouth. A few general rules follow:

Lettuce is cut with the fork, a small portion rolled about the tines and thus eaten.

Oranges are peeled, cut or divided into quarters and eaten, or cut in half and eaten with the orange spoon, a spoon narrower and smaller than the ordinary tablespoon.

The Unfriendly Reminder.

Of all trying things the "I told you so" person is one of the worst. When you confide any trouble to them you are usually met with an "I told you so, but you wouldn't listen to me," which is distinctly annoying. They really might have the generosity not to rub it in. There is very little chance that you would have forgotten their warning, and they might refrain from the petty satisfaction of reminding you of their superior wisdom.

The Family Bore.

Friends and even members of a family ought to take care not to overstep the border line between interest and inquisitiveness. If one has been out and comes back looking pleased, it is annoying to be immediately asked, "Well, whom have you been with?" and then requested to go into details of the pleasant time spent.

Cordiality to Newcomers.

A resident of a town or village can call with propriety on any newcomer and the newcomer should return this call if she desires to continue the acquaintance. The time of calling is settled by the customs of the place, but after two o'clock and before six is generally correct.

When to Call.

Ceremonious calls are not made between women in the morning, evening or on Sunday afternoons. A man, owing to the exactions of business, may call in the evening and on Sunday afternoon.

Tea Invitations.

Invitations to afternoon teas are very often in the form of visiting cards. On the lower left hand corner of the card write "At home from 3 until 6. Thursday, April 20."

Hospitality to Strangers.

Before an invitation of hospitality is given to a stranger a call should first be made.

High Art.

"Are you blind, prisoner?" inquired the magistrate.

"Yes, your worship."

"You are charged with vagrancy. How did you lose your sight?"

"By a fit of appleplexy, sir."

"But there is a picture on your breast representing an explosion in a mine, through which, it is stated, you became blind. How is this?"

"Please, your worship, I couldn't afford to pay a bartist as could paint appleplexy."—London Answers.

ROME'S COLISEUM.

It Got Its Name From a Nearby Gigantic Statue of Nero.

While thousands annually visit the Coliseum, few seem to question the origin of its unusual name, which is derived from a statue of Nero that stood near by. Being a great height, it was known as the colossus of Nero, so the vagaries of pronunciation of many hundred years created this unique name from "near the colossus." The Coliseum was founded A. D. 72 by the Emperor Vespasian. His son, Titus, completed it eight years later. Gaudentius is supposed to have been its architect, and by a cruel fate he was one of the many Christian martyrs whose blood has consecrated and made this glorious building sacred to posterity.

Twelve thousand captive Hebrews were employed in its building. During the progress of the shows that were given in this great amphitheater an awning was stretched on poles, and some of the brackets for the support of these are still to be seen. A few numbers are yet visible by which the arches could be reached by the spectators, having tickets of similar numbers.

One arch of extra width is thought to be the one under which the emperors of old Rome entered. An entrance similar on the opposite side had a subterranean passage leading to the Palatine. Four rows of cells were the domicile of the wild beasts, and during a series of shows given in honor of the Emperor Hadrian's birthday a thousand of these animals were slaughtered. Gladiatorial combats were also eagerly watched, and in these even women would sometimes take part. Of the many Christian martyrs the Coliseum has claimed the most noted was St. Ignatius, bishop of Antioch. Closely following this crime 115 Christians were shot down with arrows, and, as usual, this hideous sight was viewed by a sanguinary horde. — Baltimore American.

"Yes, my son. I want you to make yourself ambidextrous. I want you to be able to use one hand just as skillfully as you do the other."

"That's me, dad. I can lick any boy in my class with either hand."—New York World.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

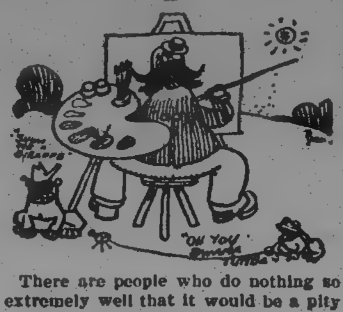
UNDOUBTEDLY we all know innumerable people who are in no pressing need of a course of lectures on self help.

If we were compelled to test our advice before giving it perhaps there would not be so much of it on the free list.

Following a fad is the modern substitute for riding a hobby.

Some people always talk as if you were to blame for all their troubles and their wife's relations.

There is a personal characteristic possessed by some people that causes us to like them better the farther away they are.



There are people who do nothing so extremely well that it would be a pity to put them at anything else.

It requires a strong imagination to turn imaginary dollars into real money.

There may be a bright side to everything, but if so some things are certainly preparing to spring a surprise.

It isn't a bad idea to make a little turn of your own while you are waiting for your turn.

He who has neither hope nor fear is own brother to the hobo.

Work by any other name wouldn't make a bigger hit.

A man is known by the weaknesses he fosters.

A Substitute.

If you cannot win a fortune
  For your uses quite enough
And have money to be reckless
  You at least can run a bluff.
If you cannot cough up dollars
  Quite regardless of expense,
You can pack your duds and travel
  Here and there upon pretense.

Any one can get in action
  With a dollar in his jeans,
Any one can go the paces
  If he only has the means.
But it's quite a different problem
  If you haven't got a cent
And must satisfy the landlord
  When he talks about his rent.

With a regulation payday
  Every Monday in the year
And a check that is sufficient
  Then the sailing is quite clear;
But to live without an income
  And with all your meals connect
Is a very different matter
  As a fellow might suspect.

But there are some people do it—
  You can see them every day—
So you should not be discouraged,
  Though you cannot always pay.
If you have not coin in plenty
  To assist you bear the blunt,
With a stogy and a hair cut
  You at least can make a front.

Can That Be It?

Patience—When an English suffragette backs a picture in one of the galleries, why is it always one of a beautiful woman?

Patrice—Because she dislikes to see another woman admired, is my guess. —Yonkers Statesman.

A False Note.

"That woman's hair, dress and sunshade match the color of her automobile."

"Very swagger, no doubt. But don't you think the chauffeur rather dark for the rest of the combination?"—Baltimore Sun.

A Prophet.

"We are going to have chicken for dinner," remarked the farmhouse boarder to the newcomer.

"Somebody tell you?"

"No."

"How do you know?"

"See that auto racer scooting by? Well, that's an infallible sign."

"You must be superstitious."

"Oh, no; it is quite the custom to gather up the dead chickens after the auto."

Less Noise

"I wonder if I could get it patented?"

"What's that?"

"An improvement on the French duel."

"Less bloody?"

"Not necessarily."

"How would you work it?"

"Have the parties go with their seconds at break of day to a lonely field and make faces at each other."

A Long Memory.

"Mrs. Brown says she has a good memory for faces since she belongs to so many clubs."

"She has, even when they are changing all the time."

"Has she?"

"Yes; she always knows her baby when they meet outside."

Relief.

Sing a song of sixpence,
  Bottle full of rye
For a fellow in the south
  Feeling extra dry.
No saloons are open,
  But he doesn't care
If he has a pocket
  With a bottle there.

Some Difference.

"Yes, Stringville is your nearest town."

"How far is it over there?"

"Do you mean by the road or as Wilbur Wright flies?"

Hint to the Losing Team.

"I thought they had to mind the umpire."

"They do."

"But he told them to play ball."

Wolves Overrun Renfrew.

That wolves are overrunning Renfrew county and destroying the farmer's sheep in that district is the word received by the Government at Ottawa, which is asked to take some steps by the offering of a bounty or some other means to stop the depredations and exterminate the marauders. It is stated that during the month of May alone 75 sheep were destroyed in the county by the wolves, which are supposed to have wandered down from the vicinity of Algonquin Park. Large numbers of deer have also been destroyed in the same manner.

Farmers, it is said, have stopped raising sheep in the district as a result of the inroads of the wolves. They have not been bothered with them for thirty years, and their presence has only commenced to be noticed during the past three years. The present bounty is small especially, it is stated, as the hide is reckoned by the Ontario Government.

INNOCENT QUESTIONS.

They Sometimes Yield Surprising Results—Here's One That Did.

"WON'T you sing something?" he asked when they were alone together.

"Please excuse me," she replied. "I don't feel like singing this evening. I would much rather sit here and have you talk to me. Tell me about yourself."

"There's nothing interesting to say about me. I have not had an exciting career."

"But I should like to hear about your work, your ideals, and all that, you know."

"Why do you care what my ideals are?"

"I am always interested in every man's ideals. Men are so interesting. They always have some aim in life aside from marriage. Girls generally think only of that. It seems so silly and so uninteresting."

"Marriage?"

"Yes."

"Haven't you ever thought of getting married?"

"Oh, if you insist on dragging in the subject I suppose I may as well give in first as last. But what made you think I cared for you?"—Chicago Herald.

The Same Reason.

Young Betts had just told his mother of his engagement to a charming young woman who was not blessed with much of this world's goods, and he met with immediate objection.

"Now, mother, dear," said the young man, "don't be angry with me for falling in love with her. Besides, you were a poor girl when you first met father."

"Yes," replied Mrs. Betts, "so I was. But so was your father poor. And I married him because I knew he would succeed."

"Well, mother," he said, "and she is going to marry me because he did. Don't you see?"—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Wigwagging.

Each of the ladies wore a brilliant wig. Strange to say, no two were alike in hue.

"Let's accomplish something worth while," said the lady who preferred green.

"But what can we accomplish?" asked the lady in blue.

"Women can accomplish anything if they put their heads together."

So they put their heads together and accomplished a rainbow.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Welfare Work.

"Have you any part of an automobile that you don't want?"

"I might give you an old tire. What's the idea?"

"You know how our grandmothers used to make crazy quilts for the needy?"

"Yes."

"On the same principle I am trying to assemble an automobile for a poor woman who has none."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Sense of Aloofness.

"Don't you think your choice of words is rather likely to prevent your thoughts from being understood?"

"Of course," replied Professor Deepwell, "when a man goes to as much trouble as I do in getting thoughts together he doesn't feel like scattering them around for any and everybody to understand."—Washington Star.

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

SAVED BY DEAD MEN

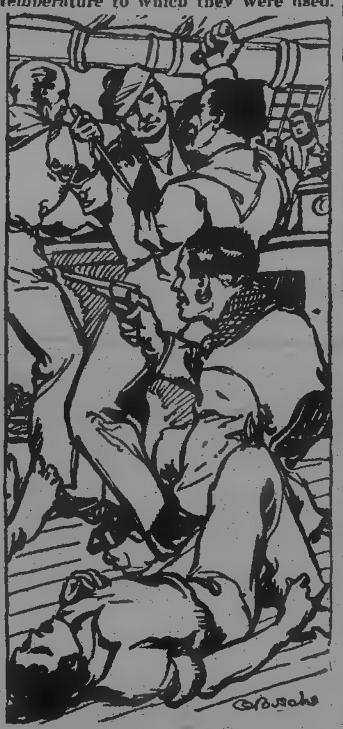
It Happened in the Olden Sail Ship Days.

By JOHN Y. LARNED.

I went to sea in a sail ship when I was fourteen years old and at twenty-two commanded a vessel. I sailed in southern waters and in northern waters, and I couldn't tell you which I disliked more—those of the far north or those on the equator, where the sun blazes down, there being no way of getting away from the heat. Sometimes up north, with the thermometer 60 degrees below zero and the wind blowing a gale, a man could warm up a bit by getting into a sleeping bag, but on the equator, where the temperature was hanging about 120 day after day, he couldn't cool off a bit.

When I commanded the Pelican I struck the island of Borneo in July, when the weather was so hot that the men couldn't stand it. Some deserted, some died, for we had a lot of sickness as well as hot weather, and I found myself left with a quarter of a crew. I was obliged to pick up a few natives in Borneo, got a few more men at Ceylon, another lot at Bombay, and so on, working westward, taking on a worse lot at every port. By the time I reached the Suez canal I had a crew 25 per cent of whom were respectable seamen and 75 per cent desperadoes. Of the 75 per cent half had Asiatic blood in their veins.

I was on a long cruise around the world, trading from port to port, and on entering the Mediterranean my course was Gibraltar, through the strait, then northward to Rotterdam, up the west coast of Norway, thence through the Dover strait and down the Atlantic to Boston. I should never have ventured to carry out such a course with such a crew. Most of my men came from the tropics and were hard enough to control even in a temperature to which they were used. To take them into the Norwegian sea in the midst of ice fields was little short of madness.



A LIVELY FIGHT COMMENCED.

There was trouble continually during our passage over the Mediterranean, which required all the management of which I and my first and second officers were capable. But we were near land all the while, where we could reach marine courts, and the crew realized that any overt act of mutiny might be punished. In moving up the coasts of Spain, France and Holland the temperature was falling right along, and when any duty was to be performed most of the men had to be driven out of their bunks, where they were endeavoring to keep warm, to do it. By the time we reached the Norwegian coast it was almost impossible to get them to do any duty.

On reaching Christiansand my men became so unmanageable that I decided to go no farther northward. Sailing due west, I proposed to work southward along the east coast of Scotland. A gale arose, and the temperature fell to a point which the men could not be made to face aloft or in some cases on deck. We were driven between the Shetland islands and the Hebrides and thence toward the west coast of Ireland.

Fancy three officers of a vessel in such a region with such a crew! I being the master, the chief responsibility devolved upon me, but as our lives were at stake I do not doubt that my officers felt the situation as keenly as I. My two mates and four of the original crew worked the ship under my direction. I offered to serve with them, but they insisted on my remaining their commander.

It would not have been difficult for this diminutive crew to navigate the ship in a temperate climate and fair weather, but the decks and the rigging were covered with ice, and much of the time the weather was stormy. Some of our sails were blown away, and those that were not we managed to furl, except the jibs, which we kept out for steerage way. With these few sails to handle, our little crew were enabled to get on.

I kept the ship headed southward till at last we reached a zone where the temperature was not so low and the weather was fair. I hoped the men would return to duty, but they did not. They understood that they were in the position of mutineers and in case I could get them into a civilized port they would be hanged. So when the temperature and the weather were improved, instead of the men being improved also, they gained the will power for a desperate maneuver. One of their number, a Malay, who knew something about navigation, told them that if they would seize the ship he would take them to the coast of Ireland, where they could abandon her and thus save their lives. This seemed to them to be their only chance, and they agreed to adopt it.

We were several hundred miles south of Greenland when the mutineers came to this decision. They kept it secret from those of the original crew who had stood by their duty, but their secret was suspected from observation of their actions. When a crew known to be mutinous are seen putting their heads together it is evident that they are concocting some stroke. One of our active crew who had sailed a great deal in eastern waters and had a smattering of several languages spoken there made an eavesdropper of himself and gathered enough from their talk to get their plan. He came with it straight to me.

There were some twenty cutthroats among the crew, against whom we could oppose only myself, my two officers and four men—in other words, seven against twenty. The mutineers' plan was to kill all those who were not of their number, make for shore—either Ireland or Newfoundland—leave the ship and scatter.

There was one enemy they did not reckon upon. After leaving the Mediterranean on our way north we had taken aboard fifty casks of port wine, to be sold in New York on the completion of the voyage. Some of the mutineers, considering the matter of taking the ship as good as accomplished, broke into the compartment where the wine was stored and helped themselves. Others, seeing a plentiful supply of the beverage at hand, drank also, and in the course of a couple of hours two-thirds of their number were drunk.

Unfortunately their leader kept sober and succeeded in keeping the rest of his men in like condition. Nevertheless after holding a consultation with my two officers I decided to make an attempt to suppress the mutiny. Realizing what kind of a crew I had to deal with, I had before leaving the east taken a supply of arms to my cabin. As soon as it appeared that the orgie was not likely to go further I called my officers and my four men to my cabin, armed them, and together we went out, and I called for those of the crew who were sober to come forward. They did so, and it was evident from their looks that they intended to put up a fight. I knew they were armed, though they kept their arms out of sight. Since it was their nature to fight, there was every reason why they should attempt to carry out their purpose of taking the ship.

I intended to talk with them, endeavoring to persuade them to return to duty, but they did not give me an opportunity. They had traversed but half the distance between them and us when their leader said something in a tongue I did not understand. Then, some drawing pistols and some knives, they made a rush for us, and a lively fight commenced.

We drove them back, with one of their men and one of ours lying on the deck. But, rallied by their leader, they returned and this time succeeded in dropping two of our men—the second officer and a seaman—out of the fight, while they lost but one man, leaving them nine to our four. We had stronger stuff in us, but they were more agile and could better avoid our blows, the principal weapons used on each side being cutlasses.

The odds were now much against us. We were preparing for a third attack when on our starboard quarter I saw a ship. She had been unnoticed by our party on account of the excitement we were under fighting for our lives. The mutineers did not see her because they were fighting with their backs to her. When they started for us the third time I held up one hand as a signal for a parley and with the other pointed to the coming vessel.

The sight of a ship that I might signal for help took the courage out of them. Their leader urged them to strike a final blow before we could avail ourselves of her assistance; but, panic stricken, they scattered, running back to the forecastle, whence they had come, and down the companionway. I ordered one of my men to close the door and bar them in, which he did.

Meanwhile the ship that had saved us came on. I saw no one on deck except the helmsman, who seemed to be lashed at the wheel, though there were men lying on the deck. Putting the Pelican on a course to pass the stranger at close range, when she came abreast of us I saw that the helmsman was dead, a man propped against the mainmast was dead, and those lying on the deck were dead.

We had been saved by dead men.

The ship had been caught, probably long before, in a northern latitude in extreme cold weather, and the crew had been frozen. Likely they had run out of provisions. Since then she had been sailing in these frigid waters at the mercy of the winds.

BIRD DIVORCES.

Feathered World Has Social Institutions All Its Own.

Generally speaking, the social life of birds is of the happiest description. Their courtship and marriage is one long love song, and it often happens, as one famous naturalist has put it, that while some young human couple are pouring out their hearts to each other beneath the leaves of an apple tree some feathered Romeo is making ardent love to his coy, coquettish Juliet in the branches above.

That clever student of bird life, Mrs. Olive Thorn Miller, maintains that birds have a distinct social life of their own, which is full of interest to the careful observer. The most important feature of their life is that bird marriages are permanent, implying constancy in their affections, of which proof may be found everywhere.

Parrots are notably devoted birds, and are willing to make great sacrifices for their mates. She instances a case where one of a caged pair had managed to make her escape into the open air. The owner of the birds, having observed the attachment between them, hung the cage, with the deserted one in it, at the open window. His calls reached his runaway mate and soon persuaded her to forsake the attractions of the summer woods and return to share his prison.

Grief at the death of their mates is nearly always shown by birds, and some species mourn for what might seem an incredible length of time. They frequently return to the old haunts, flying about and calling as if they hoped to be able to find the lost one again. Another instance of the affection between them is the attention almost invariably shown by the male to the female while the latter is hatching the young brood. He brings her food, sings to her, and often shares the task of sitting on the eggs, thereby giving her an opportunity for rest.

"I am sorry to say, however," says Mrs. Miller, "that in spite of this usually happy state of domestic affairs, there are occasionally unmistakable instances of bird divorce. Sometimes it is the husband who tires of his spouse and drives her away to make room for a new bride. Again it is the wife, who, perhaps, makes up her mind that the father of the family is not providing properly for its wants, and rejects him on that score. In one case of the kind which I watched I am sure this was the trouble. The husband was a cripple, from an injury to his leg, and was certainly rather helpless. But he opposed vehemently all efforts to drive him away, and succeeded in maintaining his authority until he was again able to care for his household."

Strength of Eggshells.

Most people are aware of the power of eggshells to resist external pressure on the ends, but not many would credit the results of tests recently made, which appear to be genuine. Eight ordinary hen's eggs were submitted to pressure applied externally all over the surface of the shell, and the breaking pressure varied between 400 pounds and 675 pounds per square inch. With the stresses applied internally to twelve eggs these gave way at pressures varying between 32 pounds and 65 pounds per square inch. The pressure required to crush the egg varied between 40 pounds and 75 pounds. The average thickness of the shells was 13-1000 inch.—London Globe.

The English of It.

A lady, accompanied by her small son, was making various purchases at the army and navy stores in London. The boy grew tired.

"Who are you buying these for?" he asked.

"Why, for father," was the mother's reply.

"Father in heaven or father in India?" the boy persisted.

The lady mentioned the remark to a friend, who, thinking it amusing, repeated it to an Englishwoman at church a few days later. The Englishwoman listened sympathetically. "Poor woman!" she sighed. "She was married twice."

Cutting the Finger Nails.

Cutting the finger nails appears to have been the most indispensable service the ancient Roman barber rendered to his patrons. Martial, chaffing a fop who had tried to dodge the barber by using plasters to remove his beard, asks triumphantly, "How are you going to manage about your nails?" And the miser in Plautus collects the parings of his nails from the barber to make something out of them, apparently never dreaming that he could save money by cutting them himself.

Mme. de Stael.

Bonaparte said France was not large enough for himself and Mme. de Stael at the same time and exiled her. Next to Bonaparte she was, through her salons, the most powerful personage in the country in her time. "If I were empress of the world," exclaimed the brilliant Mme. de Tesse, "I would command Mme. de Stael to talk to me forever."

Both Disappointed.

Wife—If I'd known that you were after my money I would never have listened to you.

Husband—And if I'd known you'd be so mighty close with your money I would never have proposed.

She Hit Back.

"I told teacher, pop, that you said she taught you when you was a little boy."

"What did she say?"

"That stupidity must run in the family."

Plenty of Orders.

"My friend Wombat says he can't catch up with his orders."

"Is he a manufacturer?"

"Oh, no. Merely a man with a wife and five grownup daughters."

Man sets up the drinks—then drinks upset the man.

That cake soap means less soap for more money. N.P. BAR SOAP means more soap and better soap for less money. One bar of N.P. SOAP at 15¢ cents weighs more than four 5¢ cakes of ordinary soap, and more than five cakes of some kinds and you will find it better soap. 7

Always on Time.

A man who is constitutionally late surprised his friends by leaving the house at 1 o'clock to keep a 2 o'clock appointment.

"Jim's watch must be wrong or he wouldn't have started so early," they said. "He will surely be on time today. Where in the world can he be going?"

"He is going to a funeral," volunteered one who knew. "He is one of the pall-bearers. Very seldom are pall-bearers behind time. I have known men who were late on every other imaginable occasion—late for their own weddings even — but if chosen for pall-bearers they always came up to the mark."

Dancing on Talcum Powder.

It has been found by experiment that the best dancing floor is made as follows: Upon the ordinary floor a sheet of rubber half an inch thick is spread; a certain smooth surfaced linoleum is laid over this, and talcum powder is sprinkled upon it every day. The highly polished waxed wood floors of a few years ago are too slippery for the modern dances. The shoemakers soon learned this and introduced pumps with pads of rubber inserted in the soles.

Overzealous.

If you have ever been annoyed by a too enterprising barber you will appreciate the little incident that left one of them rueful and crestfallen the other day.

Having shaved the customer, he ran his hand over the man's head and said insinuatingly:

"Have a hair trim to-day, sir?"

"Do you think I need it?"

"Yes; it looks pretty long."

"Well, how is the boss barber on hair trimming? Is he pretty good?"

"Yes; he's pretty good, all right. But why?"

"Well, he trimmed my hair yesterday."

IMMENSE FORCE OF RUSSIANS SWEEP ALONG IN THEIR ADVANCE IN PRUSSIA

German War Office Admits That Eastern Army is Retreating "For a Time" and Advices to London Times Say Invaders Have Occupied Tilsit — Russia Claims to Have 3,000,000 Men in Germany.

LONDON, Aug. 27. — The Times' correspondent at St. Petersburg says: "According to private advices Tilsit has been occupied by the Russians."

The military correspondent of The Nieuw Courant of The Hague declares he is able to state on trustworthy authority that the Germans plan to abandon temporarily East and West Prussia and Pomerania to the Russians and withdraw slowly to the River Oder, where the main defences of Berlin lie.

"Germany," according to the correspondent, "appears to have undertaken this measure to give time to her army operating against France to try to deal the British and French armies their deathblow and then to march on to Paris."

A despatch from St. Petersburg last night says the Germans in the Elbing district of West Prussia, near the Vistula river, are fleeing westward before the Russian advance.

Wireless messages from Berlin, picked up by the Marconi station and made public by the Government here, say it is officially admitted in a bulletin published at the German War Office that the Germans have "temporarily retired before a concentrated Russian advance in eastern Prussia."

A St. Petersburg despatch to the Reuter Telegram Co. says that the Russian troops in eastern Prussia have occupied the towns of Nordenburg, Sensburg and Bischofsburg, and the railway station at Rothfliess, and adds that the Russian advance continues.

In eastern Galicia the Russians have driven back the Austrian rear guard beyond the River Zlota Lipa, which runs north and south, about thirty miles west of Tarnopol.

Marienburg Occupied?

PARIS, Aug. 27. — A report was circulated yesterday afternoon that Russian troops on Tuesday occupied Marienburg, in West Prussia, 27 miles southeast of Dantzig. This news has not been confirmed from any other source.

Three Million on German Soil.

LONDON, Aug. 27.—In connection with the activity of the Russians, Gen. Skomlinoff, the Russian Minister of War, is quoted in official despatches as saying that within the next fortnight Russia will have "upward of 3,000,000 men in Germany and half that number in Austria." This giant force, British military experts believe, will turn the tide of battle in favor of the allies, as Germany must withdraw much of her force from the west to cope with it.

Chief military centres along the Vistula river cover 100 miles, and from north to south are Danzig, Dirschau, Marienburg, Graudenz, Kulm and Thorn. Berlin is about the same distance from this great defence line as Paris is from the present area of hostilities in Belgium and France.

Russian Advance Proceeds With Irresistible Force

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 27.—It is officially announced, says the St. Petersburg correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Co., that the Russian advance is proceeding in Prussia with irresistible force. The Germans have retreated to Osterode, a town of East Prussia, 100 miles west of Gumbinnen.

Tokio, Aug. 27.—The Austrian ambassador, Baron Muller de Szentgyorgy, has been recalled.

BERLIN SAYS ALL NAMUR FORTS ARE GONE

Berlin, Aug. 27.—All forts at Namur have fallen, and Longwy, near the Luxemburg border, has been captured. After a resolute defence, the French forces which attacked the Crown Prince's army have been repulsed. Upper Alsace is free of the enemy, except at points to the westward of Kolmar.

Berlin, Aug. 27.—The Tageblatt's correspondent writes that Namur was bombarded with howitzers of 31 centimeters, by mortars and by one 42 centimeter howitzer. The success of the German arms in Belgium, says the Tageblatt, is attributed by military experts to the swiftness with which the German operations were carried through, and also to the delay of assistance promised by the French, who arrived too late, both at Liege and Namur.

TAKE PRECAUTION AGAINST POISON

St. Petersburg, Aug. 27.—A Russian army order prohibits the use of food and forage abandoned by Germans, because of cases of poisoning which have occurred. According to all accounts, the Germans were taken by surprise by the rapidity of the Russian cavalry movements and dash through Mazur Lake district, where five lines of defence were flanked.

The swift Russian movement, together with the crossing of the river Angerapp and the successful battle northward toward Neidenburg, seals the fate of the central fortifications. Fort Boyen is now surrounded on all sides, and the passage through East Prussia is consequently quite open.

BRITISH SINK GERMAN BOAT

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 27.—The steamer Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, formerly the largest of the North German Lloyd Co.'s passenger boats, and at one time the pride of the German merchant service, has been sunk off the coast of West Africa by the British cruiser Highflyer.

She had been converted into an armed cruiser and was searching for British merchant vessels.

London, Aug. 27.—Winston Churchill, the first lord, announced the sinking of the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, in the Commons to-day. He said: "The admiralty has just received intelligence that the German merchant cruiser Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, armed with ten 4-inch guns, has been sunk by H. M. S. Highflyer, off the west coast of Africa. This is the vessel which has been interfering with traffic between this country and the Cape, and is one of the very few German armed auxiliary cruisers which succeeded in getting to sea. The survivors were landed before the vessel sank. The Highflyer had one killed and five wounded."

THE WAR IN BRIEF

Canadian Press Despatch.

A despatch from Ostend which passed through the hands of the censor in London says that Germans have occupied the French cities of Lille, Valenciennes and Roubaix. All three are near the Belgian border. Lille is strongly fortified, Valenciennes of less military importance and Roubaix is known chiefly as a manufacturing centre. The exact knowledge of the importance of this movement was the official information.

While a wireless despatch from Berlin early today, brought the official announcement that all the forts at Namur had fallen and that Germans had also captured Longwy, this conflicts with reports from Antwerp via London and Paris which said only two forts at Namur had been taken.

Four Belgian divisions from Namur are declared to have stopped the southward movement of the German fourth division and later retired on the French line.

St. Petersburg announces the Russian advance in Prussia proceeding with irresistible force and refugees are reported arriving in Berlin from Konigsberg which city they had been advised to leave.

The Japanese foreign Minister announces hostilities in Chinese and Japanese seas will cease with the capture of Kiao Chow after which Japan will become more of a spectator unless Germany's other Pacific stations constitute a menace, when Japan might consult with Britain about driving her out. What attitude Italy may adopt continues to be a matter of speculation.

BATTLE ALONG FRONTIER GOES ON WITH VARYING PROGRESS; VICTORY IN BALANCE

Gen. French Considers Prospects of Impending Battle as Satisfactory

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 27.—Premier Asquith announced in the Commons to-day that Sir John French had reported that he was yesterday engaged against superior German forces.

The British troops fought splendidly, and General French considered the prospects of the impending battle satisfactory.

Paris, Aug. 27.—An official statement issued this afternoon says: "Events of yesterday in the region of the north have neither imperilled nor modified the arrangements made in view of the future development of operations in the region between Vosges and Nancy.

"Our troops continue to progress."

London, Aug. 27, 3.22 p.m.—A despatch to the Havas agency from Kraguyevatz, Servia, declares the Austrian army has evacuated Sanjak of Novipazar.

EIGHT LIVES LOST WHEN STEAMER IS BLOWN UP BY FLOATING MINE

London, Aug. 27.—The Norwegian steamer Gottfried has been blown up in the North Sea by coming in contact with a floating mine. Eight lives were lost.

Washington, Aug. 27.—Official reports from Antwerp to the state department to-day say the city is quiet, but communication has been cut off from all points except Ghent and Bruges and certain points on the coast.

Paris, Aug. 27.—A refugee from Merbes-le-Chateau, a town 13 miles from Mons, said that 360 Belgian riflemen posted in his town kept several thousand Germans at bay for three days, until a German spy disguised in a Belgian uniform showed the Germans a path which enabled them to take the riflemen in their rear. All were killed except 12 villagers.

London, Aug. 27.—A despatch received here from Ostend says the Germans have occupied Lille, Roubaix and Valenciennes, all in France.

London, Aug. 27.—In editorial comment on the military situation, the Times this morning says: "There is little fresh news from France. Inside its frontier the valiant Belgian army is fulfilling its correct function by moving out of Antwerp and detaining a certain portion of the German forces."

London, Aug. 27.—Tests made at various points along the German army's line of communication, says the Ostend correspondent of the Daily News, show that it is surprisingly weak. The Germans seem to have gone forward with the idea that they had nothing more to fear from the Belgian army. If the allies can hold their own at the front, says the correspondent, it is certain that German communication with their base can be cut at any moment; in fact, their army seems to be "up in the air." It has no support, and everything has been chanced on a victory for the advancing army, which is travelling fast, carrying its own supplies and supplementing them with levies on the surrounding country.

Paris, Aug. 27.—No official communication concerning the progress of the war had been issued this morning up to a quarter past eleven. The lack of news is generally attributed to the supposed inaction of the Germans, who were thought to have been too hard hit to sustain a general advance. The French take their check in Belgium quietly and have gained confidence from the reconstruction of the cabinet and the strong stand by their forces in Lorraine.

GERMAN CAPTAIN DESTROYED HIS BOAT

Washington, Aug. 27.—The German embassy to-day received the following wireless from the foreign office at Berlin: "Vienna reports that Liman Pasha, a German officer, has been appointed commanding chief of the Turkish European troops. The small cruiser Madgeburg, entering the Finnish Bay, ran aground after a fight with superior forces, and was blown up by her captain. Most of her crew were saved. A large number of prisoners, chiefly Turcos (French African troops) and British soldiers, passed through Aix-la-Chappelle to-day."

French War Office Says Northern and Southern Wings Have Been Moved Back a Short Distance, But Centre Near Nancy is Keeping up the Offensive Belgians Still in Thick of it.

PARIS, Aug. 27. — The official statement issued by the War Department last night says:—

"In the north the Franco-British lines have been moved back a short distance.

"In a general way our offensive between Nancy and Vosges makes headway. Our right, however, has been obliged to fall back slightly in the region of St. Die."

More Fighting at Malines.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 27. — (Via London.)—The Telegraph's Antwerp correspondent wires that fighting was resumed yesterday morning in the vicinity of Malines, where the Belgians have been engaged daily with German advance troops.

"The road from Malines toward Vilvoorden, six miles northeast of Brussels," the correspondent adds, "is littered with bodies of men and horses, while in the fields pasturing cattle have been killed by shrapnel. The Belgians captured one field gun.

"Everything in Brussels is going on the same as before the German occupation."

The correspondent says it is reported that it is the Duke of Brunswick who has occupied the royal palace at Laeken. The Duke of Brunswick married Princess Victoria Luise of Hohenzollern, daughter of Emperor William of Germany.

Germans Repulsed Along the Line.

LONDON, Aug. 27. — German forces delivered an attack on the French southern frontier Tuesday. They were repulsed and retired all along the line.

This information was given out by the official bureau yesterday afternoon. The text of the announcement is as follows:—

"It is officially announced that on Aug. 25 the French, on their southern frontier, were attacked in force by the Germans.

"The attack was repulsed, and the enemy retired all along the line."

Situation In the Vosges Unchanged.

LONDON, Aug. 27.—A Havas Agency despatch from Paris says:—

"The situation in the Vosges is unchanged. The battle continues in the region of Luneville, and the French troops are making progress.

"On the Luxemburg frontier and in the district of the Sambre river several unimportant engagements have occurred. The situation on the northern districts give no cause for anxiety. No Germans were seen yesterday (probably Tuesday) in the neighborhood of Lille or Tourcoing (in the Department of Nord, France), where measures have been taken with a viw to subsequent operations."

SUCCESS FOLLOWS SUCCESS

Canadian Press Despatch.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 27.—The following official communication was made public here today: "Our offensive both in East Prussia and Galicia developed increasing successes on August 25th. The Germans hastily retreated everywhere toward Koenigsberg and Allenstein."

In Galicia our troops are marching rapidly on Lemberg. They are approaching the city quickly. Our cavalry has pursued the enemy everywhere on our line, our advance frequently engaging the Austrians who each time have been beaten and routed."

SOME SWIM

The strain of the European war is proving too severe for the headline writers. It is quite probable that the rumor that the German cavalry have entered Ghent is well founded. There is no reason to suppose that if the German cavalry wants to do it, there is anything to prevent their riding on to Ostend. Ostend is the best known watering place on the Continent, and it is the port for the fast packet boats from Dover. It is also the principal fishing port of Belgium, and nothing much larger than a fishing boat can get into its harbor. Until the German fleet drives the British fleet out of the North Sea, the German cavalry invading England from Ostend will have to swim for it. — Boston News Bureau.

Plans for Unemployed

The Ontario government has become alive to the problem of the unemployed. It is about to make an organized effort to bring them into touch with the farming interests, which have been persistently complaining of lack of help. If farmers will make their wants known to employment agents in the city, and if the unemployed will do likewise, in a few days there should be quite an advance towards a settlement of this question.

57th OFFICERS TO HOLD MEETING

$100 FOR THE FUND

Dr. F. L. Robinson, proprietor of the Empire Theatre on Charlotte Street, was a happy man last night when he was able to state that $100 was the result of afternoon and evening shows for the Hospital Ship and War Fund.

The committee thoroughly appreciate the generosity of Mr. Robinson and the whole of the ladies and gentlemen who put up such a splendid programme. The presence of men in uniform at the entrance was a happy idea.

The musical numbers so finely rendered were as follows: "Motherland," by Miss Greenhalgh; "Asthoge," by Miss Hanson; "Veteran's song," by Mr. Tom Ward; Welsh "Patriotic song" by Mr. Ed. Jones. From 7.30 to 10 p.m. the Grand Opera House Orchestra played splendid selections and marches, under the leadership of Mr. Geo. Howarth. The accompanist for the afternoon was Mr. R. J. Devey and at night Mr. John Allan. The films shown were splendid and many present last night will visit them today.

PETERBOROUGH, THURSDAY, AUGUST 27, 1914

CANADA'S IMMEDIATE DUTY.

"SUPPOSING every farmer in Canada were to enlarge his wheat production by putting five acres more under crop than he had this year, the total production of wheat in this country would be increased by fifty million bushels. If each farmer were to sow ten acres more wheat, the increase would be doubled. Surely it would be a simple matter to get every farmer in Canada to enlarge his acreage by this small amount. There may be a few who could not do it, but this lack would be offset by the work of those who could easily add fifty or a hundred acres.

"The only possible difficulty lies in the matter of finance. Some farmers may not be able to pay for the labor required to cultivate and seed down an extra ten acres. The work of a national commission and the various provincial committees should be directed towards helping these particular farmers. The financing of them would not be a serious problem nor an onerous undertaking. The amount of capital involved would be very small.

"This is the problem which is before the Canadian people. It is the pressing problem. It should be considered seriously and promptly. In Eastern Canada the land must be prepared and seeded within six weeks. In Western Canada the land must be prepared for seeding within the same period. There is no time for delay."—Canadian Courier.

FATHERHOOD AND MOTHERHOOD.

SOME ONE ought to call the attention of the critics of the modern feminist movement to the fact that our civilization believes in children being born into families, says Collier's. A family consists of a recognized father, a mother, and a child or several children. Every form of legal and social pressure has been exerted for centuries to make this the only accepted mode for carrying on the race. Its success is evident in the fact that the legitimate children are vastly more numerous than the illegitimate—i. e., those born outside the family relation. In spite of all this, we are hearing a great deal nowadays about women "shirking motherhood," "refusing motherhood," or "escaping the duty of motherhood," as if a child were a sort of solitary indulgence on the part of the woman concerned. Anyone who knows the facts of modern life knows that there are practically always two people responsible for the childless family—a man and a woman. If any blame is to be assessed, it must be put on both of them. The version which blames the woman only is no more modern than the third chapter of Genesis. If we are to do any clear thinking on this important subject, it is time we began to discuss the phenomenon of men "shirking fatherhood," "refusing fatherhood," and "escaping the duty of fatherhood." This correction is true not only with respect to the institution of marriage, but also with respect to the economic basis of family life. The modern development of means of diversion and indulgence has affected men as well as women. Successful men are quite apt to be absorbed in business and pleasure, as women are in society and pleasure. They avoid and neglect the family with the same selfish facility. Both have made the same tragic mistake of preferring the transient to the durable satisfactions of life. It is doubtful if any women's college has as bad a record from the standpoint of perpetuating the race as has Harvard. Our country will not escape race suicide by talking as if it were sex suicide. The problem is to impress the ideal of family life upon people who have been so educated and trained as to be centered wholly on themselves.

INCREASING GRAIN PRODUCTION.

THE COMMISSION of Conservation has issued the following bulletin, which it would be well for Canadian farmers to take note of:

"Many farmers, when urged to try growing fall wheat, have excused themselves on the plea that it did not pay; but it is likely that for the next year or two, there will be ready sale at good prices for every bushel of wheat grown in Canada. Every farmer should endeavor to increase his production of grain next year, by putting into use every acre capable of producing it. There are hundreds of acres in Central and Eastern Canada that would successfully grow fall wheat. By preparing the land immediately, a great number of farmers could sow at least a few acres each this fall. No risk is being taken in so doing, as the extra cultivation for fall wheat would increase the yield of a spring sown crop in the event of the wheat being winter-killed. The land would need only to be disked or cultivated to prepare it for spring grain.

"The grain production can also be increased by ploughing up the old, unproductive meadows at once and sowing to grain in the spring. They should be ploughed shallow now, and packed and disked and kept worked until autumn, when they should be thoroughly ploughed again, ready to be worked early next spring. The importance of ploughing the land for next spring's crop early this summer, and keeping it worked during the autumn cannot be too strongly emphasized. Those who are now practicing a systematic rotation might profitably increase the grain crop area next year, and to those who are following the old meadow plan of farming, a better opportunity was never offered to change to a systematic rotation by breaking up the old sod and putting in grain. It will pay to make use of every acre possible in producing grain, as it is sure to be needed."

FUR FARMING.

PHENOMENAL as was the development of the fur-farming industry in 1913, says Conservation, the present year, in all probability, will easily outstrip it. Scores of farmers throughout Canada, but especially in the Maritime provinces, are commencing the breeding of fur-bearing animals. Heavily capitalized companies are being organized on every hand for a similar purpose, although it is now three years since the industry entered upon its first boom. This unusual condition is due, in part at least, to the fact that capitalization values are at present based on stock for breeding purposes, but it can only be a question of time before values are reduced to a pelt basis. Moreover, the extensive importation of wild-fox stock into the Maritime provinces stimulates and maintains the interest that is being taken in this form of investment. The danger of over-capitalizing such untried stock should be, and doubtless is, discouraged by those having the best interests of the industry at heart.

It is worthy of note that at the March sales of C. M. Lampson & Co., the London fur dealers, very little demand was found for black fox skins. To quote the company's report of the sale: "A feature of the sale was the entire absence of the demand for black (fox) skins, which in many instances brought less than former values.

"This is a serious matter to the breeders of black foxes in eastern Canada, as values will assuredly be lower when the supply of this class of skins is largely increased."

It is is unfortunate that some form of commission, such as exists in Manitoba, is not to be found in each of the provinces, to check and prevent questionable promotions which bring into disrepute an otherwise legitimate and profitable industry.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

"TOTAL ABSTINENCE from alcoholic drinks," runs a cable despatch from London, "will be strictly observed during Sir Ernest Shackleton's trip across the South Polar continent. He and his men propose to work long hours, including eight hours' marching every day, but for stimulants they will rely on nothing stronger than tea or cocoa." This is not the freak of an enthusiast, but a common-sense decision, based upon the facts concerning alcohol. For maximum efficiency, the explorer cuts out the booze. The question is: Shall the rest of us be equally efficient in shouldering a share of the world's work?

A Warm Reception.

Hamilton Herald.

It is reported that the Kaiser has decided to take personal command of the forces that are trying to force a passage through Belgium. He can count upon a very warm reception from the British, French and Belgians at Namur if he ever gets that far.

In Perfect Liberty.

(Montreal Le Canada.)

It is in perfect liberty and by the collective will of the representatives of the people that Canada determines how she will aid the Empire in the present war. This free and spontaneous aid of the English colonies is a spectacle unequalled in history and is the glory of the British system of government.

Bravo, Quebec!

(Montreal La Patrie.)

In offering 4,000,000 pounds of cheese to the British army, the Gouin government has had a happy thought. For the feeding of the troops such a gift will be of the highest value. Such a gift also will have a reassuring effect upon our farmers so far as regards the consequences of the war on the market for dairy products. The farmers will no longer have any fear of being unable to sell their products and the production can be augmented to its maximum.

The Red Man's Gratitude.

Calgary News-Telegram.

In donating a sum of $1000 to Great Britain's war fund and expressing their eagerness to go to the front and fight, the Blood Indians of the Macleod district show that they bear no resentment to the men who took possession of their lands. The yoke of British rule is, to all appearances, a pleasant burden.

Canada and Empire Wars.

La Patrie.

If Le Devoir wants to know the permanent rule which will decide the participation of Canada in future wars of Great Britain, it is not difficult to formulate a rule: Canada will be held rigorously to participate in any wars in any part of the globe which put the integrity of the Empire in peril. In English wars outside of Canada and where the Mother Country does not seek our aid, our participation will be optional, but it is probable that we shall always offer it in a certain measure, even if only to affirm the solidarity which exists between all portions of the British Empire. This is the sane doctrine and the only one which will protect the interests of both the Empire and of Canada.

What It Will Cost.

Canadian Courier.

On the cost to Canada of this war the editor says in Reflections:

A twelve-months' war will cost Canada a great deal of money. It is estimated that the first contingent of 22,500 men will cost Canada twenty-two million dollars. Privates will receive one dollar per day, corporals one dollar and ten cents, and sergeants one dollar and twenty-five cents. Officers get higher rates. To pay these men for one year will take ten million dollars, or $30,000 a day. To this must be added the cost of rifles, guns and other equipment, food, horses, and transport. So that the estimate of twenty-two millions seems to be about right.

A second division, whether it stays at home or abroad, will cost another twenty-two millions. And a second contingent is absolutely necessary. Then there is the purchase of two submarines, the refitting of the Niobe and Rainbow, the increase in coast armament and many other incidental expenses.

An appropriation of fifty million dollars is the very least that can be made, and Parliament will no doubt vote that amount of money this week. Britain will assist us in raising the money, and in the meantime the Dominion authorities will no doubt issue paper money in so far as it is safe so to do.

SCHOOL DAYS

By Walt Mason

Oh, shriek with joy, you lucky boy, vacation's nearly ended, and soon you'll tool yourself to school—the thought is surely splendid! We long have known how tired you've grown of fooling round and fishing, how for your books and slate, gadzooks, you've ardently been wishing. We've seen you weep because they keep the school house closed all summer; you tired of play in half a day (which statement is a hummer!) The swimming hole to schoolboy soul gives little satisfaction; in dreams you see the Rule of Three, and eke the Vulgar Fraction. You think of maps while idle chaps are stealing unripe apples; your thoughts are all of learning's hall, of blackboards, desks and chapels. Ah, how you hate to dig for bait, boating go, or gunning, when you might find food for your mind if school were only running! How you abhor the baseball war, and other pastimes dizzy, when you might strike some truths you'd like, if school were only busy! Now, sing and smile! A little while will see vacation ended; reward will come, the schools will hum—that thought is surely splendid.

The Minister of Justice has inhibited the export of barley. This is not effective in the matter of sales made prior to Aug. 22.

There are now seventeen Germans in custody at Fort Henry at Kingston. Eight more will probably be transferred there from Montreal.

A German aeroplane fell to the ground inside the British lines in the Quesnoy region Tuesday, and the two German officers on board were killed.

The first all-water voyage from San Francisco to New York by way of the Panama Canal was completed yesterday upon the arrival of the Pleiades at New York.

The capture by a British cruiser of the German steamship Serak of the Kosmos line, from Hamburg to Callao, by way of Swansea, Wales, was reported yesterday.

Among those who have volunteered in Germany are many Socialist leaders, while the Vorwarts and other German Socialist papers, still publish articles of a very patriotic nature.

Fearing that their property will be damaged by a gang of tramps roaming Frontenac County, many farmers have asked the justice of the peace, George Hunter, for permission to carry firearms, and their request has been granted.

The inquest into the death of Private Fred. Kells of the 19th Regiment, who was drowned while doing sentry duty on the Welland Canal, failed to establish facts as to whether the soldier came to his death accidentaly or from other causes.

MOBILIZATION A FARCE.

Fully Forty Per Cent. of the Austrians Failed to Answer Call.

ROME, Aug. 27.—The Messaggero has received a despatch from its correspondent at Nish, Servia, saying that the total Austrian prisoners in Servia number 10,000. The Austrian casualties since the commencement of the war have been in the third southern army.

Some of the prisoners which the Servians have taken declare that the Austrian mobilization bore great resemblance to a farce. The desertions were countless in number, and it is estimated that fully 40 per cent. of the men called upon to serve failed to answer.

Despite this and Austrian defeats at the hands of the Servians and Russians, the aged Emperor Francis Joseph is being supplied constantly with fallacious triumphant bulletins. The reason for this is the critical state of the health of the monarch. Officials would entertain the gravest fears for him should he be apprised of the true situation.

NAMUR FORTS INTACT.

Official Belgian Statement Says They Are Untaken.

LONDON, Aug. 27.—The following official announcement has been issued at Antwerp, according to the Reuter correspondent there:

"The Belgian operations have succeeded in the double object of diminishing the German entrenchments and drawing the German troops on the line between Malines and Brussels, and thus reducing pressure on the French positions. We have compelled the fourth German division, which was advancing southward, to retrace its steps. The fourth Belgian division at Namur has fulfilled its task, arresting the German column and allowing the Belgians to retire on the French line.

"The Namur forts are still holding out."

Austrian Losses Grow.

LONDON, Aug. 27.—A despatch from Paris to Reuter's Telegram Co. says:

"The losses of the Austrians in the battle of the Drina continue to grow, according to telegrams from Nish. The latest avert that out of 300,000 Austrians engaged, 15,000 were killed, 30,000 wounded and 15,000 made prisoners. Seventy-five guns were captured.

Cost of a Failure.

In Russia a man, intending to kill himself, got in front of a railway train, but was pulled aside.

Then the authorities took him in charge. They fined him for disorderly conduct, imprisoned him for imperiling human life and gave him solitary confinement for interrupting travel. It seems to be painfully difficult to leave Russia by any route.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

VICTORY CERTAIN

Germans Between the Hammer and the Anvil

LONDON, Aug. 27.—"The allies in their present entrenched positions are as the anvil to the Muscovite hammer," declares The Daily Graphic's military correspondent.

"It is good news," he continues, "that the concentration of the allies on entrenched lines within the French frontier is complete, and the positions thus held are little less than impregnable. The Germans will find that their next move will be much more difficult than that which confronted them a week ago.

"Gen. Joffre's troops will now be devoting all their energy to a stubborn defensive. They are the anvil. The Muscovite hammer is gathering all its immense force for a crushing blow in Posnia. Hence it is most important that the allies' forces should stand firm.

"The hammer is doing excellently, although the preliminary work is necessarily slow on account of the Russians' lack of facilities for mobilization. Nevertheless, the progress thus far made by Russia has exceeded the most optimistic expectations, and the Germans are likely to pay dearly for their undervaluation of the Russian efforts."

Italian Volunteers In Paris.

PARIS, Aug. 27.—Captain Ricciotti Garibaldi, the Italian patriot, and his three sons, headed 2,400 Italian volunteers, who assembled yesterday on the Boulevard Des Invalides. The Italian soldiers divided attention of the Parisians with a sad procession of Belgian refugees, who had just arrived from the country swept by the fighting armies. They were mostly women and children, and they had their worldly possessions in little parcels in their hands or in packs on their backs. Some of the women carried babies.

German Prince Killed.

BERLIN, Aug. 27.—Wireless telegraphy to the Associated Press, by way of Nauen and Sayville, Long Island: According to official announcement made here yesterday, Lt.-Gen. Prince Frederic of Saxe-Meiningen, was killed by a shell before Namur, Aug. 23.

No news of the situation of the eastern and western fronts of Germany has been given out.

CLOSET SPACE.

Clever Way of Acquiring It In a Small Apartment.

A clever woman added more closet space to the scanty supply her apartment afforded in this way: The hall was of wood paneling up to a height of four feet. She converted every other panel for some distance along one side into an invisible door, so that the space in back of each could be used for storing various belongings.

In one of these shallow closets a rack was built to hold umbrellas. In another were inserted shelves just wide enough to hold the men's hats when not in use. Another closet space was used for whisk broom, dusters and hat brush and still another for overshoes, etc.

This arrangement has proved an inestimable convenience. A careful carpenter was able to do the work without in the least disfiguring the wall.

Homemade Vacuum Bottle.

When going picnicking make a vacuum bottle out of a big jar if you do not happen to own a regular vacuum bottle. A two quart jar is best. Pack it with ice, keeping the pieces large, with the smaller bits to fill up the crevices, and then wrap the jar (after fastening the top on) with many layers of old newspapers. The ice will keep all day this way.

Cleaning Mirrors.

Do not use water on mirrors. Dip a cloth in alcohol and wipe the glass; then use tissue paper to finish. Old newspapers are fine for window glasses. They should be torn and rubbed soft, the panes washed with clear water, wiped dry and polished with the crumpled paper.

CENSORED NEWS

Limburg, via Paris and London.—(This despatch has been subjected to the artistry of Belgian, French and British censors. — Latest reports from Strongfort state that Limburger is still strong and holding out against the Germans who have been repulsed. All of the attacking army have been killed, except a drummer boy, who was shot through an ear, thus incapacitating him from his duties. Two Belgians were wounded.

St. Strond, Belgium—(Ditto)—The Germans have been repulsed.

Tirlemont, Belgium — (Ditto) — The Germans have been repulsed.

Jodoigne, Belgium — (Ditto) — The Germans have been repulsed.

Amiens, France — (Fixed)—The Germans, who have been repulsed, are retiring in the direction of Paris. They have left the most of their field pieces in swamps and are slowly starving to death.

Strassburg, Germany—(Doctored)—The French commissariat arrangements have utterly failed, and the French army is said to be subsisting on champagne.

Belfort, France — (Proof read)—The German army rations are falling short, and the Germans who are not already starved to death are said to be getting only half a sausage a day.

Berne, Switzerland — (Blue penciled) — Swiss army is living on switzer cheese sandwiches, but the supply of mustard is appallingly low and grave fears are being entertained.

Calais, France — (Official translation) — The English army, which has now, by forced marching, penetrated well into Belgium, is served with tea every afternoon at four o'clock.

Metz, Germany — (Censored) — Two pretzel factories burned here today. A French regiment of squadrons was annihilated.

Amsterdam, Holland — (Officially vaccinated) — The Dutch army is being fed with smearcase.

WHAT IS HIS NAME ?

Why, you've got a little pucker between your pretty straight brows. What do you care if you don't know much about players of baseball, football, hockey and so forth ? It's the easiest thing in the world to learn and we're here to help you.

Sit down with your pencil in hand and look at the picture. Search out every little point in which the artist, clever fellow that he is, may have poked away the baseball man's name. It's in the picture somewhere and you can find it if you look.

Well, if you're going to frown that way, and whack the enamel off from your pretty white teeth with your pencil, why don't you run upstairs and get the little book you bought when starting the contest ?

Now then work, and don't worry. As surely as the sun follows the moon, so will this afternoon's picture follow in well-solved sequence, yesterday's.

Bless my stars! I knew you'd do it! Run upstairs this minute and put it with the others so you won't mislay it.

Think of the pleasure in working for such grand rewards as are offered and remember that you are just as eligible to win as any other person.

AFRAID SHE WAS DYING

Suffered Terribly Until She Took "Fruit-a-tives"

ST. JEAN DE MATHA, JAN. 27th. 1914.

"After suffering for a long time with Dyspepsia, I have been cured by "Fruit-a-tives". I suffered so much that I would not dare eat for I was afraid of dying. Five years ago, I received samples of "Fruit-a-tives". I did not wish to try them for I had little confidence in them but, seeing my husband's anxiety, I decided to do so and at once I felt relief. Then I sent for three boxes and I kept improving until I was cured. While sick, I lost several pounds, but after taking "Fruit-a-tives", I quickly regained what I had lost. Now I eat, sleep and digest well—in a word, I am completely cured, thanks to "Fruit-a-tives".

THE MARKETS

Latest Quotations in Grain, Dairy Products, Live Stock, etc.

CHICAGO, Aug. 26.—Board of trade markets affected by the war soared to new high levels today led by wheat, which closed 5¼c to 6¼c over yesterday. Corn advanced 1⅜c to 2c; oats, 1⅝c to 2¼c, while provisions were 7½c down, to 57½c higher.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 26.—Wheat prices made another substantial advance this morning after the opening, which was ½c to ¾c higher. Within the first hour there were gains around 2¼c to 2⅝c over yesterday's close in all months. The market continued bullish, the greater part of the receipts being held by farmers, the general opinion crediting higher prices. Later further advances occurred after midday and during the last half hour the market was wild and nervous with wide fluctuations. Closing prices were 2½c to 5¼c higher.

The cash demand for eastern millers continues strong for all grades of wheat, but offerings are light. Oats, barley and flax are in good demand. Exporters are doing nothing, prices being out of line.

Cash grains closed: Wheat, 3⅝c to 4⅝c higher; oats, unchanged to 2c higher; barley, 1c higher; flax, 1c higher.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 26.—The general market situation here today was unchanged, as the further advance in wheat and oat prices did not induce any new business. The cables that were received here today were much out of line, and it is thought in some quarters that owing to the large quantity of grain that was diverted from the continent the present supply at Liverpool is ample for all requirements and a betterment in cable prices need not be looked for in the near future. There was some talk locally that cheese might witness an early advance, but the business that was done today was at yesterday's prices. Butter and eggs continue to be received in light quantities only, and prices were again firm. In a word, the local situation showed no change.

DULUTH, Aug. 26.—Wheat—No. 1 hard, $1.21; No. 1 northern, $1.21; No. 2 northern, $1.19; Sept., $1.18½; Dec., $1.18½.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, Aug. 26.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 67 cars, comprising 937 cattle, 1373 hogs, 818 sheep and lambs and 172 calves.

Butchers' Cattle.

Choice butchers' cattle sold at $8.60 to $9.25, but only twenty-two cattle at the latter price; loads of good, $8.25 to $8.50; medium, $7.50 to $7.75; common to medium, $7.25 to $7.50; inferior heifers, $6.50 to $7; choice cows, $6.75 to $7; good cows, $6.25 to $6.50; medium cows, $5.75 to $6; common cows, $3 to $4.50; choice bulls, $6.75 to $7.25; common bulls, $5 to $6.25.

Stockers and Feeders.

A very few lots were offered and sold at steady values. Choice steers $7 to $7.40; medium steers at $6.75 to $7; stockers, $5.50 to $6.50.

Milkers and Springers.

Only a limited number were offered for sale. These sold at $60 to $85 each. Had there been better quality higher values would have been paid.

Veal Calves.

Receipts moderate and values practically unchanged. Choice veal calves $10 to $10.50; good, $8.50 to $9.50; medium, $7.50 to $8.50; common, $6.50 to $7.50; inferior at $5.50 to $6.50.

Hogs.

Selects, fed and watered, sold at $10 25 to $10.35, and $10.50 weighed off cars. We did not hear of any sales being made f.o.b. cars.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Aug. 26.—An easier feeling prevailed today in the market for hogs, which were firm Monday after advances last week, while the reverse occurred in lambs and sheep, which were easy last week and Monday, but which hardened and were stronger today. This advance was thought due to the small offerings. The price for sheep advanced ½c to ¾c and for lambs about 1c per pound.

Lower grades of cattle were offered more abundantly than the better class of meat. The demand was only fair, and consequently prices were inclined to heaviness. The market for calves was very limited and prices in that section were also inclined lower on the poor demand.

Hogs sold from 30c to 35c per 100 pounds lower than on Monday, due chiefly to the absence of the abnormal demand that was witnessed here all last week and in Monday's market.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

CHICAGO, Aug. 26.—Cattle—Receipts, 15,000; market, higher; beeves, $6.70 to $10.65; Texas steers, $6.25 to $9.40; stockers and feeders, $5.35 to $8.70; cows and heifers, $3.80 to $9.25; calves, $7.50 to $11.

Hogs—Receipts, 25,000; market, lower; light, $8.85 to $9.32½; mixed, $8.60 to $9.32½; heavy, $8.45 to $9.20; rough, $8.45 to $8.65; pigs, $6 to $8.50; bulk of sales, $8.85 to $9.15.

Sheep—Receipts, 35,000; market, steady; native, $4.80 to $5.80; yearlings, $5.70 to $6.70; lambs, native, $6.25 to $8.

Prince of Monaco Proud of Belgium.

LONDON, Aug. 27.—The Prince of Monaco has sent the following telegram to King Albert of Belgium:

"At a time when our east is being darkly menaced by brute force, I wish to say to you how proud I am that Belgian blood is in my veins."

King Albert replied to this communication in cordial tones.

Belgians Protest To U. S.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27—E. Havenith, the Belgian Minister, presented a protest at the State Department yesterday against what he termed a "war against women and children"—the Zeppelin airship attack on Antwerp. Ten persons were killed, the Minister stated, four of them women. Eight people were injured.

British Sailors Killed

Three Lives Are Reported Lost In the Attack on City of Tsingtao.

PEKIN, Aug. 27—Unconfirmed reports received here say, that British sailors of the torpedo flotilla aiding the Japanese fleet in the attack on the German seaport of Tsingtao, in Kiaochau, have been killed by shells fired from the forts.

It is said that the British destroyer Kennet was hit, three of her men being killed. The destroyer itself, however, was not badly damaged.

It is believed that it will be a week before the attack by land on Tsingtao will begin. The Japanese troops are still landing near Haiyangusien, and the bombardment by the Japanese battleships is reported to be still going on.

The Japanese vessels, however, are not able to get close to the seaport, owing to active German destroyers in the vicinity.

AS GERMANS ADVANCE THEIR PERIL INCREASES

London, Aug. 27.—"A Belgian officer who returned here yesterday from Hazebrouck, France," says the Daily Express Ostend correspondent, "gave me the details of the situation. It was decided Monday not to defend Lille, and Tuesday the mayor's proclamation was published, announcing the evacuation by the French troops and the transformation of the town into an undefended place.

"All the gendarmes were disarmed, and steps were taken to deliver the city, with all its rich factories, up to the Germans. Tuesday evening all the available treasure was removed. Apparently there were never any great allied forces to bar the road to Lille.

"The more the German army advances, however, the more perilous becomes its situation. It now has its flanks and lines of communication menaced by Belgians based on Antwerp, with advance guards at Malines, by the northern French army and by the allied masses near Maubeuge.

"All that now is needed is a strong holding force near Arras, which the French have had ample time to prepare.

It is estimated that the German striking force from Brussels numbered 750,000 men."

INCIDENTS IN ENGLAND OF THE WAR

Grim as war news is, it is not without its lighter side of amusing incidents, oddities and romance.

Lord Kitchener's first question when he entered the war office to take up his new post, so it is reported in the Sporting Chronicle, was addressed to the porter.

"Is there a bed here?" he asked.

"No, my lord," replied the porter.

"Get one," said Lord Kitchener, "I may be here some time."

And, it is said, he has been eating and sleeping, as well as working, inside the war office almost ever since.

The conferring of war names upon children began as soon as the first blood was shed. "Albert Leman Liege" Hopkins and "Marie Alsace Lorraine" Lecomte, have already been registered in London.

The suggestions advanced in letters to the press for mitigating the distress during and after the war covers almost everything. An Australian urges that the fecundity of the rabbit offers a solution. He would have the government enclose areas of the country and stock them well with rabbits. Thousands of rabbits rapidly multiplying would prove "very useful during a period of high prices," he says.

To end hostile demonstrations, a German woman shopkeeper of Islington married an Englishman, and the name "Jenkins" has replaced that of "Hoggesbatt" above the shop.

Almost everything is free to the soldier. Photographic studios invited soldiers in for free portraits to leave with their sweethearts. Bootmakers advertise their desire to repair the army man's boots free of cost, and in some instances they engage to keep the footgear of the wives and children at home in repair so long as the war lasts.

London housewives have made up some "war rules for the kitchen," which call for marketing in person, the bringing home of all small parcels, and buying and cooking in the most economical way possible from day to day, rather than buying in quantities. Some of the London papers have severely scored the practice of the well-to-do in buying huge quantities of foodstuff with which to stuff their larders, knowing that their action contributes further hardship to the poor.

"Business as usual," be being given wide publicity as a motto for the Englishman at home to follow so far as possible during the war. Notwithstanding the optimism, however, the shadow of unemployment is lengthening daily.

One of the largest candle making firms in England reports that business took a decided spurt with the outbreak of war, due to a popular fear that the gas and electric light service might fail suddenly. Candle dealers generally have been obliged to limit their sales, for fear of exhausting their stocks.

The use of the telephone for the circulation of war news to subscribers has become a feature of the newspaper service throughout the British Isles. Most of the papers have definite late evening hours set apart, during which any subscriber who has paid from a shilling to a pound per week for the service, may learn by phone the late night war news.

Wives of soldiers married without official permission and without title to allowances, are to receive allowances just the same, according to announcement by the war office. The allowance will be twenty-five cents a day for each wife, with four cents a day for each boy under 14 years of age, and each girl under sixteen.

The Welsh have decided to hold the great National Eisteddfod, or singing festival, at Bangor next month, notwithstanding the war. The proceeds of the festival are to be devoted to the Prince of Wales' war distress fund.

What the Situation In Trade Calls For

Will the war necessary ruin British and Canadian trade? Before we are quite certain that it will, certain considerations should be weighed. History furnishes certain examples which afford a distinctly cheerful augury.

Two main features need examination. These are:

1. The question of sea transportation. Will British ships be captured and shut up in harbors? will insurance rates run up? and will freight rates increase?

2. The question of trade itself. Will the interchange of commodities be greatly lessened and manufacturing cut down?

First of all, it must be noted that the first few weeks of the war will not represent the real characteristics of its commercial side. A certain paralysis is to be expected at the outset, due to uncertainty and change of conditions. It is a century since there was so serious a war, and since there was any widespread fighting on the high seas; and it is natural to expect that manufacturers, merchants and ship owners, who all their lives have experienced peace conditions, and peace conditions only, for a few weeks will be excited, apprehensive, and uncertain as to developments. Once they have grasped the new conditions they will set out to adapt themselves to them and a revival of activity is to be expected. Especially will they be ready so to adapt themselves when new opportunities are set before them.

Secondly, in the past the trade and shipping of the British Empire have not suffered, as a whole, from war. Instead they have thriven upon it. During the great war between Great Britain and France from 1793 to 1815, British trade and shipping increased enormously, and this in spite of Napoleon's continental system, which was an attempt to have Britain boycotted by the whole of Europe. Here, for example, is a statement by a contemporary writer:

> "During all the operations of war and finance, the gains of our enterprising people were beyond all calculation, however the unproductive classes may have suffered from the depreciation of money and the inequalities of taxation. Our commerce has become more than double its greatest extent during the happiest years of peace."

Figures bear out this assertion. In 1792, in peace time, the imports and exports of Great Britain amounted to $216,500,000. In 1796, after three or four years of war, they stood at $261,000,000. In 18ee they had risen to $358,000,000. Throughout the Napoleonic struggle the trade of the United Kingdom steadily increased.

These opening observations made, let us look at the two features of the situation just noted. First, as to attacks upon merchant ships by enemy warships or privateers.

War on High Seas.

In the great French war, from 1793 to 1815, there was almost incessant war upon the high seas, and for nearly all that period the French devoted their whole energy to commerce destruction. What followed? For one thing, French commerce itself disappeared. In the year ending 20th September, 1800, the whole of the direct trade between France and the three continents of Asia, America and Africa amounted to only some $350,000; while that of Great Britain was $350,000,000. For another thing, with all the activity of French warships and privateers, the losses of British shipping were not more than two and a half per cent a year, and probably were under two per cent. Where careful and skilful arrangements were made, the losses were lower yet; in one very perilous region in the Far East a particularly able officer took certain precautions and the losses from capture fell to a lower figure than those from the ordinary perils of navigation.

Extraordinary facilities for commerce destruction were possessed by the French at that period. An exceedingly large proportion of British trade went up the English Channel, in slow moving sailing craft, and vessels could row out in the night from the French ports and board them.

A great share of the commerce of the day was held by the West Indies, and the French and Spanish islands abounded in ports and harbors which served as bases for privateers. These special advantages to the attacker do not exist today; the French coast is friendly, German ships have no foreign bases except a few in Africa, which soon will be captured, and German ships are penned up in the North Sea. Yet a hundred years ago, with all these advantages to commerce destroyer, the risk of capture to the British ship owner was only about 2 per cent. It was only one extra risk, ranking with shipwreck, collision or the other dangers which beset ships at all times.

The case of the Alabama is often cited. The Alabama enjoyed two great advantages which the modern commerce destroyer lacks. She could use her sails and so save coal; and the present rule of international law forbidding warships to coal more than once in the ports of a neutral nation had not been formulated. She had a third advantage which German ships cannot count upon; the Northern Navy conducted its operations against her very unskilfully. Speaking generally, their ships trailed after her instead of heading her off.

A Difficult Task.

The German cruiser which tries to do commerce destroying today has a difficult task. The seas swarm with British cruisers; many of them are slower than the fast ships which Germany just now has in the Atlantic and Pacific, but most of them are larger and carry heavier guns. They are carefully placed so that wherever, on the Atlantic at least, the German cruiser goes, she is likely to find waiting for her a ship too heavy to fight. Meanwhile she is burning her coal. Hanging over her is the menace of the wireless, that ship, long before she is taken — for the chase will take time — will have given notice to every British cruiser within a thousand miles of the German's whereabouts, and a ring of enemies will be converging upon the corsair before she has clutched her prey. The recent brush between the Karlsrhue and two British ships excellently illustrates the system. The Suffolk found the Karlsruhe coaling and chased her; the Karlsruhe outsteamed her, and in a few hours was out of the Suffolk's sight. But the Suffolk had summoned by wireless the Bristol, and this ship was lying ahead of the fleeing German, waiting to take up the chase. Again, the Karlsruhe — which is a very swift ship — outsteamed the protector of commerce and got away. But, apart from any damage done by the British shells there is this fact to consider: that the Karlsruhe spent a day or two steaming at her highest speed, and must have used up at least four hundred tons of coal which it will puzzle her captain to replace, and all she carries is 1,200 tons. A very few weeks of this scientific hustling along, handing her over from one commerce destroyer to another, will see her with empty bunkers, a helpless hulk. The war is nearly three weeks old, and the German cruisers to date of writing are not known to have captured one merchantman in the Atlantic ocean or off the Pacific coast of North America. The Karlsruhe, for example, has been too busy running away to do much chasing of merchant ships.

Even if a German ship captures a merchantman her difficulties will not be over. What will she do with it? If she sinks it, she will have to take the crew on board, and high speed cruisers have little accommodation for passengers or prisoners. If she puts a prize crew on board she will weaken her crew — the Leipsic, for example, carries fewer than three hundred officers and men—and then she will not know where to send her prize, which will stand little chance of navigating the North Sea into a German port.

These considerations do not exhaust the difficulties which beset the attack upon British commerce of today. But they indicate this — that when conditions have settled down, the risk of capture will be simply one more sea-faring risk, probably considerably less than that of colliding with ice-bergs at certain seasons of the year.

And finally, so far as freight rates are concerned, there is the fact of state insurance. A system of this has been put in force in Great Britain, and if captures do occur, the public treasury wil bear the greater part of the loss. If steamship rates rise, it will be due to press of business rather than to danger. The powerful competition of the German mercantile marine will be removed and the British mercantile marine will have more business than ever on its hands.

So much for open freights. The next great consideration is the volume of trade which will offer. Here the general fact is that Germany and Austria are cut off from the trade of the whole world. No small part of the goods which they normally sell to other nations must be sold by others. Great Britain, for instance, will cease to buy huge quantities of goods from them; some of these the other parts of the Empire can cupply. We in Canada shall cease to buy great quantities of German and Austrian goods — we shall buy them from Great Britain. The total volume of trading in the world will diminish, because so many men are withdrawn from industry, and capital will be absorbed in financing the war; but an immense amount of trade will continue, and this will be re-arranged. The United States, Japan, China and many other countries will be clamouring for goods which Germany has been supplying. So far as the British Empire is concerned, there will be redistribution of trade rather than diminution. Agricultural produce plainly will comamnd higher prices, and if Canada's basic industry is kept prosperous, the others will have an opportunity to steady themselves.

What is needed is a cool and steady frame of mind. The trade of the world is not going to stop. Ships still will furrow the sea, and men still will produce and buy and sell. A stout-hearted determination to adjust our industry to new conditions is what the situation demands.

PANIC IN BERLIN

LONDON, Aug. 27.—"Despite the German efforts to minimize the extent and importance of the Russian victories," says The Standard's Copenhagen correspondent, "the German public apparently is by no means satisfied of their security. A panic seems imminent in Berlin. Wealthy Germans already are leaving the city and hastening toward Scandinavia by way of Copenhagen. A number of these already have passed through this city."

There Is Milk In This Cocoanut

WHILE the nations of Europe are at war, the people of Canada have a duty to their own land as well as to the Mother Country and giving contingents to England's aid, let us also give all the help we can to ourselves. Canada's own big problem is that of a country which has imported much-- and suddenly find those importations cut off.

You will get at the milk in this cocoanut at once by glancing at the following lists:

The Canadian manufacturers of the articles in List No. 2 have now an advantage greater than any tariff wall. The competition of Continental Europe has been withdrawn and will remain withdrawn until the war is over at least. Let the Canadian manufacturers make the most of the situation. And let the people of Canada rally around our manufacturers and help them make the most of it, for we need them and the things they make as never before.

The immediate result of the European war, in Canada, was a check to bsuiness.

The second result will be to stimulate business—if we keep our heads, GO AFTER business and ADVERTISE in the newspapers.

ONTARIO GOVERNMENT ACTS TO HELP UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEM CO-OPERATING WITH THE FARMERS

(Mail and Empire.)

The Toronto members of the legislature held another long conference with the government yesterday in working out plans for meeting the unemployment problem in Ontario this fall and winter. Progress was made toward forming a committee and perfecting organization. In the various departments the officials are already busy sizing up the possibilities by providing work. Hon. Dr. Reaume's department by means of public works improvements and highway construction, and the department of agriculture by "back to the land" schemes.

Plans are under way for sending out cards to farmers all over the province, briefly stating the situation and asking how many men can be engaged for the fall and winter months and the wages the farmer is prepared to pay. In this way it is hoped the department will be able to find without delay places for a large number of the city unemployed, despite the fact that the rush time for the farm is over.

An indication of the readiness of public and business men to throw their energies into plans to relieve the situation is the fact that two practically separate organizations are at present aiming at the same thing. A week ago a deputation of business men, led by W. K. McNaught, ex-M.P.P., called upon the government to enlist aid for a movement aiming to promote flagging industry and relieve unemployment. The same group, which included a number of well-known business and financial men, later took the matter up with the government at Ottawa. Since then Mr. McNaught has been busy, and yesterday he called on the government with a view to getting the organization in shape, since it is largely through Hon. Mr. Duff and the department of agriculture that he and those associated with him hope to get results.

Mr. McNaught, on his arrival at the prime minister's office, found the Toronto members holding their third consultation with the ministers upon plans of much the same nature.

NATIVE KOREANS COMING TO THE ARMY TEMPLE

A party of native Koreans together with Col. and Mrs. Hoggard and daughter, pioneer officers of the Salvation Army in Korea, will visit Peterboro Friday, Sept. 4th, and conduct a great missionary meeting in the Temple. This party represented Korea at the great International Congress recently held in London, England, and are touring Canada. The local corps here are in high glee at the prospect of having these special visitors as they are only touching a few cities of the Dominion.

Thomas McManus Writes From St. Croix, France

Mr. Frank McManus ,276 William St., is in receipt of a letter from his son Tom, who has been in St. Croix, France, for the past sixteen months. The letter dated Aug. 9th, in part states, that conditions in that country have assumed a very serious aspect. He states that practically all the men have gone to war and the women are doing the work formerly done by the men.

The French Government have placed a strict censorship on the newspapers, they being not allowed to publish anything about the war. He says that the way the British troops were brought into the country and the people knowing nothing whatever, until they arrived met with much admiration. There is no manufacturing going on whatever. The only power in use is used to operate the street cars. All the men who are not of French nationality have to report to the Chiefs of Police of their respective cities, and get credentials, which they have always to carry on their person. This includes their photograph. The writer states that a short distance from where he is located four German spies were shot and killed while in the act of blowing up one of the bridges.

Mr. McManus holds an important position with the International Harvester Company.

TWO HUNDRED HOUSEWIVES SENT TO MEN AT VAL CARTIER

The sewing committee in charge of the housewives for the soldiers, assisted by volunteer workers from the women and young girls of the city, completed their task yesterday. Over 200 housewives, well supplied with needles, thread, pins, buttons and shoelaces, were forwarded last night to our men at Val Cartier. Mrs. H. Rush and Mrs. A. P. McLean, who have been in charge of this work, have spent many busy days at the armouries. It is their intention to continue the sewing meetings every Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock until further notice.

Mr. George Lundy very generously donated several cases of chewing gum, which have also been forwarded. The lunches for our men who are leaving Cobourg to-morrow are to be sent to-night.

CHURCHILL VOTED DOWN WHEN HE SAID "STRIKE"

London, Aug. 27. — There are many stories flying about London respecting the first stages of the present war. Most of them concern the navy. They may not all be true, but they grow out of the situation, and show the temper of the people.

A person in authority is quoted as saying that Hon. Mr. Churchill wanted to strike the German fleet in July before war had been declared. He said to the Cabinet:

"Strike now.

"I hold the German navy in the hollow of my hand. War is inevitable. Germany waits for no declaration of war. Why should we? The main naval force of Germany is in the North Sea; almost under the guns of our fleet. Let me give the order and by the week-end the German navy will have ceased to exist."

HON. WINSTON CHURCHILL.

But other considerations prevailed, and by 11 to 8 the Cabinet refused. On all but naval grounds it was, no doubt, a wise decision.

There is another Churchill anecdote from an official in a position to know. The First Lord strolled into the Cabinet meeting on a certain morning, still some days before war had been declared, remarking:

"I mobilized the fleet last night. That is a measure of precaution, not of war. But if you disapprove, it can be demobilized."

That is the temper which prevails. The Cabinet assented. And that is the temper to which was due the appearance of the Drake on that Tuesday aftenoon before the declaration, 600 miles out on the Atlantic, shepherding first the Mauretania and then the Carmania. That also was a measure of precaution. It may be said that since Lord Barham, who prepared the way for Trafalgar, England has had no First Lord more apt to take advantage of occasion.

KEENE NOTES

The funeral of Mrs. Lewis, Downer, was held from her late home on the sixth line on Sunday afternoon, Rev. A. K. Edmison conducting the services, after which the body was conveyed to Keene Cemetery where interment was made. The pallbearers were: Messrs. James, John and Mathew Edwards, and Messrs. George, William, and Bert Downer.

Miss Pearl McCann is visiting friends at Hastings.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Bryce who have been spending the summer at their cottage at Foley's Point, Rice Lake, returned to their home at Toronto last Saturday.

Mrs. William Wedlock, Sr., who has been quite ill with appendicitis we are pleased to report very much improved.

Mr. Henry Fletcher is having a kitchen built to his residence on High Street.

Mr. and Mrs. Bert Howson of Peterboro were calling on Keene friends on Tuesday.

Miss Stella Bailey who has been visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Macfarlane has returned to her home at Peterboro.

OBITUARY

ALMA ANDERSON.

A very sad death occurred yesterday afternoon at Nicholls Hospital, when Martha Mary Alma, the youngest daughter of Mr. Lauchlin Anderson, 580 Rogers Street, passed away, after a short illness. The deceased has been of a most cheerful disposition and she will be greatly missed. She was nine years of age.

Mr. Anderson lost another daughter last April.

The funeral will take place tomorrow afternoon to Little Lake Cemetery at 2.30 o'clock.

JOHN C. ASH.

On August 25, 1914, at the residence of his nephew, Dr. Morley Day, Belleville, Rev. John C. Ash passed to his reward after a long life. He was born in Devonshire, England, January 13, 1832. At the tender age of 10 years he was apprenticed to a tailor, and spent 11 years at his trade, working 14 hours a day. He became a local preacher and walked and rode many miles on horseback, preaching in England. He and his brother felt called to Canada to enter the ministry, and came out on a sailing vesesl about 1856, the voyage occupying about 11 weeks. His brother only lived a few years. The late Mr. Ash was ordained at Toronto in 1860 and spent 43 years in Canadian Methodist ministry. Among the circuits he preached at were Newcastle, Adelaide street, Toronto; New Metropolitan, Kingston; Harrowsmith, Arnprior, Campbellford, Rednerville, Demorestville and Adolphustown. For some years he travelled in aid of Victoria university and Albert college. On January 1, 1861, he married Catharine Day, of Harrowsmith, who survives him.

CANADA FOUNDRY TO GET THE CONTRACT

Toronto, Aug. 27. — On the statement of Mr. Frederic Nicholls, president of the Canada Foundry Company, that he could employ 76 Toronto citizens for three and a half months, the Board of Control practically decided to reverse their former decision and award to the Toronto firm the contract for two 24,000,000 gallon turbine pumps, instead of to the Turbine Equipment Company of Trenton, N. J.

Getting After Fair Fakirs

With the fall fair season almost at hand the faking gentry who usually haunt such functions have formed the subject of much consideration. Mr. J. Lockie Wilson, Superintendent of Fall Fairs, has been giving attention to the matter, with a view to having the thing stopped. It is claimed that last year an enormous number of people were robbed of thousands of dollars. Complaints have been laid before the Attorney-General's Department and the suggestion has been made that Magistrates who let fakers off on suspended sentence should have their commissions taken away.

The united agricultural societies passed a motion during the year recommending the dismissal of such Magistrates, and where a fine had been imposed and had not been collected the collection should be made from the Magistrate himself.

LINER SINKS AND ELEVEN DROWN

Seattle-Alaska Steamer Comes to Grief During Fog.

VANCOUVER, B.C., Aug. 27.—The C. P. R. steamer Princess Victoria, which left Vancouver at 11 o'clock Tuesday night, was in collision in a fog early yesterday morning ten miles from Seattle, where she was due at seven o'clock. She struck and sunk the steamer Admiral Sampson, which was bound out from Seattle for Alaska. The Sampson had 56 passengers, besides a crew.

Three passengers and eight members of the crew were drowned.

The passengers lost are: Ezra Byrne, fatally burned by explosion of oil tanks, died just after reaching Seattle hospital; C. W. Bryant, painter, bound for Seward, Alaska; Mrs. Ruby Banbury, wife of George Banbury, clerk for Grand Trunk Pacific Steamship Co., Seattle.

The dead among the crew are: E. S. Moore, captain; D. Cabanas, third cook; W. E. Ricker, first wireless operator; Miss M. Campbell, stewardess; C. Marquette, seaman; A. Sater, watchman; Allen J. Noon, chief engineer; J. B. Williams, mess boy.

Captain Moore could have saved himself, but he declared he would go down with the ship, and he did so.

The Princess Victoria took most of the persons from the Sampson while the boats were still locked. The Princess Victoria did not pull loose until the Sampson was about to go down.

The Victoria, going 18 knots an hour, hit the Sampson abaft of the beam at about a quarter angle. On arrival here she showed a large hole in her bow, it being split back about 20 feet and choked with wreckage from the Sampson.

Captain Moore of the Sampson handled his crew admirably, directing the rescue of the passengers.

The Sampson dived to the bottom bow foremost. Captain Moore ran to the stern and waved his hand as he was carried down with the ship.

Many of the passengers of the Sampson were asleep at the time of the accident and were rescued only partly clad.

TOGOLAND CAPITULATES

Germans in West African Colony Refused Terms

LONDON, Aug. 27. — It was announced last evening that German Togoland had surrendered unconditionally. The allies will enter Kamina to-day.

Premier Asquith, in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon, read a communication from the Commander-in-Chief of the forces in British West Africa, saying that the authorities of Togoland, the German colonial possession on the west coast of Africa, had offered to capitulate on terms. In reply the British officer said that the capitulation must be unconditional.

The report from British West Africa read by the Premier is as follows:

"The German telegraph installation at Carrima has been destroyed by the enemy, and they sent Tuesday afternoon a flag of truce offering, if given all the honors of war, to capitulate, and stipulating specific terms. I replied that they were not in a position to ask terms; that they must surrender unconditionally. I told them that we would always respect private property, and that there would be as little interference as possible with the trade of the country and private interests and firms. I advanced and occupied the crossing of the Riven Amu. The German answer is expected to-night."

Togoland lies between the Gold Coast Colony (British) and Dahomey (French). It is the smallest of the German colonies, with a coast line of 32 miles, area 32,680 square miles, and population of 1,500,000, of whom about 500 are Europeans.

The colony was proclaimed a Protectorate in 1884. It is the smallest of the German colonies, yet the only one existing without state aid. It includes Little Popo and Porto Seguro, and is administered by an Imperial Governor, assisted by a Government Council.

"I had my fortune told the other day," said one woman.

"What a waste of money!" said the other.

"Not at all. I gave the woman 50 cents, and she informed me that I am to inherit $100,000. Wasn't that a good bargain?"—Washington Star.

SOME FAMOUS BATTLES

As the armies engaged are the largest, so this battle will be the greatest in history. The following is a comparison of forces engaged on each side in some famous battles:—

	Men.
Lule Burgar, 1912	400,000
Mukden, 1905	701,000
Sedan, 1870	244,000
Gravelotte, 1870	301,000
Sadowa, 1866	436,000
Waterloo, 1815	217,000
Leipzig, 1813	472,000

Recent battles, with the exception of Lule Burgas, have been protracted. The fighting at Mukden lasted three weeks. It is, however, possible that the general employment of aircraft in the present war will hasten the decision. The leaders on each side are kept informed by their airmen of what the enemy is doing, and thus know where to strike.

MORE LAND IS BOUGHT

Val Cartier Camp to be Increased by 4000 Acres

VALCARTIER CAMP, Que., Aug. 27.—Reports to the effect that the first contingent of Canada's overseas expeditionary force will leave Quebec for the front on Sept. 15 are not confirmed here. No definite information can be obtained from official sources.

Announcement was made by headquarters last night that negotiations for the purchase of 4,000 acres of land situated across the river from the camp site had been successful. The property is known as Pinkney's Mountain and will be used primarily for artillery practice. Most of the artillery will arrive early next week and will be about the last section of the militia to reach the camp. The field hospital has been moved out of its present quarters to accommodate the artillery and the infantry lines have also been extended to make room for incoming troops.

About 3,400 military men arrived in camp during the day, making the total strength in the neighborhood of 20,000. They came principally from the prairie provinces. It is impossible to secure exact figures owing to the great press of work on the transport officers.

NEW CABINET IS FORMED

Viviani Makes up Ministry From all Parties in France

PARIS, Aug. 27. — The French Ministry, headed by Premier Rene Viviani, resigned last night. Another Cabinet was immediately formed.

Premier Viviani visited Elysee Palace at 10.15 o'clock last evening and notified Premier Poincare that the members of the Cabinet had decided to resign collectively. He said that he and his colleagues had come to the conclusion that in the circumstances through which the country was passing the Ministry should have a wider scope and comprise all the best men in all the Republican groups.

THEOPHILE DELCASSE.

President Poincare charged M. Viviani with the task of organizing a new Cabinet, which the Premier accepted.

Among the members of the new Cabinet are several ex-premiers and many members of former Cabinets, including Alexandre Ribot, Gaston Doumergue, Theophile Delcasse, who was formerly Ambassador to Russia, and Alexandre Millerand who is a former Minister of War.

Successful Ugly Women.

Successful women are not always of irreproachable beauty or modeling. Thus the Princess d'Evoli of Louis XV.'s time was one eyed; the slit of Montespan's mouth reached her ears; Mme. de Maintenon was thin, meager, yellowish; La Valliere lame, Gabrielle d'Estrees one armed, Anne Boleyn six fingered.—Westminster Gazette.

ONTARIO GIVES QUARTER MILLION BAGS OF FLOUR

After Long Deliberation at Cabinet Meeting Whitney Government Decides in Favor of a Gift of Flour Which Will Cost $700,000.

TO KEEP FACTORIES AT WORK

TORONTO, Aug. 27. — Sir James Whitney conveyed to the Prime Minister of Canada yesterday Ontario's proposals for aid to the Imperial Government during the present war crisis. A quarter of a million bags of flour means an expenditure of $700,000.

The announcement was made yesterday afternoon following a protracted Cabinet meeting, at which the Toronto representatives in the Legislature were present.

For some days the Provincial Government has been in communication with the Dominion and Imperial authorities as to the best way in which aid could be given by Ontario, and as a result of these deliberations it has been decided that the best aid would be a contribution of flour, and in pursuance of this decision Sir James Whitney has so advised Sir Robert Borden.

Notwithstanding the advance in the price of wheat Ontario is fortunate in being able to secure the flour at the same price as that paid by the Dominion Government recently, which is a striking evidence of the fairness and loyalty of the Canadian millers.

Apart from this feature the conference with the Toronto members was along the same lines as that of two days ago, and further discussion took place with a view to having all factories and industries in the province maintain operations to keep as many men employed as possible and minimize the hardship among the working classes caused by the war. On this point no definite announcement was made, but it is understood substantial progress was made.

HERE'S where we widen the gap between the McLaughlin and all other cars. You—if you think—cannot fail to choose a McLaughlin. You—if you investigate—must admit there is none other like it at the price. You'll be simply captivated by the appearance of the 1915 models—marvels of grace, true exponents of pure streamline beauty. They have all the power and "lug," all the built-in efficiency, of former models—with these important features added:

Some 1915 Improvements

New and improved Delco system of electric starting and lighting;
Non-skid tires on rear wheels;
Speedometer as part of regular equipment;
Tungsten steel valves—valves of proven efficiency;
Carbureter supplied by Stewart-Warner gravity feed vacuum system;

These and many other Improvements that create efficiency—not at prices advanced (as you might reasonably expect) but at prices substantially lower.

And retaining the power, the speed, the dependability of former McLaughlin models—featuring again the powerful Buick "valve-in-head" motor—emphasizing afresh the big fact of "greater power with less fuel."

THE SPORTING WORLD

WAR CLUBS WERE IDLE WHEN RUNS WERE NEEDED

The red-stockinged crew from the reservation finished their final series with the local paid help yesterday afternoon, and as it was the last time the Petes would have an opportunity of acting as hosts for that aggregation, they handed the visitors the game by 4 to 0. A more explanatory word than "handed" was never uttered by Webster. Three of the four runs same in innings when no hits were made by the Brants. In all, they collected but six hits on Tracey's delivery, while the Petes secured ten off Nichell. It was the difference in the error totals that tells the tale.

As a general rule the team works well behind Tracey, but yesterday they went to the bad entirely. Fox was the chief offender, having three juicy ones to his credit. Nichell was hit hard at times, and in fact there were a couple of men on in almost every frame, but some how or other the lanky boy would get out of the hole. In all, Peterboro had eleven men left on the paths.

First Innings

BRANTFORD — Long went safe on Fox's error. Nasher hit to the same player, who threw wide to second, the runners going to third and second. Dudley fouled out to Kelly, but Cosma lifted to Blount, scoring Long. Kelly threw wide to third and Nasher came home. Roth filed to Dolan. — Two runs, no hits, three errors.

PETERBORO — Blount grounded to Roth, Welsh filed to Fried, Dolan singled to left, and stole second, but was left stranded when Rooney fanned. — No runs, one hit, no errors.

Second Innings.

BRANTFORD — Burrill skied to Byrne. Fried filed to Blount, and Lamond went out in a similar manner. — No runs, hits, nor errors.

PETERBORO — Byrne was safe when Fried fumbled his grounder. King missed two and had another called on him. Fox raised to right. Kelly singled and Byrne went to third when Roth missed a throw from Burrill. Tracey filed to Nasher. — No runs, one hit, two errors.

Third Innings.

BRANTFORD — Nichell scratched a hit over short. Long sacrificed, Tracey to Dolan. Nasher popped to Fox, and the pitcher was left stranded when Dudley went out, Tracey to Dolan.—No runs, one hit, no errors.

PETERBORO — Blount filed to Long. Welsh grounded to Fried, and Dolan hit to the same player. — No runs, hits, nor errors.

Fourth Innings.

BRANTFORD — Cosma got his first hit of the series when he dropped a Texas leaguer over second. Roth sacrificed him to second. Burrill grounded to Fox, Cosma going to third on the play. Fried grounded to Dolan. — No runs, one hit, no errors.

PETERBORO — Rooney filed to Burrill. Byrne singled to right. King singled to left and took second on an unsuccessful attempt to get Byrne at third. Fox fanned, and Kelly skied to Roth. — No runs, two hits, no errors.

Fifth Innings.

BRANTFORD — Lamond filed to Dolan. Nichell grounded to King, and Long went the same. — No runs, hits, nor errors.

PETERBORO — Tracey opened with a single. Blount filed to Long. Welsh hit through short. Dolan poled a long hit to left, but Tracey was out attempting to come home on it. Welsh and Dolan worked the double steal, but Rooney died on a foul to Lamond. — No runs, three hits, no errors.

Sixth Innings.

BRANTFORD — Nasher connected with a slow one for a single, and went to third on Dudley's hit to centre. The latter took second on Cosma's death at first, Fox to Dolan. Roth lifted to Blount, who threw and got Nasher at the plate. — No runs, two hits, no errors.

PETERBORO — Byrne filed to Lamond. King grounded to short, and Fox flew out to Long. — No runs, hits, nor errors.

Seventh Innings.

BRANTFORD — Burrill singled past Byrne, and Fried sacrificed, Tracey to Dolan. Lamond singled to centre and Burrill scored. Lamond went out, Kelly to King, and Nichell grounded to Tracey. — One run, two hits, no errors.

PETERBORO — Kelly filed to Fried. Tracey singled to left. Blount lifted to Fried. Welsh walked, but Dolan raised to Cosma. — No runs, one hit, no errors.

Eighth Innings.

BRANTFORD—Long was safe on Fox's bad throw to first. Nasher was hit. Dudley dropped a sacrifice hit, and all went safe. Cosma lifted to Blount, and Long scored. but Nasher was caught going to third. Roth grounded to King. — One run, no hits, one error.

PETERBORO — Rooney singled, and Byrne hit to short, who threw to second a little late to get Rooney. King filed to Cosma, but Fox hit safe, filling the bases. Kelly hit into a double, Fried to Nasher to Dudley. —No runs, two hits, no errors.

Ninth Innings.

BRANTFORD — Burrill grounded to Fox. Fried filed to Blount. Lamond filed to Fox. — No runs, no hits, no errors.

COMMENT

As You Like It

London dropped a double header to the Senators yesterday and as a result take second place.

That's a grand old fight in the National League but many wise guys still pick McGraw to play for the extra money. Fans in little old New York are crying for Tilly Shafer and incidentally he would come in mighty handy covering the difficult corner. Losing Shafer and Herzog cut too big a hole in the infield and the fact that Larry Doyle has fallen does not help John J. in his effort to build up another machine.

At this stage of the game last year Shafer was batting above .300 fielding wonderfully, scoring and driving in runs. Stock, who is now playing third for the Giants, is a good average player, but Shafer was a star. Not quite in the Cobb class, he could still tip victory for his club.

McGraw's system kept Shafer out of the Giant line-up this year. It is not a system for top-notchers. The New York leader insists on doing all the thinking for his club, and great players are great players because, in addition to mechanical ability, they can do their own thinking.

Encountering a slump while on the road to a fourth straight pennant is not a new experience to John McGraw. As a player with the champion Orioles in 1894, '95 and '96, McGraw first bucked the jinx that has curbed the fourth consecutive pennant idea in big league baseball. In August of 1897 "Ned" Hanlon, manager of the Orioles, had completed arrangements for a tour of triumph in the fall of the Baltimore Orioles, four time winners of the National League pennant and the greatest galaxy of playing stars ever assembled. But McGraw, Jennings, Keeler, Kelley, Robinson and all the other actives in that wonderful team were nosed out in the closing weeks of the season. It was a Boston team, led by Frank G. Selee, that first put the jinx on McGraw, and another collection of athletes from the Athens of America is most seriously considered as likely to thwart McGraw and his fourth pennant ambitions of 1914.

The Boston Nationals of 1891, '92 and '93 had won pennants and were on their way to a fourth when the Orioles stepped in and broke the chain of victories in much the same manner that the "Beaneaters" did in 1897. In his present plight John McGraw has a wealth of recollections of the part Boston teams of the past have had in curbing pennant aspirations, but it is sixteen years since a Boston National league club figured as a championship winner and until John McGraw found that George Stallings had put Boston on the baseball map again the Giants' leader had allowed memories of Boston as a pennant factor to rest peacefully.

While the Giants and Cards were splitting a double header yesterday Hank O'Day's tribe snatched a game from the Boston Braves. In the last game at St. Louis, Mathewson came back to form and secured a shutout. He allowed the Cardinals but two hits. This lessens the gap between the teams of the first division. The four teams' standing is as follows :—

	Won.	Lost.	P.C.
New York	60	49	.550
Boston	60	50	.545
St. Louis	63	54	.538
Chicago	60	54	.526

Doc Reisling and his London clan open a three game series with the Petes this afternoon and fully intend to take two if not all the games from the locals. At that there are many fans in the city who are pulling for the husky doctor and his assistants and there is liable to be more rooting for the visitors this series than there will be for the home aggregation.

The Londoners dropped a double header to the Senators yesterday and in speaking of the fall this morning they all appear to blame the umps. Lush and Freeman were doing the umpirical duties and we agree that Lush is rank and believe that it is possible for Buck to have an off day. Beebe and Hammond twirled the double bill, hence they will face Steiger, Reisling and Heck against the Blountmen. Belting, Creswell and Sterling will in all probability work the three days for the Petes.

Manager Reisling changed his batting order this morning and will give it a tryout this afternoon. He is exerting every possible means to cop the rag and it must be of some assistance to know that every other team except the Petes and the Senators themselves are with him in his efforts. The Blountmen are pulling hard for Shag to win his third championship. Today's game was called at 3, tomorrow's will be at 3.45 and Saturday's at three.

Why He Drowned.

Describing the stringent police regulations of Berlin, a citizen of that city by way of illustration told the following story:

"Schmidt and Krauss met one morning in the park.

"'Have you heard,' says Schmidt, 'the sad news about Muller?'

"'No, says Krauss. 'What is it?'

"'Well, poor Muller went boating on the river yesterday. The boat capsized, and he was drowned. The water was ten feet deep.'

"'But couldn't he swim?'

"'Swim? Don't you know that all persons are strictly forbidden by the police to swim in the river?'"

The Blue Sky.

The blue sky which reveals itself as the hemispherical vault of the firmament in the absence of clouds is the far depths of the air sending back to the observer some part of the solar illumination which they receive. The light thus returned to the eye is "blue" simply because the particles of the air are of such exceedingly diminutive size that they can effectively deal with only the smallest of the luminous vibrations. There are a few faint interminglings of the other colored rays in the blue of the sky, but they are in such trifling quantity that the blue swallows them up.

CUTTING DOWN HOCKEY SALARIES

Montreal, Aug. 27.—At a every member of the Wanderer Hockey Club who figured as a regular on the team a year ago has received a letter from President Lichtenhein, advising him that there will be a reduction in salaries next winter. The latter points out the fact that last season was a losing one for the club, and that expenses must be reduced.

The letter suggests to the players that if they are dissatisfied with the cut that the management of the clubs will pool the receipts and divide seventy-five per cent. among the players after the expenses have been paid, while the other twenty-five per cent. will go to the club owners. The salary offered to one and all next season is $600, which is the highest amount that will be paid. This would mean a cut of $400 to some players and $200 to others, while the substitutes will receive about the same as a year ago, being paid a stated figure for each game they participate in. A meeting of the club will be called by the president at an early date to discuss the salary question and to accept suggestions from the players. The greatest items of expense apart from the salary list are as follows :—Four trips to Toronto, $1,200 ; two trips to Ottawa, $300 ; two trips to Quebec, $350 ; trainers' salaries, $500; accident insurance, $400 ; league dues, $750 ; doctors' bills, $375 ; passes, $280.

WOMEN, THE REAL HEROES OF WAR

One of my old professors, says a writer in a woman's periodical, was a war veteran. He was fond of telling of the exciting days of "the war." He told with a sort of grim delight of men who had fallen before his own gun.

"My country called me, and I offered my life," was his boast.

"But was your life your own to offer ?" I once asked.

"You had a wife and two little babies when your country called you. What did your wife do while you were having these exciting times 'at the front ?' "

I never learned what his wife did, however. He always spluttered to some other subject.

Once upon a time any cry of war would have brought out thousands of men anxious to "die for their country.' But sentiment has changed materially in the last twenty years. As woman's influence grows, the ban on killing grows. For war is not only what Sherman said it was for men but even more so for women and children.

It isn't the man who dies for his country who has the hardest and most sorrowful lot; nor is he the one who should be most lauded for what he does.

It's the woman who stays behind, who swallows her tears and puts her shoulder to the wheel in order that there may be bread and clothing and respectability for the left-behinds; in order that the labor and routine that make the foundation of the nation may continue—it's the women who live for their country who should be lauded.

When there is just cause for fighting, the patriot will fight for his country and his womenfolk will back him up. But the fact is that most men have gone to war because they were infected with war hysteria and many went because they wanted to escape the routine of a peaceful life.

Women are seldom consulted in matters of warfare. Their men believe they have all the rights. But it would be only just to admit women to the war cabinet of every nation, to consult them in councils of war, for it is upon the women chiefly that the burdens of war fall, and while men are fighting for the honor of a nation the women are upholding the honor of that which makes a nation—the home.

CREATORE'S BAND

Unique Personality Gives new Flavor to Exhibition Music

Delightful as have been the band concerts of former years to countless thousands of music lovers on the plaza at the Canadian National Exhibition, an even more keen enjoyment is assured this year when the famous Creatore makes his bow in afternoon and evening engagements. The taste of Exhibition visitors has been elevated to a high plane by the magnificent Army bands that have been secured from Britain, but, apart from all comparisons, at least a new sensation is promised from the unique personality of Guiseppe Creatore himself. He is pronounced the most picturesque of all conductors, being of the fiery, volatile temperament that compels a sympathetic response from the men under his baton. His control is nothing short of magnetic, and with over two score musicians of first rank at his command, the result is an incomparably fine piece of orchestration. His engagement will be welcomed as an assurance of the maintenance of the high standard in band music that has been attained by the Exhibition management, and given popular endorsation in such unqualified measure.

MANY COME FROM UNITED STATES

Return to Canada to Enlist for the War

Ottawa, Aug. 27.—Ten per cent. of the overseas contingent at Valcartier is composed of Canadians lately resident in the United States who have returned to Canada to enlist. This is the estimate of the Minister of Militia. Sixty thousand Americans have applied to the Department of Militia offering their services in an expeditionary force. They have written saying that the fight is a fight for freedom and for democratic institutions, and they want to be in it. One American colonel offers a full regiment of a thousand men.

Col. Hughes has been compelled to decline these offers. He has done so with regret. At the same time the war spirit was brought to Canada as volunteers many veterans of the Spanish-American War, and these have found their way into the army division now mobilizing. From Pancho Villa's army in Mexico comes a skilled aviator, who was one of Villa's staff officers in the Mexican war. This man is British and well connected. He spent his last dollars in journeying from Mexico to Ottawa via Vancouver, and reached here destitute.

The militia authorities are daily in receipt of offers of all sorts. H. H. Stevens, M.P., of Vancouver, and 15 others have offered their saddle horses for the use of the officers of the Vancouver corps. Mr. Stevens' horse is a hunter valued at $500.

The Federation of Railway Employes in Mexico has 150,000 members.

German System Of Espionage

In view of reported cases of German espionage in Canada, and of the excitement produced in various centres throughout the Dominion by the movements of supposed spies, it is interesting to know something of the scale upon which the German system of espionage is known to be organized in the theatre of war of Europe, which is of course the very heart centre of the system.

At the start it is well to recall the fact that the excellence of the German Intelligence system, which contributed so powerfully towards the German success in the Franco-German War of 1870, was the result of an elaborate spy system, carefully organized within the borders of France during peace time.

After the conclusion of the 1866 campaign against Austria, Stieber, Minister of Police in Prussia, who was to Bismark and Von Moltke what Fouche was to Napoleon, was sent on a secret mission to France. His aim and object was the organization within the bounderies of France of a spy system preparatory to the pending war. Stieber, in all, between 1866 and 1869 made four journeys through the length and breadth of France, by the end of which time, aided by very able assistants, he accomplished far reaching results.

He strewed France with 20,000 German spies, and organized a complete espionage system in the parts of France which covered the possible theatre of war. These spies were organized territorially under four inspectors, having headquarters at Brussels, Lausanne, Geneva and Berlin, and responsible to two Lieutenants of Police, who in turn reported to Stieber.

A peculiar feature of the system instituted by Stieber at that time, and still maintained, were the "fixed posts." The ordinary idea of a spy is one who is sent to travel in a foreign country in some disguise, and who returns to his own country with information thus acquired. But this travelling spy suffers very great disadvantages. Like every traveller in a foreign country, without any raison d'etre for being there, he is the object of suspicion. He has no time to get thoroughly into touch with useful channels of information.

He is closely watched, and directly he begins making enquiries as to this, that and the other, the previous suspicions become certainties, and his mission results in failure.

But the spy in the "fixed post" is on an entirely different foting. He attracts no attention, since he lives as an inhabitant of the place he is, and moreover, plies some trade, which gives him a very good reason for being there.

Under the cover of this trade he can make enquiries without incurring the suspicion of the authorities and has ample time to get into touch with anyone whom he thinks capable of giving him useful information.

The German spies in France, were, and still doubtless are, of all grades and profession, and of both sexes, including farmers, market gardeners, agricultural laborers, vine growers, railway porters, shop keepers, commercial travellers, (a very useful and frequent disguise) waiters and waitresses in cafes, hotels and canteens, newspaper reporters, telegraph operators, female domestics, etc.

Among other duties assigned to the director of the German Spy Service during the war of 1870 were the following :—

(a) Information in regard to the the situation, strength and movements of each group of the hostile army.

(b) In regard to the age, character and reputation of all hostile commanders.

(c) In regard to what was going on, and the state of public feeling in the districts the German Army was about to traverse and the resources of those districts.

(d) To procure in each of these regions persons capable of furnishing useful information.

It is known that in spite of French vigilance the Germans have maintained and perhaps elaborated the espionage system established that in 1890 Stieber, still at that date Minister of Police in Germany, was sent through France and subsequently established a branch of the German Secret Police to deal with "political actions." This term it was explained included the destruction of the stragetical railways in France on the outbreak of war, so that the French mobiliation might be retarded. But this part of the scheme miscarried, thanks to the active viligance of the French Intelligence Agents.

In a book entitled "The German Spy System in France" translated from the French of Paul Sanoir and published recently in London, from which most of the facts herein contained are taken, it is explained that German espionage in France interests itself in everything and everybody possessing in any capacity a particle of authority or celebrity. A specialty is made of the characters, habits, capacities, etc., of individual officers of the French Army ; but every species of information that can be of any use in a military or political sense comes under the notice of the German spies.

Information as to telegraphs, telephones, railways, highways, bridges, culverts, forges, forage, provision and supplies, shipping, hospitals, barracks, accommodation, water supplies, discontented people, and citiens susceptible of monetary temptation is particularly sought.

According to Mr. Sanoir, there are at present some 15,000 spies in "fixed posts" in France.

How perfect a spy system has been introduced by the Germans into Canada is not stated, but it is known that there have been German spies in Canada within the past five years, and that some of them have been identified and tracked by the military and police authorities.

For obvious reasons the Canadian military and civil authorities are silent as to what is known officially about German spies and espionage in Canada; but that there are agents of the hostile powers in Canada ready to forward every scrap of important news bearing upon Canada's participation in the present war is admitted.

Owing to the military censorship imposed upon the cable and wireless telegraph services, it is difficult for the German agents in Canada to get their reports across the Atlantic Ocean promptly ; but in the absence of a censorship over the land wires and mails, communication of a sort is open through the mails, to neutral countries.

Meanwhile patriotic Canadians who are the repositories of information which might be useful in any war to the enemies of the Empire will do well to keep such information to themselves and take every precaution to prevent it from obtaining general circulation or from reaching the ears of possible agents of the German Intelligence Service.

HELPS FOR THE HOME.

A faded straw hat may be cleaned with a paste made of powdered sulphur and lemon juice. Dry it thoroughly in the sunshine, then brush out the powder.

Every housekeeper should keep a roll of parchment paper on hand. It can be used for at least a dozen purposes, from cleaning fish to hulling strawberries.

A dainty little article for the hand bag is a little book of powder papers covered with a pretty bit of ribbon, folded back to form a pocket so that the leaves can be slipped into it.

To get rid of the smell of tobacco smoke put a lump of crystal ammonia into a jar and add a few drops of oil of lavender. Pour a little boiling water over it and let the jar stand in the room.

COAT COLLARS.

Most of Them Are Attached to Little Chemisettes.

No coat is without its bit of white turning over at the collar. Most of these becoming white coat collars are attached to chemisettes, which are donned under the blouse of silk, lace or chiffon, or the collar may be part of a tub silk or handkerchief linen blouse worn under the coat.

Sheer white organdie is the popular collar material, and the smartest collars are cut double, seamed at the edge and without a hem.

If a single layer of organdie is used the hem is very narrow and is set in with hand stitches or a line of fine hemstitching.

Lace and embroidery collars are not as smart as these sheer organdie collars, though occasionally collars of very fine machine embroidery, mitered at the corners, are seen.

REVERSES FOR FRENCH FREE ROAD TO PARIS

Have Been Driven Back Twenty Miles Below Their Line of Frontier Fortresses --- No Serious Obstacle Between German Main Advance and Paris

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 28.—From a message sent out 24 hours ago by the French embassy, showing fighting on the line between Cambrai and Lecateau, it is apparent that the French have been driven back past their line of frontier fortresses to a point 20 miles behind that line. There is no longer any serious fortified obstacle between the German main advance and Paris.

Under the circumstances it is not surprising that the French ministry has resigned and reconstitued itself a committee of public safety. Meanwhile, as if a siege of Paris was now looming foremost in their minds, their first step has been to appoint a general in supreme command of Paris and its troops.

London, Aug. 28. — Telegraphing from Ostend, the correspondent of the Chronicle icle says: "Germans on entering Tournai, Belgium, took the burgomaster and threatened to kill him and other town officials if $400,000 demanded from the town was not forthcoming in two hours.

The inhabitants were able to save the life of the burgomaster.

London, Aug. 28. — A despatch to Reuter's Telegraph Co. from Paris gives an additional war office communication, which says : "After the victory of the Russians, the German troops in East Prussia evacuated the district of Masurenland (southern East Prussia). The Russians sustained no check in this very difficult country and yesterday occupied its western outlets. It is confirmed that they captured 100 guns from the enemy.

R. M. DENNISTOUN, K.C., IN COMMAND OF B. SQUADRON OF THE FORT GARRY HORSE

SON WILL SERVE UNDER HIM

(Winnipeg Evening Ttlegram.)

Recruiting is actively proceeding for the Fort Garry Horse, who expect to go to Val Cartier camp on Thursday That was the information given the men of the local squadrons when on parade last night by Lieut.-Col. Patterson. The troops at Selkirk, Stonewall, Gunton and Queen's Valley, who were training at Sewell camp, have been called to headquarters. The result of the recruiting so far indicates that no difficulty will be experienced in increasing the strength of the regiment to 500 men.

The order to the Fort Garry suggests that the mounted troops of the west will be formed into a battalion of riflemen when all the contingents reach the camp.

R. M. Dennistoun, K.C., the eminent Winnipeg lawyer, has taken command of B squadron, and his son, James, who has just graduated from the military college at Kingston, Ont., will serve as an officer under his father. Another son, John, who is a member of the King Edward Horse, composed of graduates of Cambridge university, has got his transfer to enable him to become an officer of C squadron.

Captain Dennistoun makes a strong appeal for recruits and asks those who were disappointed in not being able to get with other regiments, to join the Fort Garry Horse. He especially calls upon lawyers and law students of the city and province to help in recruiting the regiment to the quota asked for.

R. M. DENNISTOUN, K.C.,

Who is in command of B Squadron, Fort Garry Horse, and left Winnipeg yesterday for Val Cartier. He was senior member of the legal firm of Dennistoun, Peck & Kerr before leaving Peterboro in 1907.

AUSTRIAN DESTROYER IS SUNK

Enemy's Boat Went Down After Ten Minutes Fight

SENTRY SHOT AND KILLED

Was on Duty at Soulanges Canal

Montreal, Aug. 28.—Private Betts, of the Fifth Royal Highlanders, was shot and killed at Soulanges this morning, according to advices reaching military headquarters here. Since the outbreak of the war a guard has been placed over the canal at Soulanges.

Betts was on sentry duty at Soulanges and was shot through the eye and killed instantly. An inquest was opened this morning, but was adjourned, as no details of the shooting are so far available.

The killing of Betts comes as the culmination of a number of attacks that have been made on sentries posted along the canal at Soulanges during which shots have been repeatedly fired at them.

Betts was 16 years old and resided in Montreal.

Aged Mother Sees Seven Sons March Off to War For England!

THE SEVEN SONS OF MRS. JAMES COPPARD IN THEIR UNIFORMS AS BRITISH TERRITORIALS.

London, Aug. 28. — Mrs. James Coppard, a widow, aged 61 years, has given her seven stalwart sons to England !

She saw them march off shoulder to shoulder in the same company. The law of the averages says that at least one of them must die and perhaps two others be fearfully wounded.

In three seconds a machine gun could obliterate from the face of the earth the brood that she spent thirty-five years in rearing.

Yet she was the proudest woman in all England when the West Kent "D" Territorials passed her on their way to the mobilization, even though their passing spelled poverty and deprivation for her in her declining years. The four younger ones were her only support.

The sons range from Wilfred, of 17, to Frederick, 34. The others are Harold, 18 ; Jack, 21 ; Leonard, 24 ; Percy, 29, and Herbert, 32. The two eldest are sergeants and the third eldest a corporal.

"She keeps up heart wonderfully," declared her only daughter, "but I know she feels their absence terribly. She smiles so bravely through it all.

"Sometimes when she thinks I am not looking I see her face grow sad. Then she sees me looking and says, "O, I am so proud to think that all my boys are helping the old country. Won't I be pleased when they come back !'

"Then she adds, "You and I will just have to get along as best we can.' "

Her late husband was a volunteer.

"Wouldn't he have been proud to see them all march off !" she said to her daughter.

Her case has been brought to the attention of wealthy people and the mother who would give seven sons to her country will doubtless be well cared for during their absence.

British Marines Now in Control of Ostend

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 28.—British marines in force are now in control of Ostend, says a despatch to the Times. They continued landing all day yesterday, and several quick firers were brought ashore early to-day. The men present a splendid appearance and all are eager for a speedy meeting with the enemy.

London, Aug. 82.—A despatch to the Times from Boulogne says it is asserted that German troops, presumably cavalry, broke through the French lines near Arras, in the province of Pas de Calais. The French moved up with rapidity, it is declared, and have the situation well in hand. The despatch says the allied troops are being swiftly arranged to deal with any further attempt to break through the line between Dunkirk and Lille.

Attributes Disaster in Lorraine to Cowardice

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 28.—Writing to the Matin on August 24, a copy of which paper has just reached London, Senator Gervais, representing the Seine district, attributes the French disaster in Lorraine to the cowardice of the Fifteenth army corps. They fled before the enemy, he writes, and compelled a retreat all along the line, thus losing the fruits of carefully prepared strategy and nullifying the French advance beyond the Seille river on the Delme and Chateau Salins.

WAR OFFICE ASKS CANADA FOR COMMUNICATION LINE

Request That Dominion Government Add to Its Contingent a Complete Corps For the Purpose of Guarding Line to Its Base Indicates That Men Will Act as Separate Unit at Front.

OTTAWA, Aug. 28.—The Minister of Militia, Col. Hughes, announced last night that the War Office bad asked that Canada send with its expeditionary force a complete line of communication, consisting of a supply column, transport hospital, reserves, etc. These additional units will aggregate 1,678 men, 86 nurses, 378 horses, 166 motor trucks and 155 transport wagons.

The request for a line of communication is taken to mean that Canada's army division will go to the front as a unit, although no definite word has as yet been received from the War Office in regard to this. It is believed at Militia Headquarters here that while there is a likelihood of the Canadian force being temporarily disintegrated on arrival in England, and brigaded with various sections of the British regulars, pending a few months' training and experience with the trained veterans under active service conditions, the whole army division will be later brought together and serve under one command. This will, however, depend entirely on the decision of the War Office on the arrival of the force in England.

The line of communication which will be sent will consist of one supply column of 245 officers and men, one reserve park of artillery of 271 officers and men, 358 horses and 155 wagons, one ammunition park of 451 officers and men, two general hospitals with 328 officers and men and 86 nurses, two stationary hospitals with 188 officers and men, one clearing hospital with 85 officers and men, one railway supply detachment with 63 officers and men, and two depot units of supply with 28 men.

Col. Hughes stated last night that there will be more than 30,000 men assembled at Valcartier. The men who are not selected to go with the first contingent will be kept as a nucleus of a second contingent and used ror patrol and guard work in Canada. The camp at Valcartier will be continued until the war is over and used as a mobilizing and training centre. Permanent structures, roads, etc., are to be built this fall.

In the continued stream of offers to serve coming in from the United States was an offer yesterday from a prominent American to raise a body of 7,000 experienced ditchers.

SCHOOL RE-OPENING

Schools reopen on Tuesday, Sept. 1st. It is important that pupils be present at the opening as promotions are then made and the classes are organized.

Parents are reminded that primary pupils starting to attend the Public Schools in September are not admitted after the end of the second week of school as all classes must then be fully organized.

KAISER'S TROOPS ARE VICTORIOUS SAYS BERLIN

Berlin, Aug. 28.—Headquarters has issued an official report declaring that the western enemy everywhere has been defeated and is in full retreat, after nine days' fighting. General Von Kluk, who defeated the English army at Maubeuge, renewed the attack to-day and threatened to surround it. Generals Von Buelow and Von Hansen completely defeated the Franco-Belgian forces of about eight corps, between Sambre and Namur and the Meuse, in several days' battles, and are now pursuing them to the eastward of Maubeuge.

The attack on Maubeauge was opened by Grand Duke Albrecht of Wuerttemburg, who defeated and pursued the enemy across the Semois and Meuse. The German crown prince is advancing toward the Meuse, and the Crown Prince of Bavaria repulsed the attack from Nancy and the south.

Gen. Von Peeringen continues his pursuit southward through Vosges. Four Belgian divisions attacking Tuesday and Wednesday from Antwerp have been repulsed, losing guns and many prisoners. The Belgian population generally participated in the fighting, necessitating severe repressive measures. A corps of the last reserves have been called out to guard communications.

Did not Know It Was Loaded

Canadian Press Despatch.

Ottawa, August 28. — Horace Goodwin, employed at Wards Mine, near the village of St. Pierre Dewakefield, Ottawa County, shot and instantly killed a fellow employee, George Helmer, at the boarding house near the mine last night. Goodwin was endeavoring to get Helmer who was intoxicated to his bed when the latter showed fight. Goodwin picked up a rifle which he thought unloaded and pointing it at Helmer pulled the trigger.

Goodwin surrendered to the authorities immediately.

BRITISH INFLICT VERY HEAVY LOSS ON THE GERMANS

Were Exposed to Attack of Five German Army Corps --- Casualties Premier Asquith Announces Were Very Heavy

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 28.—Premier Asquith announced in the House of Commons to-day that British troops in Wednesday's fighting were exposed to the attack of five German army corps.

The losses on both sides, he said, were great.

"We have heard from Field Marshall Sir John French that in the fighting which took place between his army and the enemy on Wednesday, Aug. 26, and which appears from French official reports to have been in the neighborhood of Cambrai and Lecateau, our troops were exposed to an attack of five German army corps, two divisions of cavalry and reserve corps of cavalry and a second division.

"Our second corps in the fourth division, bore the brunt of the cavalry attack, while our first army corps was attacked on the right and inflicted very heavy loss on the enemy.

"I regret to say our casualties were heavy, but the exact numbers are not yet known. The behavior of our troops was in all respects admirable."

GERMANS MAKE LITTLE ATTEMPT TO STEM THE RUSSIAN ADVANCE

It is Officially Stated in St. Petersburg That an Attack on the German Capital is Anticipated in Three Weeks—Russia Has Now Four Armies of Two Millian Men Each.

LONDON, Aug. 28. — The Roi Tribuna's correspondent at St. Petersburg says that the Russians are now operating in western Prussia and are marching on Danzig in immense numbers. The population is in flight. It is stated that there is a panic in Berlin.

The possibility of an attack on Berlin by the Russian army was officially admitted in St. Petersburg. Within three weeks was given as the probable time, and it was declared that Russia now has more than 8,000,000 men under arms, divided into armies of about 2,000,000 each.

The arrangement for feeding this huge body of men, the Russian commissariat asserts, have been completed, and there will be no chance of hardship from the lack of food or supplies. The armies are being sent into the field from the inland mobilization centres to operate one behind the other, the armies in the rear filling up the gaps of those in the front after each battle.

It is declared here that with this huge force it will not be necessary to take German forts by storm. Instead the Russians will probably attempt to isolate each of them and then keep them bottled up to prevent any flank movement. The main Russian advance, it is expected, will approach Posen from the south, crossing the south bend of the Warta river some miles from the Russian frontier.

Following the victory of the Russians the German troops in eastern Prussia evacuated the region of Mazuron. The Russian advance has not suffered any reverse in that section. Difficulties are presented thereabout by the River Terrein, the western outlets of which the Czar's troops occupied yesterday. The report that the Russians had captured 100 cannon from the enemy has been confirmed.

The Russian offensive movement in Galicia is now following its normal course until checked, in the region south and southwest of Tarnapol.

The southern army or left wing of the invading Russian army is now forcing its way through the Austrian Province of Galicia and has already occupied a wide tract of territory. The objective point, for the present at least is the important town of Lemberg.

The northern Russian army, forming the right wing, is invading eastern Prussia. This is the force that has fought a number of battles with the Germans and occupied important railway centres.

The Russian forces operating in the Austrian Province of Galicia have advanced on a widely flung front and the cavalry is engaged in clearing the country before the approach of the army.

The Austrian troops have failed seriously to oppose this sweeping Russian advance, which has been achieving a series of successes at small cost in casualties.

The Germans in eastern Prussia are still hastily retiring before the Czar's troops. The Russians have already begun to cause the Germans to withdraw from the southwest of Poland.

Regarding the approach of the Russian main army, before which the cavalry are reported to be clearing a path, little has been heard until now. This is known as the army of the centre. It is believed to be heading for Posen. Further, it is supposed that this main army, which is advancing with marked rapidity, has had considerable to do with the German retreat all through eastern Prussia. The Russian general staff is significantly silent as to the operations of this main army. On Aug. 26 the Russian army is reported to have occupied Tilsit, Nordenburg, Bischofsburg, Sensburg and the station of Rothfliess on the main railway from Russia to the fortress of Thorn.

Successful Advance Continues.

NEW YORK, Aug. 28.—The military attache of the Russian embassy yesterday issued from the Russian consulate here the following statement on the operations of the Russian army:

"The Russian advance in eastern Prussia continues successfully. On Aug. 26 the Russian army occupied Tilsit, Nordenburg, Bischoftsburg, Sensburg and the station of Rothfliess on the main railway line from Russia to the fortress of Thorn.

"In Galicia the Austrian rear guards have been driven behind the River Lipa, affluent of the Dneister."

WOMAN TOLD MANY STORIES

Was Arrested by Sentry at Val Cartier Camp

Val Cartier, Aug. 28.—Masquerading in a soldier's uniform, a woman aged about 30 years, who claims to come from Boston, was arrested by a sentry near camp headquarters at 11 o'clock last night. She told many stories to the officers, all of which differed. She stated that she had hired the uniform from a costumer and came to Val Cartier on a wager with some friends. Later she asserted that she had borrowed the uniform from a private, her intention being to write a series of articles on the camp for an American magazine. She said she had accomplished a similar feat at various other camps on the continent. She may be handed over to the provincial police.

SILENCE

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 28. — The Chronicle, commenting to-day on the "war" progress, says : "Since the great disaster which befell the allies in Belgium, a silence deeper than ever has been imposed by censorship."

London, Aug. 28. — A despatch from Rome says a despatch received there from Vienna states Austria has declared war on Belgium.

Few men are so impervious to personal remarks as the bow-legged man who insists upon wearing knickerbockers.

OUR CAUSE PROSPERING.

THE LATEST despatches at hand, viewed in the light of the whole campaign, should occasion confidence throughout the Empire. The main force of the Germans has been checked in Belgium, with serious losses, and every day's delay there brings the Russians nearer Berlin. Where a battle front extends over two hundred miles it is impossible to maintain its integrity either for advance or retreat, and successes one place are to be balanced with reverses in other places. While the British have suffered a loss of 2,000 out of an army of 150,000 men, they have acquitted themselves gallantly, and, what is of more importance, the line of defence of the allies still remains intact. With a series of offensive movements, with this line of defence to fall back on, the German advance should be effectively stopped, and should slowly but surely vitiate its strength.

AMERICAN SENTIMENT AND THE WAR.

THE REVIEW has received a copy of a publication entitled "The Fatherland," published in New York and designed to create, in the United States, a favorable sentiment towards Germany in the European war. It claims to ask only fair play to Germany, its first number being published since war was declared. Obviously, it asks more than fair play, since it was started after the public sentiment of the world divided itself between the opposing forces. Had it asked support of Germany in the position that country took before a resort to arms was made, it would have a better claim to fairness. It is too late now to ask fair play for Germany's position. People are either for or against her.

The American people, the Canadian people, all the world, in fact, know pretty well the course of events that precipitated this cataclysmic strife. Germany's part was, from the first, that of unbending hostility towards the allies. Had Germany showed the least attitude to compromise, had she been at all sincere in her protestations for peace, she would not have pushed her arguments to such a fissiparous extreme. This fact is well known, and on this fact American sentiment condemns the Kaiser and the political system of Germany, but not Germany in totum, because it hopes for the freedom of the German people.

Realizing how strong was the current of public opinion against Germany in the United States, some German sympathizers have started this paper, called "The Fatherland," to turn, if possible, that current of sentiment into a channel of their own making. They do it under a cloak of asking for fair play. There was one article in this paper that approached fair play, but the whole sentiment of the paper is so decidedly German, and so cleverly misleading in a prevarication of facts, that it ought to be excluded at once from the mails, because people of limited education or unthinking persons could be easily misled by failing to perceive the partizan and untruthful character of its articles. It is doubly dangerous because some distinguished Germans in the United States, citizens of that country, are Germans first and throw the weight of their influence in favor of a military despotism as hostile to democracy as it is strong in military power. Among these is Professor Hugo Muensterberg.

The paper tries to stir up hostility to the allies by disquisitions on Russian bureaucracy and English history in regard to the United States. Here is an example of the way it misrepresents facts. It says England officially recognized the Southern States in the Civil War. This is not true, for, while many English people sympathised with the Southern States, the nearest approach to recognition was an unfortunate speech of Gladstone at an informal dinner, when he said the Southern people had done more than raise an army, they had made a nation. But this speech of Gladstone was merely a passing reference on current events of that time, and had no official sanction, hence England did not officially recognize the rebellious American States. To do so would require a formal statement by the British Government. This example is but one of the cleverly arranged prevarications in "The Fatherland," but it is enough to constitute good reason for muzzling its circulation, if not in the United States, certainly in Canada.

The British Empire, like the United States, is opposed, not so much to the German people, as to the military German class. The allies are fighting a political system in Germany that thrives only by war, that, dominated by a man misled by an insane divine right illusion, would make the German Kaiser the demiurgos of European society. Europe will not tolerate a German dictator any more than it would a French one. "The Fatherland" admits the Germans foresaw the coming storm and prepared to meet rather than avert it. It is another great fight for freedom, and it may be long and bloody; but, conscious of the righteousness of our cause, we await with confidence the fortune of our arms.

THE UNEMPLOYED.

IT IS a wise city that provides early for a hard winter. War and the causes of war are responsible for what will be hard times for this winter at least. But the prospects are worse than they should be in Peterborough. It is well known that farmers complain that they are short of help. If they want help and are prepared to pay a reasonable wage, they can get it in this city. It is futile for farmers and the unemployed to remain strangers to each other, if it is possible to reconcile the situation with the needs of both. The city council will realize that it is necessary to see that the people of Peterborough are not saddled with too heavy a burden for lack of care and forethought. It is up to the council to take this matter into their serious consideration. Where there is work and a will, there ought to be a way.

"LABOR SUNDAY."

THE FIRST Monday in September in Canada and in the United States is a holiday, known as Labor Day, while in Europe the first of May is usually celebrated as a labor festival. In conformity with this annual celebration, the churches throughout Canada intending taking the opportunity afforded to deliver messages to the workingmen on Sunday, September 6. The ministers of the gospel believe they have a message for labor, and intend to deliver it in the hope that they will attend in large numbers. The committee of the Social Service Council of Canada have sent out an urgent appeal to the ministers to use the opportunity afforded them, and it no doubt will be generally observed. The circular, in part, says:

"The church has identified itself with many of the aims of the labor movement. This is as it should be. For behind the effort to secure a larger share of the wealth it helped to create, behind the demand for shorter hours, there has been the determination to have the workingman share more fully in the higher values of life, in health, leisure, education and culture. The labor movement has laid the emphasis on the human element in industry, rather than on dividends. It has voiced the passion for justice and righteousness between man and man. It has insisted on social and economic conditions that tend to conserve life and enable a man to realize his highest possibilities. It has been one of the foremost opponents of war and strongest advocates of universal peace. It has preached a gospel of universal brotherhood and called men to unselfish living. In short, the labor movement has sought to create those conditions in which it ought to be possible for the church to do her best work."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

WARS may come and wars may go, and prices go up, but appetites show no decline.

WHAT a change it must be for Parisians going to bed at eight o'clock — the city where they usually sit up all night and sleep all day.

Sentimental Slush.

Catholic Register.

Marie Corelli has just finished a new novel with the vapid title, "Innocent:—Her Fancy and His Fact," and the brainless young women are eagerly awaiting this latest deluge of sentimental slush.

Money to Burn.

Montreal Journal of Commerce.

A common objection to the various plans for social betterment work, whether in America or Europe, is that there is no money. If it is proposed to give the children better education, the unanswerable argument is — no money. If better roads are demanded by the people, the reply is—no money; more parks, playgrounds, gymnasiums, libraries, and museums — no money. But scarcely had the first shot been fired in the present war when the nations involved appropriated a billion dollars each to be offered up on the altars of patriotism.

Enough to Excite Contempt.

London Express.

We are not inclined to decry an enemy whose prowess in the past we have learned to respect, but since victory or defeat is largely influenced by the manner in which a fight is approached, it is impossible not to compare the calm thoroughness and exultant determination of our country with the curious and unexpected childishness of the Germans. The latest wordy manifesto of the Kaiser would be funny if it were not pitiful. To assail your opponent, and to strap the garment of the Pharisee on your back immediately after tempting him to play the traitor is sufficient to excite the amused contempt of the world.

Don't Worry About Canada.

New York Telegraph.

"Suppose," said a writer, "that a foreign country were to send troops into Canada, would not the United States, acting under the Monroe Doctrine, have to fight on behalf of Canada?" Don't worry yourself, Mr. Trouble Finder. Foreign troops are not going to invade Canada, and would not attempt it even if they wished to do so. Canada is too far away, and the difficulties are too many for any nation to try to invade the Dominion. One of the things in the way of an invasion is the British navy. Another obstacle in the way of invaders would be about a million fighting men in Canada. The Monroe Doctrine, however, only is intended to prevent foreign countries from forming new colonies in this section of the world, but we would not interfere to prevent a war. As to any country annexing Canada by conquest, it is quite safe to say the Canadians can take care of themselves.

The War Prayer.

London News and Leader.

A few years before his death Mark Twain wrote an article entitled "The War Prayer." It describes how a regiment gathers in a church before it departs for war and prays for victory. As the prayer concludes a white-robed stranger enters the church and says:

"I have been sent by the Almighty to tell you that He will grant your petition if you desire it after I have explained to you its full import. You are asking for more than you seem to be aware of. You have prayed aloud for victory over your foes, but listen to the unspoken part of your prayer, and ask yourselves if this is what you desire."

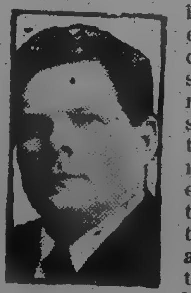
Then the stranger speaks aloud these implications of their words:

"O Lord, help us to tear the soldiers of the foe to bloody shreds with our shells; help us to cover their smiling fields with the pale form of their patriot dead; help us to lay waste their humble homes with a hurricane of fire; help us to wring the hearts of their unoffending widows with unavailing grief. Blast their hopes, blight their lives, water their way with their tears."

Mark Twain never published this article. His friends told him it would be regarded as a sacrilege.

WAR

By Walt Mason



Oh, somebody poisoned the emperor's dog, yea, gave it of arsenic more than a pound; at dawn it was lying out in the fog, its legs in the air and its tail on the ground. The emperor muttered, "This insult, by jing, most certainly calls for an ocean of blood; and now I shall climb on the frame of the king who handed my bow-wow a poisonous spud." The emperor summoned his three million men, and told them to scrap while the scrapping was fine; the king, much offended, emerged from his den, and called for his soldiers, and got them in line. Ah, then there was war, and the sickening thud, and there was a soul-searching chorus or groans; and travellers waded through rivers of blood, or twisted their ankles on hillocks of bones. The homes of the people made excellent fires, and women were widowed without their consent; and children were waiting in vain for the sires whose blood for a bow-wow was foolishly spent. And when it was over, and legions were slain, a horse doctor looked at the emperor's Spitz. "The beast wasn't poisoned," he muttered, "that's plain — the confounded dog was a victim of fits."

LATEST NEWS PARAGRAPHED

The directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway yesterday voted $100,000 to the Canadian National Patriotic Fund.

Hon. G. H. Perley has placed at the disposal of the Red Cross Association his handsome residence on Metcalfe street, Ottawa.

Prince Ernest of Saxe-Meiningen, an officer in the German army, has been wounded and placed in a hospital at Gubeitge, Belgium.

Information from southern Dalmatia, says The London Post's Paris correspondent, is to the effect that in several towns the Slav troops have revolted against their Austrian officers.

The Legislature of Barbados having voted $100,000 as a contribution to the Mother Country, the Colonial Office has suggested that the gift would be most acceptable in the form of sugar.

Home Secretary McKenna stated yesterday afternoon that no spies had been shot in England. There has been rumors that many persons in the secret service of Germany has been executed.

The Bank of England says that arrangements regarding the gold from Ottawa is working extremely well. About one million and three-quarter pounds sterling, had been remitted from Ottawa up to Tuesday.

LILLE NOT TAKEN.

Report of Capitulation of French Fortress Is Denied.

PARIS, Aug. 28.—The report that Lille had been captured by the Germans is denied.

Sharp fighting has occurred at the gates of Lille between German cavalry and French troops, but it is reported here that the Germans were beaten off toward Seclin, losing a number of prisoners.

This detachment of Germans approached Lille from Mouseron, advancing till between Roubaix and Turcoin.

Could Not Stand Assault.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—That Lille has not been taken, but that there has been serious fighting in the vicinity of the French border city, was the statement made at the French Embassy yesterday afternoon. The fighting, which was in the nature of advance guard skirmishing, was said to have resulted in the retirement of the Germans. The Embassy was without any information regarding the reports that the city would not be defended if a serious German movement were directed against it. A despatch early in the day said that Lille, Roubaix and Valenciennes, all in France, had been taken by the Germans.

The towns of Roubaix, Lille and Valenciennes are all close to the Belgian frontier, Lille and Valenciennes being ten miles from the line, and Roubaix five. Roubaix is five miles northeast of Lille and Valenciennes is thirty miles southeast of the same city. Lille is the most important from a military point of view, and is besides a great manufacturing city. It has a fortress of the first class, and the circle of its forts is thirty miles. Recent despatches from Paris said that Lille was held by French reservists. Roubaix would appear not to be fortified. It is a manufacturing centre.

Valenciennes also is a manufacturing city, and is an important military point. It has an arsenal and extensive barracks.

COMMUNICATIONS WEAK.

German Link With Base Can Be Easily Cut, Says Correspondent.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—Tests made at various points along the German army's line of communication, says the Ostend correspondent of The Daily News, show that it is surprisingly weak. The Germans seem to have gone forward with the idea that they had nothing more to fear from the Belgian army.

"If the allies can hold their own at the front," says the correspondent, "it is certain that German communication with their base can be cut at any moment. In fact, their army seems to be up in the air. It has no support and everything has been chanced on a victory for the advancing army, which is traveling fast, carrying its own supplies and supplementing them with levies on the surrounding country."

SITUATION IS CRITICAL.

French Invasion of Alsace-Lorraine Weakened Main Defence.

LONDON, Aug. 28. — The Daily Chronicle says to-day: The situation in northwestern France has now become exceedingly critical, and little information is likely to reach us until another battle has been fought. The Germans have brought up corps after corps through Belgium, where their communications are secure, and the allies are falling back.

It is greatly to be feared the French did not penetrate the German strategic plan, and that troops have been diverted to a useless offensive in Alsace-Lorraine borders, which should have been elsewhere. The fate of the lost provinces, and of much else will be decided not on their own soil but by the German armies which are now contending possible on the line of Arras-Cambrai-le-Cateau.

There are no fortifications there, but on this line, or farther in the rear, field entrenchments will have been prepared, and a good defence should be made, but the Germans are moving very rapidly. Their mobility is surprising, and it is attained largely by the use of motor vehicles, some of them carrying guns, and all by rapid service carrying men to positions far advanced. From the very beginning of the campaign they have thrown their whole weight on the allied left wing, and there can be little doubt they will endeavor to practice the same strategy in the new situation. This it is that gives such critical importance to the battle which has now begun. If the Germans should be able to strike south between Amiens and Scathey they would get astride our communications, and by a danger of this kind may possibly cause the further retirement of the allies.

AN HONOR TO CANADA

Mrs. Everard Cotes Is Our Leading Woman Novelist

Besides being born a novelist, Mrs. Everard Cotes (Sara Jeanette Duncan) brought to her work, which has always been to her the source of exquisite enjoyment, a brave spirit of adventure. She was born of pure British stock, in the town of Brantford, Ont., where her father, Mr. Charles Duncan, was a leading merchant, some time in the eighteen-sixties, when it would have taken almost a miracle to convince a publisher that a girl of Canadian birth could be a novelist, says Marjorie MacMurchy in Toronto Star Weekly.

This publishing attitude was a great obstacle to the pursuit of letters in Canada not many years ago. Long after Mrs. Cotes had proved triumphantly that she was a novelist born and that nothing could keep her from achieving success, a Canadian editor assured a beginner that he had been told by publishers in the United States that they would never accept a manuscript if they knew it had been written by a Canadian. No Canadian could write a successful story; it was impossible for a Canadian to have the right point of view.

This shows what Mrs. Cotes had to overcome, in addition to the usual difficulties incidental to the career of a novelist. Gay, courageous, lighthearted, wearing her love of adventure in the great world like a rose, Miss Duncan went out lightly from the little town of Brantford, impelled to see all manner of interesting places and to write tales of the characters of men and women and of what they will do, driven by their own souls and the force of circumstance.

Miss Duncan was educated in Brantford. She became a teacher, like so many other clever Canadian girls, taught the most junior class of all, and during her short term as an instructor formed the friendship of her school inspector, Mr. Geo. W. Ross, afterwards Premier of Ontario. This friendship continued as long as Mr. Ross lived. Miss Duncan had a scintillating wit. The world wore magic colors to her. Few who met her who had themselves any talent failed to recognize and appreciate this eager, gifted personality. Writing has always been to Miss Duncan the breath of life. While at school The Toronto Globe accepted an essay by the youthful author.

In the years immediately following Miss Duncan wrote as "Garth Grafton" for The Toronto Globe, afterwards joining the staff of The Montreal Star. For the latter paper Miss Duncan wrote the Parliamentary correspondence from Ottawa during at least one session. Miss Duncan is probably the only woman journalist who has ever written from the press gallery at Ottawa.

In 1889, when the transcontinental railway was still a feat of wonder and the Canadian Pacific Railway was far from being an old story, Miss Duncan and a friend set out to travel round the world. Miss Duncan wrote travel letters for The Montreal Star. These letters appeared also in an English publication. Later they were revised and published in book form as "A Social Departure," 1890.

The young writer had won a triumph. Fresh, delicate, airy, pungent, full of delicious humor, the book found thousands of friends and admirers. It still maintains its place as one of the best contemporary books of travel. In her later books Mrs. Cotes' style has lost some of the delightful simplicity of her early work. The study of character and of politics has grown to be absorbing. Since the publication of "A Social Departure" she has written some twenty novels. To each book she has given labor, concentration, a fire of thought, purpose and effort, and very exceptional ability. The first early careless rapture has been withdrawn, and in its place has risen the full light of the novelist's searching knowledge of character and motive. Mrs. Cotes is among the first Canadian novelists, and is in the first rank of women novelists in English-speaking countries.

On her journey round the world she met in India Mr. Everard Cotes, then Deputy Superintendent of the Indian Museum at Calcutta, now managing director of the Indian News' Agency, which is the Associated Press of India. They were married the following year. Since that time Mrs. Cotes' home has been at Simla in India. She, however, frequently spends a great part of the year in London, and every few years comes to visit Canada. Mr. and Mrs. Cotes have visited frequently Prince Rupert, which is the terminus of the Grand Trunk Pacific on the Pacific Ocean; they are at home in Brantford and Toronto; many months of the year they spend in their flat in London, and in both Calcutta and Simla they are counted as residents. This world-citizenship is reflected in Mrs. Cotes' novels. "The Social Departure" was followed by "An American Girl in London."

Her Canadian books are "The Imperialist," full of delightful humor and of a deep, sympathetic knowledge of Canadian ways and Canadian character, and "Cousin Cinderella," which is the story of a Canadian girl in London. "The Consort" is a clever novel of English society. Two of her finest books have been kept to be named at the end. "The Story of Sonny Sahib" is perhaps her most perfect work. It tells the story of a little English boy in the Indian Mutiny. "The Other Side of the Latch" is a book written of an Indian garden, which deserves to be placed alongside "Sonny Sahib."

FOR HOUSEWIVES

Cake Worth Trying.

Place your sifter in your mixing bowl, in your sifter put 1 cup of sugar, 1½ cups of sifted flour, 1 level teaspoonful of soda and 2 level teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar. Sift these all together in your bowl. Put into a teacup the white of two eggs, add enough melted butter to half fill the cup and on that put enough milk (sweet) to fill the cup. Put in your mixing bowl with the other ingredients, add flavoring and beat five minutes. So easily and quickly made, and when baked will be light as a feather. Another loaf can be made from the yolks in the same way.

Frozen Pudding.

Two quarts of milk, 6 eggs, 1½ pint jar of cream, ½ pound of candied cherries, 1 cup of sultana rasins, 1 tablespoon of gelatin, ½ pint or more of rum. Heat the milk, then pour over the beaten eggs. Return to the double boiler and cook till it adheres to the spoon, then add the gelatin that has been soaked in a little cold milk and strain when cold. Add the cream whipped stiff. When nearly frozen add the fruit. Soak the cherries in the rum over night.

SKIRTS OF NET.

They Make the Fashionable Tunic Endurable In Hot Weather.

SMART FRENCH COSTUME

The long draped tunics which fashionable women are wearing this season are undoubtedly warm, but Parisian modistes, with their customary ingenuity, have found a way to remedy this. Skirts are sometimes made with a net yoke, over which the tunic falls. Some costumes even have entire skirts of lace or net. The gown illustrated here was snapped at one of the French races, where fashions are exploited. Tunic and corsage are of flowered silk, with a satin stripe which runs up and down. The surplice is finished with a plaited frill of net, and the waist is encircled with a girdle of satin ribbon. The skirt is of white net, adorned with rows of narrow frills.

BELGIANS FALL BACK.

Fierce Struggle Occurs at Malines—Germans Heading for Antwerp.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—The Chronicle's correspondent sends the following, dated at Amsterdam (midnight), Aug. 26: A terrific battle has been raging all day. Apparently, the Germans want at all hazards to get Antwerp, and they continue sending fresh troops from the east. The Belgians have kept the Germans at bay on the southern side of the canal that forms the boundary. Yesterday the enemy were repulsed, but made another attack to-day and retook the town of Malines. At several places dead bodies are piled to the height of five or six feet.

The greater part of Malines has been destroyed. The Belgian themselves blew up part of the town to enable the fort to use its guns effectively. Many wounded have been brought across the river and from there conveyed by the trains and road ambulances to Antwerp, whither all the civil population of Malines have already fled.

The cathedral tower at Malines was struck eight times by shells from the German cannon, and Carillon was destroyed.

It is reported that Vandervelde, a Socialist Minister, participated in the defence of Malines.

The Belgian legation states that Prince George De Ligne, who was serving with the Belgians as a volunteer, has been killed in battle. Count Vanderburch, a lieutenant in the 3rd Belgian Lancers, was also [illegible] in a [illegible]ash near Diest.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 27.—The market today was again wild and unsettled. A new phase, however, was that exporting houses were buying October futures fairly heavily. Prices opened irregular, wheat 1⅛c lower to 1⅝c higher, and advanced further 1⅝c to 4c. May wheat is drawing near $1.25. Sales were made this morning at $1.24¼, but it eased again fractionally. Final closing figures were 1⅜c to 1⅞c under Wednesday.

Oats opened ½c down, gained a cent, then declined to opening figure at noon. Flax October opened unchanged, gained 5½c, and then dropped below opening by noon.

The cash demand for wheat, oats and barley continues good and offerings are generally light. Cash grains closed: Wheat, 1⅜c lower; oats, ½c lower to ½c higher; barley, unchanged to 1c higher; flax, 2c lower.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 27.—Some sales of a few loads of No. 1 northern Manitoba spring wheat on passage to London were made today at 46s, which is an advance of 2s 6d per quarter on sales made late last week. Cables on oats were easier with the demand less urgent. The local market for oats is strong at a further advance of 1c to 2c per bushel with some holders of No. 2 Canadian western asking as high as 67c. On the recent advance in prices for wheat a stronger feeling developed in the market for spring wheat flour, and prices have advanced 40c per barrel with a good demand for local account. There was some enquiry from London early today asking millers to make offers.

ALLIANCES OF PAST CENTURY

Political Exigencies Have Caused Many Changes in Europe.

That the war in which the great European powers are now engaged will be short and decisive, and that it will not be so terrible as to make wars impossible in the future, is the editorial expression of The Army and Navy Journal of New York. The Journal says:

"The present war in Europe will not be the last war, as some are rashly predicting. As long as racial prejudice exists and until there is universal brotherhood, wars will occur. The treaties that will be signed at the close of the war will last until the vanquished have gained sufficient strength to attempt to regain their lost honor and territory. The war will be a short and decisive war. More men may be killed in battle, but the percentage of the casualties will scarcely be larger than in former years. Owing to improved methods of sanitation and in training soldiers, the number of deaths from disease will be reduced to a minimum. The developments of modern implements of warfare will shorten the time of the war and reduce the amount of suffering and financial loss. Within a year Europe will be in peace again, and in a few years will have recovered almost entirely from the effects of the war. It will not be so terrible that in another crisis like this nations will refuse to go to war."

Bayonet Not Obsolete

It is a great mistake to imagine that the bayonet is obsolete, or that the days of hand-to-hand fighting are over. When an advance begins, it must go on. To stop is bad, to retreat fatal. The bayonet is relied on to push the charge right home, when the desired spot is reached. Whatever may have happened to the sword and the lance, the bayonet is as important to-day as it ever was. The mere sight of it in the hands of a British soldier is often enough to frighten an enemy.

ITALY AGAINST WAR

LONDON, Aug. 28.—A Times' despatch from Rome declares that great pressure is being brought to bear on Italy by Germany and Austria to join in the war with both countries, making her alluring promises but without effect.

"The Italian people are against Austria," says the despatch, "and any decision by the Government to join in the conflict by the side of Germany and Austria would mean a revolution. The triple alliance, The Times' correspondent adds, is a thing of the past."

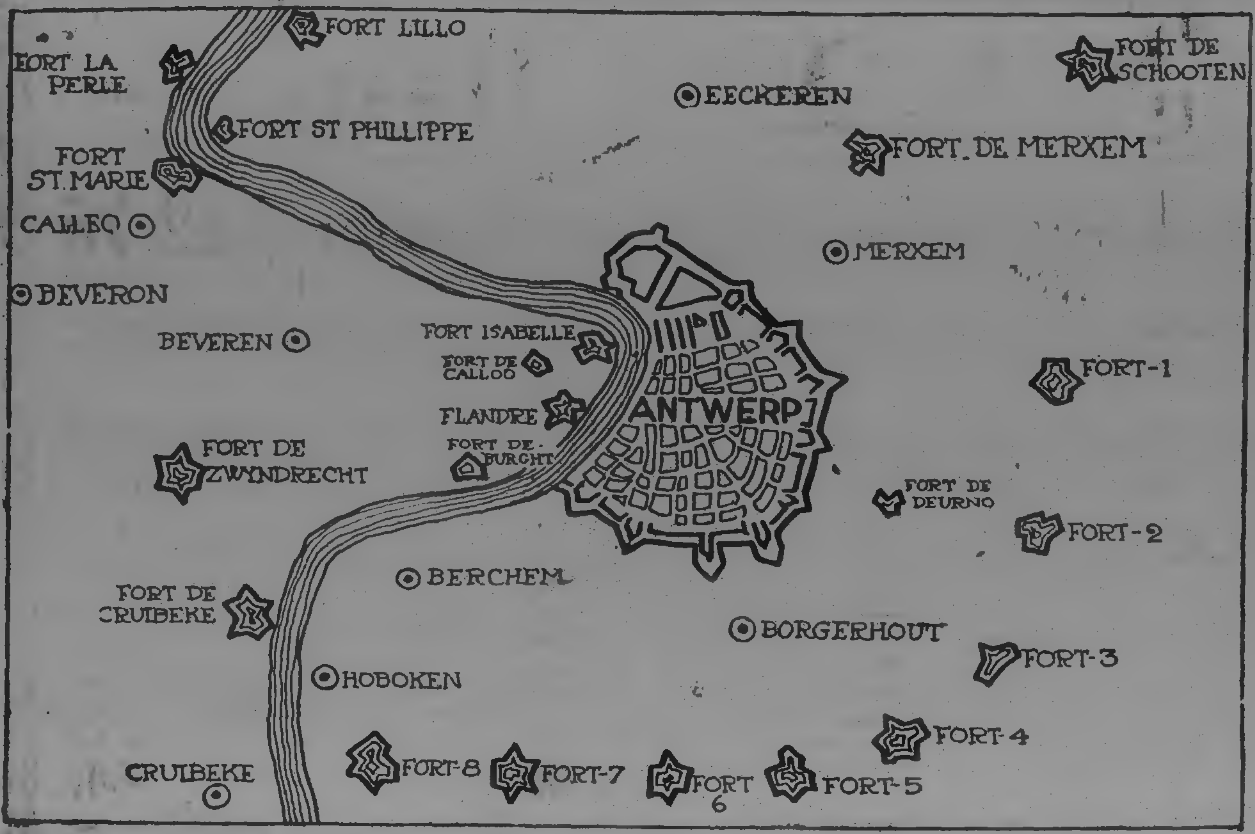
ANTWERP--BELGIUM'S BEST FORTIFIED CITY

Map of Antwerp, the Ramparts Surrounding the City on all but the River side, and the Outer Line of Forts.



Antwerp is one of the best-fortified cities in Europe and is in fact the only city in Belgium which is thoroughly protected, according to modern methods. The development of long-range siege artillery and of explosive shells sinct 1875 rendered obsolete all fortifications built before that time, and the new schemes of defence which might withstand modern artillery fire entail such tremendous expense that comparatively few places in Europe are surrounded by complete modern defences.

The scheme of Belgium defence was based upon the idea that Germany would be its enemy, and against German invasion two lines of defence were built, one along the Meuse where the principal fortified places were Liege and Namur and the other along the Sseld protecting Antwerp.

Brialmont, the great Belgian general, laid out the scheme for the modern defences in Belgium in 1878. The works around Antwerp were still incomplete in 1908, but in that year King Leopold suddenly began to push large measures for national defence. The thing that gave greatest impetus to the movement to protect Belgium was the act of the Kaiser in "rattling the sabre" at Russia when Austria annexed Bosnia and Herzegovina. Alarmed lest Belgium should be swallowed up in a general European war, that little nation has since doubled its army and multiplied its powers of defence.

Many military critics think that Germany will not attempt to take Antwerp, but will lay siege to it to prevent an army in that city from striking at its flank. Others hold the opinion that Germany will attempt to occupy the whole of Belgium and then seek to hold the German frontiers, a situation which would give them a decided advantage in peace negotiations.

Antwerp is protected on three sides by an enclente, or fortified wall and on the fourth by the Scheldt. The wall, eight miles in length, was initiated in 1859, and is now chiefly interesting as the last and finest expression of the mediaeval enciente. It could be easilly broached today by long-range guns, and would afford small protection to the city if the invader once passed the inundated zone and the ring of forts, which are the city's chief defence.

There are 15 forts, each with an armament of 120 guns and 15 mortars. The forts on the sides not defended by inundation are about a mile and a quarter apart and from two to three miles in front of the wall.

The zone which may be inundated occupies more than 200 square miles on the north, and to the east and west of Antwerp, reaching almost to the border line of Holland. This is all low, flat land, into which a volume of water sufficient to flood it to an average depth of three feet can be poured by piercing the levees of the Scheldt. The flooded land is chiefly uced for truck gardening. The water makes the movement of cavalry impossible. The building of roads across the flooded zone is nearly impossible, because the city can regulate the floods and pour in fresh currents from the Scheldt at any time. Further than that, these improvised marshes are commanded by six forts, and no engineering operations could take place within the range of their guns. To push siege artillery through the swamp to positions attacking the forts here would be almost impossible.

The forts themselves are the latest and most perfect works of Brialmont. Every path by which the invaders could advance on Antwerp on dry land could be swept by a crossfire from two forts. The advancing army would have to pass through a space a mile and a quarter in width, and make their way forward under the fire from the two forts of 240 guns and 30 mortars. The front of each of the forts is 700 yards long. The ground for five miles before them has been swept clean of natural concealments. On a direct charge troops would be under the hail of shells from the big guns for six miles. During the final mile the machine guns would be deadly.

Further than that, invaders would have to face extensive field fortifications and mobile artillery which would occupy the interval between the forts. If, under cover of fog, charging troops should sweep past the forts, they would have to scale the enciente, a wall 33 feet in height, with a ditch 55 feet wide in front of it, under a fire of cannon, machine guns, and infantry fire.

The reduction of the forts by siege artillery would be the most difficult task ever undertaken in modern warfare. The forts are masses of concrete. The chief armament is disappearing guns, protected by armored cupolas. The guns are out of sight and out of the reach of artillery fire until after they are aimed. Then they are elevated rapidly to a firing position, they fire, and then they drop back out of sight. Each fort is protected from surprise by powerful searchlights in armored cupolas.

A belt line railroad, which is concealed from view on land, runs out from Antwerp and connects it with each fort. This is necessary in order to keep the forts supplied with ammunition.

The one weak spot in the defense of Antwerp is on the left bank of the Scheldt opposite the city. This is protected by two old forts, the Isabelle and Marie. No permanent modern work were erected on that side of the city for the reason that it was believed that no enemy would get around to that side in sufficient strength to deliver any attack that the existing forts could not easily pel. Troops making an attack here, would have to cross the inundated district first, unless they came by the North Sea, and it was assumed that invasion by the sea would be prevented by England.

Antwerp has a population of 361,000, only a little more than half of Brussels, but the seaport city is naturally of more importance to Belgium than is the interior capital Brussels. Its great advantage in the present war is that it could be besieged forever without being forced to surrender through starvation, so long as England controlled the North Sea and supplies could be received by ships.

In 1576 Antwerp was captured by the Spaniards. In 1585, Parma captured it after a long siege. In 1830 the city was captured by Belgian insurgents, but the citadel commanded by General Chasle held out for two years.

GERMANY HAVE FOOD ENOUGH THOUGH BOTTLED UP

A good deal of sympathy is being wasted by some observers who expect to see Germany brought to her knees shortly through the cutting off of trade with the rest of the world. She will starve to death, short-sighted critics assert, because prices of foodstuffs and all necessities will go to famine heights and cause a revolution and deposition of the German Emperor and his Government.

This view is pisturesque, but it lacks the main essential — it isn't true. Germany is perhaps the best organized Government in the world. In spite of the war, prices in Germany have risen only slightly because the Government has everywhere regulated prices, and when prices are announced in Germany they are adhered to. The German responds instantly to military discipline. It is declared also, and we believe it to be true, that Germany has fully a year's supply of food and other necessities on hand and could live comfortably for that length of time if not a dollar's worth of new production were entered upon.

The case is different with France and England. Germany has a per capita debt of but $15, while England's is $85, and each French inhabitant is today carrying a debt to the nation of $180. Both are dependent upon the trade with other countries or with their colonies, to maintain them without causing a severe pinch. A six weeks' blockade of the English coasts would bring her people to the point of starvation, and the situation in France would be similar in six months. Bottling up Germany, therefore, doesn't mean for the Germans what the same fate would mean to the English and French. France's predicament is shown thus early in the war when she was compelled this week to come to American bankers and try to arrange for a $100,000,000 loan. — "The Financial World."

GENERAL CHANGE IN LINE-UP OF ALLIES

LONDON, Aug. 28. — The British Press Bureau at 12.30 o'clock this morning gave out the following statement:—

"The French operations of war over a distance of some 250 miles have necessitated certain changes in the position of our troops, who are now occupying a strong line to meet the German advance, supported by the French army on both flanks.

"The morale of both armies appears to be excellent, and there is little doubt that they will give good accounts of themselves in the positions they now hold."

Supplementary to this statement the following was issued:—

"Gen. Joseph Joffre, commander-in-chief of the French forces, in a telegram to Field Marshal Sir John French, commander of the British forces, says:—

"The British army did not hesitate, but threw its whole strength against the forces, which had great numerical superiority. In so doing it contributed in a most effective manner to securing the left wing of the French army.

"It exhibited in this task devotion, energy and perseverance, to which I must now pay my tribute—qualities which will be shown again to-morrow and make certain the triumph of our common cause. The French army will never forget the services rendered it. Our army is inspired with the same spirit of sacrifice and determination to conquer which animates the British forces, and will make good to them its debt of gratitude in the battles of the near future."

Fighting in the Vosges District.

PARIS, Aug. 28.—The following official bulletin was issued by the War Office late last night:—

"In the Vosges district our troops to-day resumed the offensive, and drove back the Germans, who yesterday had forced them to retire on the Saint Die side.

"The Germans yesterday bombarded Saint Die, which is an unfortified town.

"In the region between the Vosges and Nancy our offensive movement has continued uninterruptedly for five days. The German losses have been considerable—2,500 bodies were found on a front of three kilometres southeast of Nancy, and 4,500 bodies on a front of four kilometres in the region of Vitrimont.

"Longwy, a very old fortress, the garrison of which consisted of only one battalion, which had been bombarded since Aug. 3, capitulated today after holding out for over twenty-four days. More than half the garrison was killed or wounded. Lt.-Col. Darche, Governor of Longwy, has been nominated an officer of the Legion of Honor for 'heroic conduct in the defence of Longwy.'

"On the Meuse our troops have repulsed with great vigor several German attacks. A German flag was taken.

"The Belgian field army attached to Namur and a French regiment which supported it have joined our lines.

"In the north the British have attacked forces greatly superior in number, and were obliged, after brilliant action, to withdraw a little in the rear on their right.

"Our armies maintained their positions in Belgium. The army of Antwerp, by its offensive, has drawn off and held before it several German divisions."

An official statement issued in the afternoon said:—

"The events of yesterday in the region of the north have neither imperilled nor modified the arrangements made in view of the future development of operations in the region between Vosges and Nancy.

"Our troops continue to progress."

Next Stand at Arras.

PARIS, Aug. 28. — French and British forces in great numbers are concentrated at Arras, chosen as the best strategic point at which to halt the German advance. It is situated on the Scarpe river, about 25 miles southwest of Lille.

TRAINLOAD OF WOUNDED

LONDON, Aug. 28. — The Daily Mail's Boulogne correspondent says: "The train from Paris Wednesday took 12 hours, being compelled to wait seven hours at Amiens by a flood of 5,000 Belgian refugees arriving from the Charleroi district and a trainload of British wounded, who were guarded from inquisitive visitors by armed sentries."

KAISER'S TROOPS HAVE MUCH TO ANSWER FOR

One Little Girl Had Jaw Broken—She Resented an Insult

Paris, Aug. 28. — The Cirque de Paris, where the crowd of Belgian refugees has grown to 2,500, has taken on the aspect of a human stable. The floors of the wide foyers are all covered with straw, which has become wet, and the homeless and poverty stricken people may be seen lying about, many in attitudes of sad dejection. Trained nurses of the Red Cross, priests, soldiers and doctors are constantly moving among the crowd ministering to their wants.

At the entrance to the hall a large cask containing beer was placed and a soldier was soon apportioning the beverage to a waiting line of men and boys.

Inside the amphitheatre were children of all ages, sizes and descriptions. The scarcity of baggage was noticeable, everyone apparently having taken only the few things that could be easily carried in their hasty flight. The evening meal consisted of a huge slice of bread with a piece of beef on top and afterwards black cocee was served.

Lost Both His Sons.

An old man, sitting in a corner on a sack of straw, told the following story:

"People call me Jack Beaujon. I have a little wine shop just across the river from Liege in the town of Grivegnee. When the mobiliation order was announced, my two sons, both fine fellows, went to join their regiments. My daughters, I have two, this one here and another, remained with their old father."

The girl he motioned to was a bright-eyed girl of about sixteen, but only her eyes were visible as the rest of her face was swathed in bandages.

He continued:

"You see her poor dear face. Well, a German was the cause of that. When they came they demanded wine, which I gave them, and one man tried to insult her. When she resented this he struck her and she fell against the counter and broke her jaw."

The old man then told of their flight and the hardships they endured. Another refugee, Mme. Agnes Bourssault, of Walkenraedt, in telling her story of the flight from Belgium, said:

Nearly Starved to Death.

"Please do not ask me to tell the horrible things I saw while coming here. I have lost my husband and brother, who died in the noble cause, and now you see me, along with my five children. The greatest suffering I underwent was from hunger. We could get hardly anything to eat for three days except a little stale bread. The thing that hurt me most was my inability to satisfy the wants of my little ones."

Georges Gust, a restaurant keeper of Clenee, told this story:

"When we heard the Germans approaching my wife fled across the river into Liege. It seems now much like a dream. Just before they entered there we left along with many others.

"Never shall I forget the sights we saw along the roadside where mutilated corpses and wounded and dying strewed our pathway."

Many other refugees continued to arrive during the night. The Government is doing everything possible to aid them.

The Point of View.

DEATH'S HEAD HUSSARS

The badge of the Death's Head Hussars is composed of the head and crossed arms of a recumbent effigy. The addition of the words "to glory" makes the application of it obvious.

Other nations have had these regiments. In 1759, when Colonel John Hale (who came to London with the news of Wolfe's fall and the conquest of Canada), raised the 17th Light Dragoons, now styled the Lancers, King George ordered that "on the front of the men's caps and on the left breast of their uniforms there was to be the death's head and cross-bones over it." The grim device they still retain, like the famous Pormeranian Horse, who, since the days of Gustavus Adolphus, have worn skulls and cross-bones on their high fur caps, and in Sweden are now known as the King's Own Hussars.

This device was also worn by the Black Brunswickers, who charged so gallantly at Quatre Bas in 1815, where their leader, the young Duke of Brunswick, fell. They never gave or took quarter, on account of the duke's father having been mortally wounded at the battle of Jena, in 1806.

Grand Trunk Adopts Improvement That Will Appeal to Ladies

The Grand Trunk Railway is introducing another improvement in connection with its passenger cars. This will provide greater safety and comfort for the traveller, allowing passengers to alight from the car to the platform and vice versa even more easily than they have hitherto been able to. Railway travellers, particularly ladies, have sometimes found the distance between the platform and the car steps a little trying, especially in the bustle of the station when their thoughts are centred on some detail of the journey. The railway has now adopted a new design for its car steps. This is a four tread step, which reduces the distance from the rail to the top of the first tread to fourteen inches. In the case of low platforms, mounting and dismounting is thus made easier. This improvement has become standard also on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

WITH THE BOYS AT VAL CARTIER

The following letter from Major Bennett, in command of A Company, 1st Battalion of the 1st Brigade of Infantry of the Canadian overseas contingent, will be read with interest:

Valcartier Camp,, Aug. 26.

The camp tonight is a wonderful sight—such a mass of men. Every one is chucked full of enthusiasm and hopeful that they may be selected to go to the front. Troops are coming in at intervals of every hour night and day, and each in turn are right royally received. Such cheering and hand-clapping I never heard before. The Winnipeg and Edmonton contingent arrived tonight about 8.06, and their reception was fine, everyone lining the miles of streets in the camp and cheering fit to raise a roof. Our company, consisting of the 57th and 3rd Dragoons, is now "A" company of the 1st Battalion, of Infantry, so we have the premier position in the division and I am proud to be in command, they are such a fine lot of fellows. Mr. Jones, of the 3rd Dragoons, is 1st Lieut., and C. Ackerman 2nd Lieut., with the other Dragoon officers as superannuary.

Col. Clegg has his regiment now organized, 8 companies from 150 to 175 strong each. The 96th and 98th from Port Arthur, Fort William and Fort Frances and Kenora arrived and joined us this afternoon. They make up Companys G. and H. Major Mills is acting quarter-master.

There are a lot of Peterborough boys showing up here and there, some from regiments in Ontario and many others with regiments from the west.

My company were medically examined this morning. Col. Clegg Lieut. Ackerman and myself passed with flying colours, and our chances appear good to be in the first contingent to move to the front. . . If what we hear is correct, there will be another division mobilized here just as soon as this one moves out. It is a grand camp ground and the busiest spot I ever saw—everyone going like bees from a peal at sunrise.

We are now equipped with government coats, serges, trousers and boots, and things are coming in every day to complete. I got rifles today also.

The Adjutant-General is urging speed in everything. This is not a resting place by any means; it is work, work night and day. Tomorrow we get our first table meal, as we have now got a mess organized, and at night we are to have lectures on staff duties and tactics. This is where our recent M. S. course officers will shine, as they are required to give the lectures and instruction. . . . Say to all who inquire that we are very happy and our spirits are quite in keeping with the surroundings, cheerful and hopeful.

Yours very sincerely,
G. W. BENNETT,
A Co., 1st Battalion, 1st Brigade Infantry, Valcartier Camp, Que.

Tried to relieve Havelock man of His Money

PUT UP FIGHT

When Detectives Arrested Them at C.P.R. Station

The old game of short change was often worked in the days of yore but of late the average crook plays his games in a more scientific and up to date manner. Hard times has evidently brought back many an old custom, hence the revival of the above mentioned means of raising cash. Last evening when the C.P.R. local from Tweed pulled in, a passenger named Bernard Smith of Havelock was approached by a fairly well dressed young man and asked if he could "accommodate a fellow with a $20 bill or two $10 bills for some small bills. The stranger asking the favor claimed that he wanted to send some money away and for that purpose one large bill was most desirable.

Smith had two tens and handed them over receiving in exchange, three fives and four ones. He informed his newly found acquaintance that there was a dollar short and immediately the latter offered apologies and after counting the money over said he would give him four fives instead of three fives and five ones. A little slight of hand trick was then performed and when the money was put back in Smith's hands there was but four one dollar bills.

A Part of the Game.

Just as he was reaching for it a young fellow sitting behind him leaned ahead and asked for a match. Smith put his hand in his vest pocket to get a match and by the time he had produced it and started to count the money the gent asking for the big bill had disappeared and with him sixteen dollars of Smith's money.

Smith immediately jumped to his feet to follow him permitting the match borrower to get out of sight and as the train stopped at the local depot the chances to catch them appeared mighty slight. The night operator, on hearing Smith's story notified Detectives Newhall and Meagher who at once hit the trail.

The descriptions the detectives received were very scant, nevertheless they roamed about till 2 rather suspicious looking individuals were sighted at the corner of Aylmer and Charlotte Streets. They were followed till they made for the C.P.R. depot at midnight and then to make sure the men were the men wanted P. C. Reid was instructed to walk toward them as he would if about to speak to them. The bluecoat made about two steps and the pair beat a hurried retreat around the back of the station. The detectives needed no further evidence and when they stepped into the 12.15 train which had just pulled in, the two officers followed and informed them that they were under arrest.

The next few minutes were filled with scenes known only at a Donnybrook Fair. Both men jumped from the coach and had a perfect rough and tumble with the officers. Detective Newhall was kicked in about six or seven different places and the visitors were also able to land occasionally with the fists. Detective Meagher received a blow on the nose and the "red" flowed while his fellow officer had his thumb nearly wrenched out. After ten minutes of real live doings the pair were handcuffed and marched to the station. At the door of the station they attempted to get away again.

In Police Court.

This morning they appeared in Police Court and answering to the names of Charles Rose and William Barr they were remanded till Saturday, Sept. 5. Barr is evidently the man Detective Newhall struck at as his left eye is closed. Both appear to be about twenty years of age, and claim to be Americans. The local authorities have made inquiries and will bring several charges against the prisoners.

Positions For The Unemployed

Mr. Robert Shaw, reeve of Harvey and warden of the County said today that farm help was badly needed and that in his own little settlement at Lakehurst at least 6 or 8 were required. Farmers wanted men to look after stock and do chores for the winter. They would pay, he said, $15 a month and board. The employment problem is largely capable of solution by someone who will take hold of it. Employment agencies should look to it.

DWELLING OF CONSTABLE AT BOBCAYGEON IS FIRED

Recently a blaze was noticed in the rear of Constable Nichol's residence, of Bobcaygeon, about 9.30 p.m., by Mr. Robt. Reid who was returning to his home. He secured several pails of water and quickly dashed them on the small conflagration, extinguishing it immediately. The fire was of incendiary origin, coal oil being found on the board in the rear of the house. Besides this proof, two men were noticed running from the house, and in their hasty flight they became entangled in a nearby wire fence, but unfortunately were not caught. Apparently they have a grudge to settle with Constable Nichols.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

WHAT ABOUT RELIEF?

Editor Review,

Sir,— The governments of all the provinces, the councils of the municipalities, and many benevolent societies are preparing for relief work. What is Peterborough doing? Is Peterborough's city council preparing for the distress that is here now? There are complaints that relief is not being given and that distress is increasing, many men are being laid off daily. Information will be welcome Mr. Editor.

Yours,
ANXIOUS.

DEATH FROM THE SKY

It must be terrible for Belgium citizens and others at the seat of the war to retire at night not knowing whether they will ever gaze upon the light of day again—at any moment a bomb may be dropped upon their house, blowing it to atoms. Such a war as is at present being waged has never been experienced in the history of the world before, when one takes into consideration the number of nations engaged and the highly efficient equipment used in modern warfare, which spells death to many who would otherwise have escaped.

MILITANTS BREAK LOOSE ONCE AGAIN

London, Aug. 28.—Militant suffragettes yesterday broke their self-imposed promise not to continue their campaign for the vote. Under tht leadership of "General" Mrs. Flora Drummond, a big crowd of the "furies" surrounded the Home House demanding to see Home Secretary McKenna. Doors barred their entrance and the police were hurriedly summoned. The crowd that gathered was bitterly hostile to the women, and the police saved them from violence with great difficulty.

Seventeen arrests were made, including Mrs. Drummond, Mrs. Dacre Fox and Miss Mary Richardson. The last named achieved fame as the slasher of the Velasquez Venus.

The Women's Social and Political Union voluntarily pledged the Government cessation from its militancy campaign immediately after the declaration of war against Germany. Up until today the pledge has been kept and many museums, closed for fear of the militants' destructive tactics, had been opened to the public again. The demonstration came as a surprise to the police.

Home Secretary McKenna has always been under attack from the militants for the "cat and mouse" Act, and forcible feeding plans at the Holloway jail.

ACTION ON STREET PAVING DEFERRED AT KINGSTON

(Kingston Standard.)

At the meeting of the city council last night the resolution passed on July 26, awarding the contract of paving the block on Princess street, between Clergy and Barrie streets, was rescinded.

The report of the board of works was submitted by Ald. Litton and was as follows:

That the petition of N. H. Claxton and others, asking that a sheet asphalt pavement be constructed on William street, from Division street to University avenue, and the petition of Henry Wilder and others for Aberdeen street; Thos. Mills and others for University avenue, between Stuart and Princess streets; F. A. Bibby and others for Frontenac street, between Union street and Mack street, be granted.

That the contract for this work be granted to Foley & Gleeson, at $2.15 per square yard, and that the work be proceeded with at once; that a clause be inserted in the contract, providing for all unskilled work to be done by the citizens of the city."

Lively Discussion.

When the report was introduced by Ald. Litton, it caused a lively discussion, interspersed with personalities. Ald. Graham led the attack on the report and was followed up by Ald. Nickle. Finally action was deferred until a later date; in the meantimt a conference is to be held between the finance committee and the board of works, regarding the finances of the city, and in order to find out if the money can be raised to do the work.

MANY WARS IN BELGIUM

Gallant Little Country Has Been Battleground of Europe.

Little Belgium has often been overrun with armies and been made the scene of other nations' wars as well as her own. Liege is a busy manufacturing city. Not since the war of the Austrian succession in 1746 has it been jarred by the rumble of heavy artillery in action. On Oct. 11 of that year Marshal Saxe, after successful battles in southern Belgium, concentrated at Rocour, or Roucoux, a few miles north of Liege, and administered a decisive defeat to the allies under Prince Charles of Lorraine.

Namur has been the scene of six battles since 1692. The territory about Charleroi and between the two cities has been plentifully strewn with dead men's bones in wars of contending monarchies.

In the stretch of country for about 100 miles west of Namur at least 20 celebrated battles have been fought, among them Fontenoy. The city of Tournai has been the scene of four.

Although living under a joint guaranty of protection and classification as neutral territory, the Belgians knew that in any emergency of war the guaranty would not be worth a pinch of gunpoder, so they prepared themselves for the event of invasion with the patient industry for which they are famous. When German columns began pouring through their main highways en route for the French border it was possibly assumed that the Belgians would take to their cellars and shiver at the menace of annihilation should they think of resistance.

But the Belgians stood their ground like men and declared that whoever would bring a war to them should have as hearty a reception as they are capable of giving.

ONTARIO CROP BULLETIN

The following statement regarding crop conditions in the province, based upon returns of correspondents made under date of August 15th, has been issued by the Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Harvesting. The chief characteristics of the summer of 1914 have been the generally open and favorable weather for cutting and hauling in the hay and grain crops, and intensely hot, dry periods which had a tendency to hasten the ripening of some of the growing cereals at the expense of the length of straw.

Fall Wheat. This crop is very variable in yield, returns ranging from 10 to 35 bushels per acre, the average for the Province being lower than that for the last decade. Ice-forming and other unpropitious conditions in April, and spells of drought and great heat occurring at times during the early part of the summer, told against a large yield. The quality of the grain is fair, but it will seldom go over weight. The straw is short, but as a rule clean, although a few complaints have been made of rust and a little smut, with occasional mention of injury from the Hessian fly and joint worm. Harvesting extended from July 13th to August 1st.

Spring Wheat. Comparatively little spring wheat is now being raised in Ontario, but what is grown will be about an average in yield and quality. Some of the crop remained to be cut when correspondents reported.

Barley. This grain has done relatively better than fall wheat, having more than an average yield of fairly plump and well colored grain. The straw is short, but bright, and of good quality. Some of the crop suffered in low-lying places from the army worm, but not to a serious extent from a general point of view. Harvesting covered from the 20th of July to the third week of August.

Oats. This crop suffered more than any other of the grains from the army worm, its doings being reported from seven counties in western Ontario and two in the eastern half of the province. All these cases were of a more or less local nature, however, and the extent of the injury was not so general or heavy as was at one time feared. A number of farmers cut their oats while green to anticipate the pest. Taking the province over the yield of oats will be a good one, although much of the grain will be hardly up to weight on account of too rapid ripening owing to unusually hot, dry weather. The straw also is short from this cause, but it is of excellent feeding quality, although there are reports of rust and smut. Cutting will extend from the last week of July to to the third week of August.

Rye. Rye in this province is grown as much for green feeding and for turning under for manure as it is for grain. The yield and quality are about an average.

Peas. Two kinds of field peas are now being raised, some for the canning factories and later varieties for stock feeding. Both classes vary greatly in quality, and the yield per acre for the provinces will be hardly up to the average. The aphis was reported as being troublesome in many fields, and the drought at times prevailing shortened the straw. A considerable portion of the crop remained to be ripened and cut when correspondents reported.

Beans. Only a few correspondents report concerning beans. The yield will be nearly an average, but the season had been rather dry for them, and when returns came in the growing crop was described as being very much in need of rain.

Hay and Clover. This will be a comparatively light crop, and the yields have been very uneven. However, hay generally has been well cured, and put under cover in first-class condition, except a few late cut field which were too mature for best quality. Old meadows as a rule were in poor condition, and in most cases timothy did relatively better than clover. Harvesting was spread over the month of July, being general during the week beginning on the 13th. The few correspondents mentioning alfalfa speak favorably of it.

Corn. The weather at planting was rather cold and backward, and it was feared that germination would not be successful; but the young plants came up better than was expected, although the crop is now regarded as being late in season. Some of the corn fields got slightly nipped by June frosts, but they quickly recovered. The crop was met by drought later, and here and there was threatened by the army worm, but on the whole it may now be classed as looking well, growing rapidly, and promising a good yield for both husking and the silo under ordinary weather conditions.

Tobacco. A decrease in acreage, and the promise of less than an average yield, sums up the present condition of the tobacco crop. The plant got a poor start, owing to unfavorable weather, and it has also suffered from drought.

Potatoes. The chief drawback to this crop has been the midsummer drouth, which has kept the tubers small, although they are said to be of good cooking quality. It is thought that the rains that were falling as some late correspondents reported may revive the crop sufficiently for a normal yield. The Colorado beetle, although reported to be plentiful in some quarters, is not so general as in recent years. No rot has so far been reported, and apart from the effects of the drouth on some of the tops but little mention is made of blight or other actual disease.

Roots. All classes of roots may be described as rather small in size, owing mainly to drouth. Turnips have also suffered in some localities from the louse or aphis, and from grasshoppers, and as a class have not done so well as mangle, which like sugar beets, give fair promise of returns despite the dry summer. Only a few a few farmers now raise carrots as a field crop. Timely rains were falling as the latest returns were coming in, and it was thought there was a fair chance for most of the root crops to yet pick up and reach a standard condition.

Fruit. The San Jose scale is still doing much injury to various classes of orchard trees, more especially in the western half of the province, while the tent caterpillar has been denuding many apple trees, more particularly in the Lake Ontario and St. Lawrence and Ottawa countries. Several corespondents speak most favorably of the manifest good effects of spraying in staying these and other orchard pests. Apples while doing well in some localities, will not have an average yield. A considerable portion of the crop has dropped from some of the summer and fall apple trees owing to the drouth, and the fruit on some of the winter varieties is reported to be rather small in size from the same cause; but expected rains, it was thought, would revive the orchards. Pears will about match apples in yield, with perhaps an improvement in general condition. Peaches are almost a complete failure in the Niagara district, especially the later and more valuable kinds; but more favorable accounts come from Kent and one or two localities where this fruit is not so largely grown. Plums had generally a light yield, with occasional reports of good returns. Cherries were the bumper orchard crop of the season, particularly the sour varieties. Grapes promise well at present. Small fruts were on the whole a good crop, and but for the drouth strawberries and raspberries—the latter especially—would have had record yields.

Pastures and Live Stock. Pastures held out nicely until the middle or end of July, when lack of rain, combined with intense heat for several days together, dried up the grass to an alarming extent. The copious rains falling as later returns are coming in, however, have given much encouragement to all concerned. Live stock which had to depend mainly upon grazing are thin, but most farm animals have been well looked after, and there is practically a clean bill of health reported from the Province. Dry pastures have of course lessened the milk flow, and milch cows have also suffered from the fly in several localities; but the falling off of dairy produce is only normal at this season. Winter fodder supplies are likely to be sufficient for requirements, as the number of live stock have been kept down from various causes—mainly the brisk demand by buyers early in the year—and also as there is a likelihood of there being a fair supply of corn, roots, and other roughage to supplement the hay and grain.

Labor and Wages. Applicants for work on the farm have been more plentiful than for many years, but much of the labor offering has been unskilled in agriculture, a considerable number of men from our towns and cities having this season sought rural employment. The light hay crop, the short, upright straw of the grain crops, and the favorable weather, for harvesting have required less help field help at harvesting. Farmers are also utilizing improved machinery more and more in order to save manual labor, and many of them have also developed a system of exchange of work with neighbors which is making them largely independent of casual help. Wages show little change, ranging from $1.25 to $2.00 or even $2.50 (with board) during harvest, according to skill or locality, and from $20.00 to $30.00 per month, with extra good hands commanding as high as $40.00.

A MESSAGE TO THE TROOPS

PARIS, Aug. 28.—Alexandre Millerand, the new Minister of War, sent yesterday the following letter to Gen. Joffre, commander-in-chief of the French troops:

"My Dear General,—On assuming control of the Ministry of War, I wish my first act to be to send to the troops under your command the tribute of the admiration and confidence of the Government of the republic and the country. France is assured of victory because it is resolved to gain it.

"Following your example and that of your armies, France will maintain until the end calm self-control with an earnest wish of success. Subjected to iron discipline, which is the law and strength of the armies, the whole nation rising to the defence of its soil and liberties has accepted every ordeal, even the most cruel.

"Patient, tenacious and strong in right, sure of its will, it will hold fast. I give you accolade."

BULLET HOLE IN HELMET

ST. CATHARINES, Aug. 28.—Many rumors were yesterday afternoon flying about the canal on account of a bullet hole in the helmet of the sentry at the road tunnel near lock 17. While officers will give out no explanation as to the cause of the bullet hole, they deny the rumor that the sentry fired two bullets into an alleged assailant.

THE SPORTING WORLD

BLOUNTERS FAILED TO SUPPORT CRESWELL

Before a very small crowd for a Thursday afternoon London snatched the first of the three-game series from the Petes yesterday at Riverside Park by 4-1. The Cockneys, who need all the games they can possibly gather, had need to exert no abnormal effort to get yesterday's, for the Petes had no less than four errors.

Manager Reisling sent in Beebe to oppose Creswell, and both pitched fairly good ball, with the Londoner having a trifle the better of the argument. Stanley's lunch hook worked with the regularity of a Corliss engine on some occasions, while at other times he lost his stride. In the eighth the score was 1-1, and a pass, a double, a single and two errors let in three runs, which practically rung down the curtain on the performance. One of the rawest errors pulled here this year was contributed by our diminutive leader in that frame. A pop fly dropped right into his mitt and he missed it

In the third inning Thoma slid into second and was spiked so severely that he was replaced in left by Neale. Other items of interest at the game was the hit brother Creswell secured and the attempted fistic encounter on the visitors bench when they came in in the fourth. Lamy and Snyder were the would-be pugilists, but the husky manager intervened before any of the red matter fell.

First Innings

LONDON — Linneborn singled and Bierbauer sacrificed, Byrne to Dolan. Whitcraft walked. Lamy fanned. Linneborn and Bierbauer tore off a double steal. Reidy lifted to Welsh.—No runs, one hit, no errors.

PETERBORO — Blount doubled to left. Welsh walked. Dolan raised to right, the base-runners advancing. Rooney missed three, and Byrne popped to Whitcraft. — No runs, one hit, no errors.

Second Innings

LONDON — Thoma popped to Byrne. Mullin flied out to Blount. Snyder singled over short. Beebe hit over King's head, but Linneborn's best was a fly to Blount.—No runs, two hits, no errors.

PETERBORO — King lifted to Reidy. Fox raised to Mullin. Kelly dropped one in front of the plate and was out, Snyder to first. — No runs, hits, nor errors.

Third Innings

LONDON — Bierbauer struck out. Whitcraft grounded to Fox. Lamy hit over second, stole second, and scored on Reidy's Texas leaguer over short. Thoma singled over King's head, but went out trying to get to second on it, Rooney to Byrne to Fox. — One run, three hits, no errors.

PETERBORO — Thoma was spiked, and retired in favor of Neale. Creswell hit over third. Blount bunted, and went safe on Snyder's wide throw. Snyder threw wide to second, but Lamy came in and got Creswell at third. Blount stole third. Welsh secured another pass to first, but Dolan hit into a double, short to second to first. — No runs, one hit, one error.

Fourth Innings

LONDON — Mullin grounded to Dolan. Snyder raised a high fly to Welsh and Beebe fanned. — No runs, hits, nor errors.

PETERBORO — Rooney flied to Neale. Byrne struck out. King lifted to Reidy. — No runs, no hits, no errors.

Fifth Innings

LONDON — Linneborn grounded to King. Bierbauer went safe on Kelly's bad throw to first. Whitcraft lifted to Fox, who threw to Dolan and caught Bierbauer off the bag. — No runs, no hits, one error.

PETERBORO — Fox flied to Lamy. Kelly fanned. Creswell flied to Bierbauer. — No runs, hits, nor errors.

Sixth Innings

LONDON — Lamy walkey. Reidy hit into a double, Dolan to Fox to Dolan. Neale singled and went to second on King's error. Mullin struck out. — No runs, one hit, one error.

PETERBORO — Blount doubled to left, and Rooney sacrificed him to third. Dolan singled and Blount scored. Rooney raised to left, and Byrne went out the same way. — One run, two hits, no errors.

Seventh Innings

LONDON — Snyder fanned. Beebe grounded to King, and Lineborn went out, Creswell to Dolan. — No runs, hits, nor errors.

PETERBORO— King flied to first, Fox grounded to Lineborn, Kelly singled, but Creswell fanned. — No runs, one hit, no errors.

Eighth Innings

LONDON — Bierbauer grounded to King. Whitcraft grounded to Byrne. Lamy walked and stole second. Then Reidy doubled and Lamy scored. Neale singled and Reidy scored on Welsh's error. Mullin hit an easy fly to Blount, but the manager made a miscue and Neale scored. Mullin went out stealing.—Three runs, two hits, two errors.

PETERBORO — Blount flied to short. Welsh beat out a bunt to short. Dolan singled through the box. Rooney fouled to Whitcraft, and Byrne drove a liner into the hands of the same player. — No runs, two hits, no errors.

Ninth Innings

LONDON — Snyder grounded to Byrne. Beebe went out, Creswell to Dolan, and Lineborn lifted out to Blount. — No runs, hits nor errors.

PETERBORO — King went out, second to first. Fox grounded to Bierbauer. Kelly flied to Lamy. — No runs, hits, nor errors.

BANKERS LEAD THE LEAGUE

De Laval Twirler Went to the Bad in the Seventh, When Money Men Scored Four Runs

The Bankers took first place in the Mercantile league last evening, when they defeated the De Laval in a seven-inning encounter at Riverside park by 5-1. Mahoney, who twirled for the factory nine, blew high in the last frame, and as a result the Bankers sent four runners across the plate. Smith, on the mound for the victors, pitched nice ball all through and received excellent support from Hill, his catcher. The brightest feature of the game was pulled in the first inning, when Sheehy went from first to third on a bunt. Score by innings :

COMMENT

As You Like It

According to reports Davy Rowan has secured a managerial berth in the Nebraska State League and has been given his release by the Dubuque team of the Three I. Here's luck to you Davy, you can't imagine how we miss you.

Which has the best chance to win — Germany against England, France, Russia, Japan and Belgium, or the Giants or Braves against the Athletics.

One Italian writer on the Hamilton Herald dopes the war thusly: Joseph was passed and the Kaiser hit into a double, Albert to Joffre to Kitchener.

The Braves have stolen less than 90 bases this season, while the Giants have stolen 200. There isn't a man on the Boston roster who has stolen 15, while Burns and Bescher have over 40 to their credit.

Red Fisher, the brick-top backstop of the Home Rulers, has received a letter signed Blackhand, from Buffalo, telling him to place $25 at a certain corner in Buffalo or he'd join the gentry above. Whether the letter is a joke or not remains to be seen. It's safe betting, however, that the quarter century will not be planted at the spot requested.

The slump the Giants have taken this past month has caused the eyes of the baseball community to open, but it rests with the New York Sun to present the following cause :

It will not help matters to heap abuse on the Giants at this stage of the proceedings. The team is now fighting for existence because it is not as strong as in former years. There is no use hiding the fact that several stars have gone back in playing skill. Merkle and Doyle have not been hitting the ball with their former success. Stock and Grant are not first-class third-basemen. Bescher has played an erratic fielding game. Chief Meyers has lost his grip behind the bat. Demaree, who pitched great ball last year, has been a failure practically since the opening of the campaign. Marquard and Tesreau have not displayed the usual steadiness, while Matty, after rolling up a record of eighteen victories and four defeats, has been receiving his bumps like the others. Fans who have rooted loyally can readily see that the Giants miss Shaefer and Herzog. Harry McCormick, who distinguished himself in past seasons as a pinch hitter, also is missed, McGraw therefore finds that the road is rocky and that an infusion of much new blood is necessary to keep the team in the running in 1915.

The gentleman who is kept living by the Erie Dispatch claims George O'Neil, the owner of the Erie club, will lose something in the neighborhood of $7,000 this season.

Ottawa Citizen.

After one of the most stubbornly contested pennant races on record, the champion Ottawas went into first place in the Canadian Baseball League yesterday, by winning both games of a double-header from London. This is the first time that the Senators have been in the lead since the season opened and judging by the way they cut down the lead of nine and a half games, which London had on them less than three weeks ago, there is not a fan in the city who is not confident they will repeat their performances of 1912 and 1913, by carrying off the honors. It's a sad blow to London where the officers of the club as well as the ardent followers had already made arrangements to present every member of their club with a souvenir for copping the pennant. They never conceded Ottawa a chance. From the present outlook, however, their plans have gone astray. One big advantage London will have, however, is that the rest of their games will be at home, while the Ottawas have yet to play three games in Hamilton, starting next Monday. Reisling club will put up a big fight for the flag.

Outfielder Kroy, who was turned over to the Beavers from the Leafs, has been suspended for failure to report.

Doc. Reisling thinks that in Welsh and Rooney the Petes have two first-class outfielders. The former's catch back at the barns in yesterday's attraction was one of the features of the game. At bat he had two walks, a sacrifice and a single.

Rooney had tough luck with the willow yesterday, fanning once and hitting three infield flies on his other appearances.

Stanley Creswell had his second hit of the season yesterday. He should ever worry — think of King Cole.

When the constitution of the Mercantile League was drawn up a clause was inserted which allowed the various teams to sign up three outside men. In face of this, the Bankers have had Huycke, Long, Cavanah, Phelan, Sheehy and Hill figuring in league games and as a result the De Laval have protested last night's game.

The following players, from whom the All-Star team to play on Labor Day will be selected, are requested to turn out to practice on Saturday afertnoon at Riverside Park after the Canadian League game : Barrie, Swanson, Primeau, Callaghan, Hayes, Carson, Smith, Corrin, Huycke, Rahmel and Cranfield.

New York slipped a 9-2 defeat over the Cubs yesterday and St. Louis grabbed a 3-2 victory from Boston after a ten-inning struggle. This sends the Cards ahead of the Braves and leaves the Giants with a little larger lead. The four teams' standing is as follows :—

	Won.	Lost.	P.C.
New York	61	49	.555
St. Louis	64	54	.542
Boston	60	51	.541
Chicago	60	55	.522

Ottawa took Erie number while London was defeating the local and thus the Senators still retain ther lead. It is as follows :—

Ottawa	70	43	.619
London	64	40	.615

John K. Tener, President of the National League has fined Zimmerman and Evers $100 and Maranville $50 for the fracus at the Chicago-Boston game on Wednesday. Had not the run for the flag been so strenuous the players would undoubtedly have been suspended.

It is said that it takes nine tailors to make a man, but often double the number turns out a cad.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

MURPHY—ERLY.

St. Mary's R.C. Church was the scene of a pretty August wedding, when the marriage of Anna, fifth daughter of Mr. L. J. Erly, Worsley St., Barrie, to Mr. Joseph Murphy of Peterboro, was solemnized by the Rev. Dean Moyna, in the presence of a number of relatives and friends of the contracting parties. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Edna Erly of Toronto. Mr. and Mrs. Murphy left on the noon train for a short honeymoon.—Barrie Advance.

DOWNEY—McMULLEN.

A pretty wedding took place on Monday, August 24th, at Fulton, New York State, when Miss Ethel Margherita Downey, daughter of Mrs. Eugene M. Austin of that place was united in marriage to Mr. Walter M. McMullen, of Lindsay, Ont. The wedding was solemnized at the home of the bride's mother. The bride was beautifully gowned in white crepe de chine and carried a bouquet of white roses. The bridesmaid, Miss Lillian Austin, was also gowned in white and carried pink roses.

Mr. and Mrs. McMullen will reside at Lindsay.

Many thrilling stories of hardships are recounted in Canada by veterans who served in the South African War, but one must take into consideration the fact that the war is taking place in civilized countries, where there are buildings to shelter the troops. The long marches in South Africa were killers on the men whereas in the present conflict troops are transferred by way of railway wherever possible. And on the whole conditions are far more favorable for the troops than they were in the South African embroglio. This war will likely be at its highest pitch in the coming winter months and then the troops must be prepared for the cold. It is a good suggestion for all women to make donations in the form of hand-knitted sox, mittens, and mufflers. Madam may call on her neighbors with the good old fashioned ball of yarn and a half completed sox to help pass the time away instead of the present conventional piece of embroidery or fancy work.

Mr. S. W. Mill, Detroit, is in the city on business.

Mr. R. B. Evans, of Toronto, is registered at the Snowden House.

Mr. S. R. McCully, Toronto, is a guest at the White House.

Mr. M. MacMullen, Belleville, is in the city for a few days.

Mr. A. E. Wiltare, Ottawa, is in the city for a few days.

Mr. W. H. Adams, Vancouver, is in the city, the guest of friends.

Mr. G. E. Thompson, London, is in the city.

Mr. H. Roblin, Brighton, and Mr. A. Brown, Preston, are among the guests at the Snowden House.

Mrs. and Miss Dumble returned from Stoney Lake yesterday afternoon.

Messrs. Sandford Hall and M. McCarrell have returned from a visit to Stoney Lake.

Mr. Ray Williams, of the Bank of Toronto staff, Havelock, has been transferred to this city, and Mr. H. T. Law, of the head office staff, has been transferred to Havelock, in place of Mr. Wm. Affleck, who has gone to the war.

Miss Leona Hummel is visiting friends in Preston and Toronto for a few weeks.

Mr. J. L. Squire received word from his daughter, Miss Gertrude Squire, that she had safely arrived in England from Paris, France, after a strenuous trip. Miss Squire, who is a trained nurse, also states that she has offered her services in that capacity to the war department. Her parents and relatives here were much relieved of their anxiety to receive word of her safe arrival in England.—Norwood Register.

Miss Jennie C. McNaughton, who has recently graduated from Peterborough Normal school, has also received the certificate qualifying her as "instructor in physical training." This certificate was accompanied by a bonus of $15 from the Strathcona Trust.—Norwood Register.

The Women's Auxiliary of All Saints' Church, held an enjoyable outing to Gore's Landing yesterday. The trip was well patronized.

PROTEST TO NEUTRAL NATIONS

French Government Says the Germans Fired on Red Cross Nurses

Canadian Press Despatch.

Washington, Aug. 28. — France has submitted to the United States and other neutral governments a sworn statement that after the engagement at Mons, a German officer fired on three Red Cross nurses killing two and wounding a third. Marielle Jouy a nurse who was wounded, swore that after the battle on August 15 she was attending wounded with two other nurses when a German officer opened fire on them from a distance of less than thirty feet. The bullet shattered her arm she stated and she fainted.

On recoving consciousness she found her two companions were dead beside her with bullets in their bodies. All three nurses her statement says plainly wore the insignia of the Red Cross.

The French Government is protesting that this act is a violation of the Geneva convention of 1906 and says it exemplifies the savage character of the war.

Were Near to Shipwrecked Crew

Shortage of Gasoline Prevented Rescue of Karluk Men

Nome, Alaska, Aug. 28.—Relief was within 15 miles of Wrangell Island, where the shipwrecked crew of the Karluk, one of the vessels of the Stefansson Canadian exploration party, are reported marooned since last Winter, but a shortage of gasoline prevented their rescue. This is the report brought here yesterday by Capt. Annevik, of the power schooner P. J. Abler, when he returned from a walrus hunting voyage into the Arctic.

"There was no ice along the Siberian coast as far north as we went," said Capt. Annevik, "but we could see a heavy pack surrounding Wrangell Island. We were within fifteen miles of the island when a heavy fog set in, and as our gasoline supply was running low, we dared not attempt to make our way through the ice floes around the island, so turned about and came back to Nome. A strong north-westerly breeze has shifted the ice so favorably that the revenue cutter Bear, on which Capt. Robert Bartlett has gone to rescue his crew, will have no trouble in reaching the island."

The Bear is now supposed to be in the vicinity of Point Barrow, her last call before turning westward to pick up the twenty-one men and one woman stranded on Wrangell Island.

Don't help your friends in their downward course by close questions that make them skillful in evasion.

NAMUR

Has always been considered point of great strategic value.

Namur lies almost 33 miles west and a little to the south of Liege, and about 36 miles northeast is Brussels. Waterloo is nearer than Brussels. The city is situated on the left bank of the River Sambre, and contains an ancient citadel upon a rocky promontory, for hundreds of years Namur's strength against its enemies. The promptings of the general staff of Belgium, and doubtless the wisdom of Leopold the Second, led, in 1888, to a complete revision of the city's defences. Under the direction of General Brialmont, a circle of nine forts was planned, completely surrounding Namur, and on their completion the ancient citadel and its detached works were abandoned. The forts were not all completed until 1895. They are bomb proof, steel and cement, as at Liege, and doubtless would not crumble before anything but heavy artillery.

The Nine Forts.

Starting on the left bank of the Meuse, the nine forts are, first, Fort St. Heribert, about four miles from the river and three and three-quarters of a mile from No. 2, Fort Malonne. From Malonne to the third, Sualee, which immediately overlooks the historic field of Quatre Bras, is a little over five miles. From Sualee to Emines is about five and one-half miles — Emines to Congnelee a little under five miles; Congnelee to Gelbresse two and one-half miles; Gelbresse to Malzertt nearly six miles; Malzeret to Audoy four miles, and Audoy to the ninth fort at Dave, on the right bank of the river, is also four miles. The closeness of Fort Malzeret to the river, about nine hundred yards on the road running from Huy, and the closeness of Fort Dave to the river on the road going to Charleroi, about 650 yards, and the dominance by the forts of all the roads leading out to Namur, is very striking. Almost every fort can be defended by all of the forts, for each road there are one or two forts that should make that road impassable.

Area of Defence.

The forts are two to five miles from the city, all on high ground, about 200 to 220 feet higher than the Meuse or Sambre, and not much less than that above the city of Namur. With their direct fire outwards these forts should project a very much greater circumference than this circle of about eleven miles in diameter. With their cross fire they should have made any attempt to pass into Namur, between two forts, a hopeless one. Naturally there is the same system of wire entanglements, overturned trees, ditches and the like which are already in place between each two of the forts, a structure for defence which is reported to have paralyzed many assaults at Liege.

Namur is a quaint, attractive city, its useless ramparts, its three bridges, citadel and old-time buildings being very inviting to the eye. It is the capital of the province of Namur and has a population of about 35,000. The town is noted for its cutlery and leather goods. It is not very often visited by tourists because it has been the sport and the defiance of so many wars that it lost noble building after building which, were they now in existence, would be so old and architecturally attractive as to turn the place into a traveller's shrine.

It is said to have been the site of a Roman camp after its capture by Julius Caesar 2,000 years ago. During the Middle Ages it was always a post of importance. In 1578 Don Juan of Austria made it his headquarters, and died there. In 1692 it was captured by Louis XIV. of France, and the great Vauban put forth all his engineering skill in an attempt to make Namur impregnable. William III. of England took it from the French in 1695. In 1702 the French recaptured it and held it for ten years. Then the Austrians got it, and lost it to the French in 1746, and again in 1792. Subsequently the citadel was demolished, but it was restored in 1817 during the union with the Netherlands. Marchal Grouchy of France, while retreating with his forces in 1815, fought a battle with the Prussians at Namur, and Blucher had previously quartered his army there — for Namur has always been considered by soldiers a point of great strategic value.

Hydro Electric Plants Throughout Germany

The greater part of Germany being flat, that country is not usually considered as prominent in the development of hydro-electric plants, but a recent report to the United States government on hydro-electric plants in Germany shows that there are some large generating stations of this character.

Germany has brought the generation of electric energy by steam power up to a high point and in Berlin there is over 250,000 horsepower capacity in steam plants, and in Westphalia and the Rhine provinces there are many generating plants driven by gas motors. At Halle on the Saale river steam and Diesel motors produce 16,000 horse-power. So far as can be learned there is no American machinery in the German electric plants, either steam, gas or hydro-electric, all generators and other equipment being of German manufacture.

The most important hydro-electric development in Germany is at Wyhlen, near Basel, Switzerland, where Allgemeine Elektrizitats-Gesellschaft machinery produces 40,000 horse-power. The works are controlled by the Kraftubertragungs-Werke-Dhienfelden, with headquarters at Badisch Rhienfelden, where another large plant is located power in both instances being derived from the Rhine. The Whylen station was opened in September, 1912, after being under construction almost five years.

Profits are Limited.

The plant at Rhienfelden was begun in 1897. The company has a capital of $2,856,000. This is a joint German and Swiss undertaking and the Canton of Basle City is represented on the board of managers and in the financial management. Profits of the company are limited by the term of the concession and should they exceed a certain return the consumers are entitled to a reduction. For 1913 net earnings of the company were $251,326 and a regular dividend of 8 p.c., and an extra dividend of 4 p.c. were paid on the capital.

Energy is furnished to a population of about 50,000. Prices for lighting are $1.26 for 10 candle power metal filament lamps a year. $1.90 for 16 candlepower and $3.09 for 25 candlepower when used in bedrooms, drawing-rooms, cellars, stables and warehouses. For the same lamps $2.28, $3.80, and $5.71 a year respectively are charged when used in living rooms, kitchens, passages, offices and workshops. For metal filament lamps 5.7 cents a year and 0.5 cents a year a candlepower is charged.

Prices for power run from 2.14 cents per kilowatt hour for the first 10,000 kilowatt hours to 1.07 cents a kilowatt hour from 80,000 to 12,000 kilowatt hours. Above 150,000 kilowatt hours a price of 9.5 mills a kilowatt hour is made. The total cost of the plant was $2,181,176. There were several important hydro-electric works under construction at the outbreak of the war. Among these was one at Laufenburg on the Rhine and one at Neuhausen, where 10,000 horse-power was to be generated for reduction of aluminum, but the greatest enterprise of all was at Walchensee, near Munich, where 50,000 horsepower was to be developed.

Have Steam Auxiliary.

In all there are 34 hydro-electric plants in Germany of which 10 have steam auxiliary. Three plants are under construction with an aggregate capacity of 105,000 horsepower and fourteen plants are proposed with an aggregate of over 400,000 horsepower. In addition it is estimated that there are 700,000 horsepower of hydro-electric energy available in Bavaria and over 300,000 horsepower at several points on the Rhine. The cananization of the Main, Oder and Mosel rivers is planned to be utilized for hydro-electric purposs.

It was recently that Germany started hydro-electric development on a large scale but within the last two years her manufacturers have been investigating the resources of the country in this respect with the view of conserving the coal deposits. With an abundant supply of cheap hydro-electric power the German manufacture would have been still further ahead in the race for industrial supremacy. In this hydro-electric development private capital was being assisted materially by the state and but for the war Germany soon would have been an important factor in the generation of electrical energy by water power.

With the awful drain which will be made on the country's resources, industrially, financially and through loss of skilled mechanics, by the war, it is doubtful if the enterprises will be carried out as planned for many years to come.

CONVERTING MANSIONS AND CASTLES INTO HOSPITALS FOR THE WOUNDED

London, Aug. 28.—Historic castles, country mansions and luxurious yachts are being turned into hospitals, convalescent homes and Red Cross depots. The authorities are overwhelmed with offers, and the owners in most cases are providing a full equipment for the houses and craft and paying for their maintenance.

The Duke of Devonshire has lent Devonshire House, a famous palatial old mansion in Piccadilly, for the headquarters of the British Red Cross Society. The great hall is filled with tables, desks and enquiry counters, and an aristocratic staff is working on the plans of organization. The ducal reception room in the mansion is a vast workshop, in which Queen-Mother Emilie of Portugal, Princess Christian, and many other titled and society women are engaged there daily in office work.

The dining room of Marlborough House, the town residence of Queen Alexandra, has been converted into a workroom, where prominent women, under Princess Victoria, cut out garments for soldiers and sailors. Princess Marie Louise has equipped her club house for factory girls as a hospital.

BRITAIN'S BIG NEED IS A NATIONAL ARMY

Plea of Earl Roberts For Greater Land Force to Resist Invasion if Navy Failed

"I do not believe there is a man in the United Kingdom who believes in the necessity for a Home Defence army who will not admit that the methods of the younger nations for filling the ranks of their citizen forces are far superior to those of the mother country."

These are the words of Field-Marshal Earl Roberts spoken at a meeting at Bedford in furtherance of the objects of the National Service League.

"May I tell you how the ranks of the citizen forces are filled in Australia?" the veteran warrior went on. "On July 1st in each year the oldest boys of the senior cadets, if found medically fit, are drafted automatically to the citizen forces of the Commonwealth, and I am glad to learn that this transfer of trained recruits, the picked young men of the district, to the local unit of the Australian Army is, in some at least of the States of Australia, made the occasion of an impressive ceremony. The whole of the senior cadet brigade parades with the infantry brigade. To the tune of 'Auld Lang Syne' from the massed bands, the year's contribution leave the ranks of their respective senior cadet battalions, and take up their new position in the centre of their future infantry regiments. While each regimental march is rendered the rolls of the arrivals are checked, and record books handed over by the area officers to the adjutant. The regiment then marches in quarter column down the line of senior Cadets, who are in line two deep. The regimental march and the fine, steady carriage of their older comrades—the 1894 and 1895 quotas—are an object lesson to them. They cannot help giving a cheer. They look forward to the time when they, too, will step into the ranks of Australia's Army of to-day."

At another stage of his speech, Earl Roberts said: "The Greeks, the Carthaginians, the Romans—one after the other fell because they neglected to take the necessary steps to guard themselves and their possessions, and to come to more recent times, let me remind you of what happened to the Prussians and the French. They shut their eyes to what was going on around them. They refused to inquire into the condition of their armies, and they fell.

"It is true that we are an island, and it is also true that, for centuries past, we were comparatively free from anxiety about invasion, though even then—notably at the beginning of the last century, when Napoleon was at Boulogne with a large army under his command—it was considered necessary to raise troops and to take other special precautions to prevent a landing being affected. But at that time we were absolutely masters on the ocean. The French Navy had been crippled by Nelson's great victory in Trafalgar Bay, and no other nation, or collection of nations, had a Navy which could hope to compete with our fleets. All this is now changed. Our supremacy at sea is being challenged, for—although no one nation has so large or so powerful a navy as we still possess—no nation, or collection of nations, has anything like the responsibilities of our Navy.

"Our fleets cannot all be concentrated in home waters; some of the smaller ships have to be stationed in various parts of the Empire, and there is an increasing necessity to send back some battleships to the Mediterranean. Further—and this is of enormous importance—they have to ensure the safe and regular arrival of the merchant vessels conveying our food and trade supplies. It is in this fact that our main weakness lies—a weakness which it ought to be possible to bring home to anyone who will give the matter a moment's thought.

"We must, of course, depend on our fleets to keep open the waters by which our food supplies and raw materials are brought to this country, for if these fell into hostile hands we should be starved into submission. In the open seas, and with our fleets untrammelled by being tied to these shores, we need have no doubt about their being able to do all that would be required of them; but in narrow seas, like those by which we are encircled, can we, under existing conditions, feel as certain about their being enabled to carry out the onerous duty of protecting these shores unless there is an efficient military force in this country of sufficient strength to deal with an invading army? And if there is the slightest doubt on this vitally important matter, would it not be madness to trust to the Navy alone?"

CANADIAN VOLUNTEERS

How Recruits Must Measure up Before the Sergeant.

Following are the physical qualifications for Canadians volunteering for service overseas:

In the artillery the gunners have to be five feet seven inches or over and the drivers five feet three inches. The chest measurement must not be less than 34½ inches.

For the engineers the height for the sappers must be five feet four inches and over; for the pioneers five feet seven inches and over. The chest measurement must be the same as for the artillery, not less than 34½ inches.

The infantry's minimum height has been cut to five feet three incehs, and the chest measurement not less than 33½ inches.

In the Army Service Corps, horse transport, the height for drivers must also be five feet three inches and over and for the supply and military train branch the same. The chest measurement must be a minimum of 33½ inches.

In the Army Medical Corps the height and chest measurement must be the same and the age limit for all between 18 and 45 years.

Reward For Services.

The appointment of Mr. Edmond James Flynn, K.C., of the city of Quebec, to be a puisne-judge of the Superior Court of the Province of Quebec for the Judicial District of Montmagny and Beauce, recalls to many Canadians a public man whose name was a household word in the Province of Quebec, and throughout Canada, too, a few years ago, but who has comparatively dropped out of notice of some years. For many years he was one of the most active politicians in his native province, and for a brief time he was Premier thereof.

A REMARKABLE PAIR.

Marquis and Marchioness of Townshend In "Movey" Business.

Few living couples of their age have had such strange and varied careers as the Marquis and Marchioness Townshend, the latter of whom has of late been engaged in the cinematograph business and writing and playing in film dramas. Her ladyship is a member of the Poets' Club and to her credit stands a volume of poems entitled "In the King's Garden!" Lady Townshend was formerly Miss Gladys Sutherst, the daughter of a London barrister-at-law, and how she became a British marchioness is one of the romances of the modern peerage. Her husband, the little Marquis Townshend—he is less than 5 feet in height—is the representative of one of the knightliest families in the old nobility of England, including soldiers who fought at Cadiz and Dettingen, at Culloden and Quebec; ambassadors, admirals and statesmen. This sturdy race degenerated in the nineteenth century to a Marquis Townshend, who came into an estate worth an annual hundred thousand pounds, with property in three counties, and who died in 1899, leaving his only son the present lord, with just nothing a year!

Lord Townshend plunged into extravagance himself pretty early in life, in spite of the fact that his property was mortgaged to the tune of £165,000.

The Marchioness Townshend is an able woman. Under the ruling of the court she was regarded as the custodian of her husband, and, it is said, Lord Townshend has been carefully nursed by his wife. He never was a lunatic, in the ordinary sense of the word, but his application (and that of his wife) to be allowed to attend the meetings of the trustees of his estate under the Lunacy Commissioners was refused by all the judges. Since then Raynham Hall has looked up a lot, and it is by no means impossible that the day may come when his lordship and his lady will be able to live there. It has been in possession of the Townshends for hundreds of years.

The royal family have more than an ordinary interest in Lord Townshend. After the marquis, General Townshend is heir to the title, but he is not the next-of-kin, that position falling to Princess Arthur of Connaught and Princess Maud of Fife, the two daughters of the late Duke of Fife, who was the brother of the Dowager Marchioness Townshend, Lord Townshend's mother.

A Scene in Strassburg

Guttenburg Platz, in Strassburg, the city of Alsace-Lorraine toward which the French force which captured the city of Kolmar, 40 miles distant, was marching. Next to Metz, Strassburg is the most important fortified city in Alsace-Lorraine.

A HUGE TUNNEL

C.P.R.'s Hole Through Selkirks is Biggest on Continent.

More than a thousand men are working night and day in the vast amphitheatre formed by the eternal snow-crowned mountains of the Selkirk Range in Northwest Canada, carrying to success one of the greatest tunnel projects ever undertaken on this continent. They are boring the railroad tunnel through the Selkirk Mountains in British Columbia. In this work more than two years was spent in preliminaries, the selection of the proper place to drive the bore, the surveying and excavation work before the real tunneling could be begun. The project is officially known as the Rogers Pass Tunnel. It will, it is said, cost more than $10,000,000. The tunnel will penetrate Mount Macdonald and it will rank as the longest railroad bore in America. The Hoosac Tunnel at North Adams, Mass., is at present the longest, being four and three-quarter miles through. The Rogers Pass Tunnel will be five miles long.

This is being done to cut four miles from the Canadian Pacific Railroad route to the Pacific, to obviate the present necessity of using two long spiral "loops" on the Western slope and many miles of snow sheds, doing away with some big grades, and above all else making possible the abandonment of one of the most costly sections of railway from an operating standpoint.

The western entrance to the tunnel will be about 1,700 feet below and a short distance west of Glacier. The main shaft will have room for double tracks. The tunnel will be fully 29 feet wide and 23 high.

The tunnel will follow a straight line under Mount Macdonald, emerging in the Beaver Valley at a point about 1,000 feet below the present line of the railroad. The eastern entrance is almost immediately below Hermit, a flag station east of Rogers Pass and forty-seven miles west of Golden. The contractors are following a new method in tunnelling. They are projecting what is known as the pioneer bore. This is a preliminary shaft 7 by 9 feet, which will parallel the course of the main tunnel fifty feet distant, and will be bored from both ends at the same time. One of the principal reasons for the adoption of the pioneer bore was the fact that the C.P.R. wished to have the undertaking completed by the first of 1916, three and a half years after the work was started. Another great advantage is that the pioneer bore is a ventilator. It will also serve as a permanent ventilating shaft when the work is completed.

Amended.

In a book of musical criticism the author alluded in flattering terms to the works of his friend Herr Q. Unfortunately during the printing of the volume the two friends quarrelled. Then the offended author had inserted in each copy of the book a slip of paper with the following note: "Erratum page 94, line 21, for 'Herr Q., the eminent composer and distinguished musician,' read 'Herr Q., the pretentious violinist and impudent and clumsy plagiarist!'" — London Mail.

WOMEN AND WAR

Throughout the ages women have at least equaled men in patriotism. Where has one heard of women withholding their dear ones from the defence line? How many times in history have British mothers, daughters, wives and sweethearts bravely cheered their kinsmen on the way to battle, and done their weeping in secret afterwards?

Sir Isaac Brock's fiancee handed him a stirrup cup before he rode away up the Niagara River to a glorious death at Queenston Heights. Laura Secord carried the message through the forest to Beaver Dams. Florence Nightingale braved the snows of a Crimean winter that thereafter sick and wounded soldiers might be nursed by feminine hands. Many Canadian nurses have volunteered for service during the present war, and many others of our women must sit at home and wait in anxiety for news of sons, brothers and husbands at the front.

THE MAKING OF STEEL RAILS

How the Glowing Ingots Are Rolled Into Shape and Cut.

That rail mill was certainly a wonderful sight! The enormous glowing ingots were carried on a transfer car to a sort of trough. The floor of the trough, or "table," as they call it, consisted of a series of rollers that were turning rapidly. Riding on them, the big, clumsy ingot sailed along until it bumped against a pair of large steel rolls. Immediately the rolls seized it and hauled it through, like clothes through a clothes wringer. We could not see that it had been flattened down very much, but we noticed that deep corrugations had been cut into its upper surface.

As it moved on the rollers turned it over on its side before it was caught by the next pair or "stand" of rolls. It went through four stands in succession, turning over between each stand until it had made a complete turn. Then it came to what is called a "three high" mill, which has three rolls, one above the other. First the "bloom," as it was now called, went between the middle and bottom rolls, but no sooner had it emerged than it was raised bodily, the supporting roller "tables" on both sides of the mill being raised up simultaneously.

The rollers of the tables were then reversed, causing the bloom to start back between the middle and top rolls. The tables were now lowered, their rollers reversed and the bloom sent through between the middle and bottom rolls, as before, but this time it was switched to one side, where the rolls were a little larger in diameter, and it was a tighter squeeze getting through them.

And so the bloom went back and forth, being switched over to a tighter pass each time until it was squeezed down to about eight inches square and over forty feet long. Then it was cut in two, and each bloom went through another set of rolls that gradually worked it down to the size and shape of a rail. It was fascinating to watch that snakelike bar over a hundred feet long writhing as if alive.

As it came back for its last sally through the rolls a whistle was blown as a warning that the rolling was finished, and the rail was now on its way to the saws. There were five circular saws that dropped down upon the glowing metal and amid a shower of sparks sawed it into four ten-yard rails. After that the rails were carried off on "run out tables" to the "hot beds" to cool.—St. Nicholas.

In the Hanging Days.

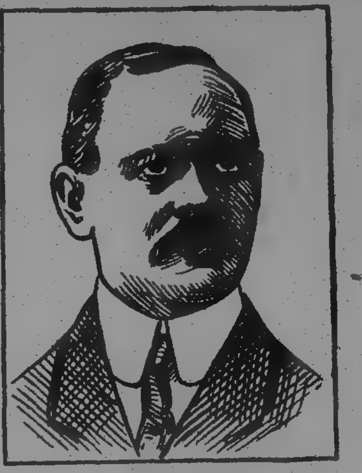
Coke, in the time of Queen Elizabeth, remarks on the large number of persons hanged in England. In 1750 a great increase of crime occurred, and in the following year sixty-three persons were hanged in the small London of these days. But many more were sentenced than were actually hanged. In England in 1785 there were 242 sentenced, and 103 actually suffered. Townsend, the Bow street runner, said that between 1781 and 1787 he had seen as many as twelve, sixteen or twenty hanged at one execution. Twice he had seen forty hanged at one time.

A. W. CAMBPELL WHO STARTED "GOOD ROADS"

Was Pioneer Agitator in Ontario for Better Highways.

A group of farmers and a derby hatted, city-suited person of giant proportions were engaged in road building. The scene was near Gananoque in Eastern Ontario, and the farmers were sceptically watching the trying out of a new machine. There was an engineer along to operate the machine, but something went wrong with it and it would not operate properly. The farmers smiled knowingly among themselves, although they politely tried to hide their amusement from the eyes under the derby hat.

Then something came to pass that gave a new turn to events. The man with the derby hat and the creased trousers stepped up on the machine. The farmers allowed their smiles to escape a little from control, and looked hard at the "city chap." They were now waiting confidently for an opportunity to "chortle" openly. But soon their smiles faded away. The "city chap" seemed to know how to work that machine. Its wheels began to revolve. It began to do its work, and the man in the derby and the freshly-pressed suit sat in his seat and made a new and a good piece of road.



MR. A. W. CAMPBELL.

The "city chap" was Mr. Archibald W. Campbell, now Deputy Minister of the Department of Railway and Canals for the Dominion. The incident took place in the early days of the good roads movement in Ontario.

So widely known did Mr. Campbell become for his work in this connection that it was almost forgotten that he had been christened "Archibald William." He received a new christening by the ordination of the people, and was known everywhere simply as "Good Roads Campbell." Mr. Campbell started the agitation for the improvement of the roads of the province when he was city engineer of St. Thomas. He threw himself heart and soul into the campaign and became vice-president of the Good Roads Association, and in 1896 was made Good Roads Commissioner for the province. While occupying that office and later as Deputy Minister of Public Works for Ontario he carried on the administration of the "Good Roads" laws; and as late as 1909—shortly before he came to take up his present duties at the federal capital—he went as a delegate from Ontario to the Good Roads Congress at Seattle.

The present Deputy Minister of Railways is an old Middlesex boy. He was born at Wardsville in that county in 1863, and so has just recently passed the half century mark. He got his early schooling there and at the High School of St. Thomas. From school he turned to the engineering profession, into which he graduated at the age of 22. Six years later he became city engineer of the Railway City, and it was there that he began his campaign for good roads.

It is now somewhat over four years since he left the civil service of Ontario, where he was Deputy Minister of Public Works, and came to Ottawa to take charge of the Department of Railways and Canals. When Mr. M. J. Butler left the Government service to enter the service of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, Hon. George P. Graham was Minister of Railways and Canals; and remembering the good work that Mr. Campbell had done for the province, Mr. Graham brought him down to take over the administration of the Government railways and canals. As Deputy Minister he became automatically chairman of the board of management of the Intercolonial and of the Prince Edward Island Railways; and he held this responsible position with honor until the present regime replaced the board of management by a single general manager, Mr. F. P. Gutelius. He is still, as Deputy Minister, responsible for the proper administration of the road, although under the present system the details of the management are centred at Moncton.

Homestead Entries Decrease.

Homestead entries in Western Canada during the month of May numbered 2,438, as against 3,479 in May, 1913, a decrease of 1,041. For the first five months of this year the net decrease was 1,107. Manitoba increased from 877 to 1,311, but British Columbia fell from 887 to 305. The homesteaders during May included one New Zealander, one Newfoundlander and one African in Saskatchewan, and a Chinaman in Alberta.

JAPAN AS A POWER

Japan's population, 67,142,798.

Approximate area, 162,000 square miles.

The empire is composed of 4,000 islands; only about 500 are inhabited.

Japan's total war strength, 1,200,000.

Peace strength, 230,000.

Reserves, 970,000.

Harunomiya, the emperor, supreme commander of the army.

Gen. Baron Uyehara, war minister.

Gen. Viscount Hasekawa, chief of staff.

Admirals of the fleet, Count Ito and Viscount Inouye.

These leaders command a force of 1,200,000 soldiers; 44,000 officers and a navy of 13 armored cruisers, four battleships and a torpedo fleet of 129. The naval force—officers and men numbers 49,389.

SUBMARINE MINES

One Kind is Controlled From Shore—Others Fired.

Submarine mines are divided into two main classes, "controllable" and "uncontrollable," or as they are often termed "electrical" and "mechanical." In the first class the method of firing is by electricity. The source of the power whether from battery or dynamo is contained in a firing station on shore, which is connected up to the mines by insulated cables. By simply switching off the electric power such mines are rendered inert and powerless. The power which fires mechanical mines comes either from a self-contained small electric battery or from a pistol, spring, or suspended weight. In all mines of this class the impulse which starts the firing gear comes from a ship or floating object bumping against the mine. Mechanical mines thus set for firing are dangerous to friend and foe alike. The principal advantages of uncontrollable mines are their cheapness and the rapidity with which they can be laid.

Electrical mines take longer to prepare and lay out. They are usually arranged on two systems—"observation" and "circuit-closer." The first depends on two careful observations made by the shore operator, one of the exact mine positions, the other of the track of hostile ships passing over the field. The position is then charted on a map, and the track of ships crossing the mine field is also plotted. When the track is seen to be crossing the mines the switch is closed and the mines sprung.

These mines are arranged in lines of two, all mines in a line being fired together. They are either moored on the bottom or at sufficient depth to be harmless to friendly traffic.

In the "Circuit-clocer" or "C. C." system, each mine contains a small piece of apparatus which is set in motion by a blow from a vessel. Such an impact completes an electrical circuit through which the mine can be fired. If it is not wished to fire, the "C. C." is automatically restored to its ordinary condition, by a spring. These mines are near the surface and are used in side-channels, which it is intended to close entirely. They are also used to reduce the width of navigable channels.

They are effective in foggy or misty weather. The powder charge is small and they are easy to lay.

Any explosive can be used in submarine mines, but the explosive which is in general use is wet guncotton with a small dry primer, and a detonator to start ignition.

Ancestral Pride.

"Do you still want this genealogy?" asked the man who digs up such things.

"Sure, I do. Why not?"

"Well, I've found that your great-great-grandfather was hanged for murder, your great-grandfather was imprisoned for robbery, and your grandfather was tarred and feathered for beating his wife. That's not a very proud record, is it?"

"I should say it is. Shows how my family is getting better each generation. I'm an improvement on the whole bunch—never been in jail yet. Let me have those records. I'm proud of 'em!"

Shrewd Deduction.

"She must have a very clever husband."

"What makes you think so?"

SHREWD SAMMIS

The Elevator Boy's Hints For Office Building Tenants.

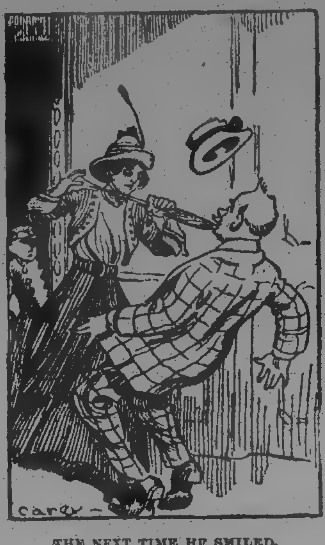
By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.]

AFTER getting settled in your office call the elevator boy up and have a frank, friendly talk. Give him full information in regard to your business affairs and show you have an interest in his career.

Never attempt to deceive the elevator boy as to your financial standing and the amount of business doing. It rests with him whether your creditors get up to your room or not.

Should you remark that there are reasons why a long jawed, gray eyed woman with a mole on her chin should be frozen out in case she inquires for you by name the boy will understand that your home has been broken up through no fault of yours.



THE NEXT TIME HE SMILED.

Owing to the responsibilities resting on his shoulders, the elevator boy never jokes on duty, and undue familiarity is certain to prejudice him against a tenant. Be friendly, but don't overdo it.

A tenant on the eighth floor who wishes to form the acquaintance of a good looking stenographer on the seventh floor makes a great mistake when he leaves the elevator boy out of his scheme and pays a scrubwoman 25 cents to hand in a bouquet and his card.

Inviting an elevator boy out to lunch in order to pump him about the blond in the insurance office, or the brunette in the paper pattern agency, is bad form. He feels that an attempt is being made to betray his confidence through his love for tomato soup and roast beef. It is much better to call him into the office, hand him $2 and state your case plainly.

When the elevator boy is handed a note and asked to deliver it at a certain room the sum of 50 cents should always accompany it. This is in no sense a bribe. It simply saves long winded explanation. The boy at once recognizes the fact that the note is strictly a business affair—probably relating to the interest on a mortgage or the purchase of real estate—and he loses no time in placing it in the hands of the typewriter to whom it is addressed. He also feels morally bound not to mention the matter to any other tenant.

The janitor of a skyscraper has certain powers, and the agent is a man to be referred to, but a tenant who leaves the elevator boy out of his calculations will get badly left. It was only last week that a young man in the woolen goods agency planned to get down to the front door at 12 o'clock to ask the girl in the hook and eye room to lunch with him. He had not taken me into his confidence. Between the seventh and the eighth floors I stuck the elevator for twelve minutes, and the hook and eye girl walked off with the glassware man and was lost forever.

One day I was taking up the suspender man and the girl in the railroad supply office. I noticed him smiling at her in a melting way He knew that I noticed it, and, after she had got out be said:

"Sammis, did you know that girl was an orphan?"

"No, sir."

"Yes, she is all alone in this world and her job is paying only seven dollars a week."

"And you were smiling to encourage her?"

"Exactly, Sammis. Yes, I wanted her to realize that although the world at large was cold and heartless, there were yet a few people whose hearts were not entirely frozen up."

"Hadn't you better take me into your confidence, sir?" I asked as he got out.

"I'll take you by the hair of your head instead, you young reprobate!" he said.

The next day I went to the railroad supply girl in a fatherly way and told her of the suspender man's wife and seven children, and the next time he smiled at her she poked him in the chin with her umbrella and threatened to haul him into court. SAMMIS.

I want to be a granger—
So ran an ancient ditty
By one who was a stranger
To aught except the city,
Who had a peck of notions
That farmers' ways consisted
In going through the motions
And coming home fat fisted.

He thought of gayly hoeing
Tomatoes tall and waving,
Of singing songs and mowing
The lawn that needed shaving,
Of getting bees in training
To fill his pail with honey
And from their efforts gaining
A load of easy money.

For him the plot would thicken
Until it was a winner
If he could raise a chicken
Already cooked for dinner
And pick his bread and butter
On little bushes cunning,
So visitors would mutter,
"My, isn't it just stunning?"

Then ho for scenes exciting,
Out where the grass is waving,
Where plenty comes a-kiting
And properly behaving!
That was the way he put it
When by the thought enchanted,
But back he had to foot it
Before the crops were planted.

BOWSER'S ASYLUM

It is to be a Haven of Rest for Homeless Dogs

By M. QUAD

[Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.]

"ANYTHING come up for me this afternoon?" asked Mr. Bowser as he entered the house the other evening.

"Nothing," replied Mrs. Bowser.

"That's funny."

"Did you expect a goat to be left here?"

"No matter. It will come along soon."

"I saw a man go past with a coon in a box."

"I'm not in the coon business."

"If it's a camel I'd better watch out for it."

"You'd better get the dinner on."

During the meal Mr. Bowser seemed preoccupied and talked very little, but no calamity occurred. They had finished when the basement bell rang, and a minute later a discussion was heard between the cook and a small boy who had a dog at his heels. Mr. Bowser hurried downstairs and was absent for a quarter of an hour. When he returned Mrs. Bowser looked at him in a way that called for an explanation, and he explained:

"It was a boy with a dog. I have shut the dog up in the shed."

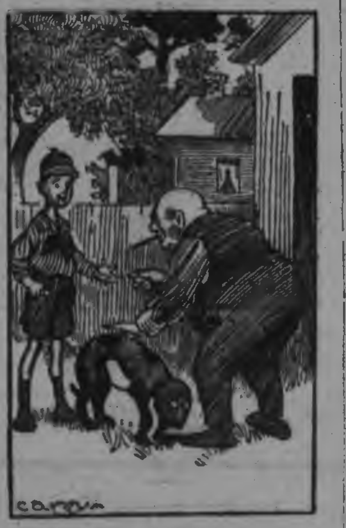
"But what do we want of a dog?" she queried.

"Nothing, my dear. Have you ever noticed how many homeless dogs there are on the street?"

"No, I never did."

A Cold Hearted Person.

"I didn't suppose you had, knowing how selfish and cold hearted you are,



THE BOYS WERE IN LUCK.

but I have. At this very minute there are probably 1,000 friendless, homeless dogs wandering about the city."

"And is that our fault?"

"In one way, no. In another way, we have a duty to perform. As human beings—as men and women with souls and hearts—we should take heed of the sufferings of the brute creation. What is more sad than to see a poor dog skulking about in fear and hunger? That he is an outcast and outlaw is not his fault. The world owes him a living the same as it does a man. Humanity owes him food and kind treatment."

"Perhaps you are going to found a dog asylum?" observed Mrs. Bowser after awhile.

"You have hit it exactly," he replied as the cat came out from under the lounge and sniffed the atmosphere as if she suspected the presence of a canine. "Yes, ma'am, I have established a home for friendless dogs, and it already has an occupant. I have arranged with several boys to bring me every friendless dog they can find. Each canine shall have bed and board for a couple of weeks at least, and I have no fear that the public will not take them off my hands. You are not with me in this charity, of course, but I shall carry it through just the same. There goes the bell, and that means another dog."

Mr. Bowser opened the door to find another boy and another dog. He was paying the lad and giving him words of praise at the same time when the family cat, which had followed him downstairs, took a hand in it. With a yeowl and a howl she lit on the dog's back, and for two or three minutes Mr. Bowser, the boy, the dog and the cat were all mixed up. Then the cat retreated, and the dog was conducted to the asylum.

The Cook Makes a Fuss.

"What's all this about?" demanded the cook as Mr. Bowser returned through the kitchen.

"My dear woman, I am being kind to homeless dogs," he replied.

"Are there others to come?"

"I hope so. Yes, I am in hope to pick up about fifty more."

"Then I quit my job in the mornin'. I have never yet worked in a dog asylum, and, please heaven, I never will! No use to talk to me, sir. I can stand a cat or two around, and I can put up with a cranky man, but I'm no lady assistant in a dog asylum."

"I suppose you have been conspiring with the girl," said Mr. Bowser, as he got back upstairs. "But she can quit and be hanged to her! I know I'm right in this thing. I know that my course is dictated by the sentiment of mercy, and the dog asylum shall go on in spite of everything."

Mrs. Bowser was slipping upstairs without a word in reply when the bell rang again and dog No. 3 was at hand. He had scarcely been "asylumed" when Nos. 4 and 5 showed up. The boys were in luck. It was cash down and words of encouragement in every case. By 10 o'clock Mr. Bowser had nine dogs in the shed, and after exhausting the scraps in the kitchen he had sent to the butcher's for meat and bones. He was enjoying that complacency felt by all men who have nobly performed a duty when there came a loud peal at the front door. He hastened to open it, to find a woman on the steps.

A Cloud on the Horizon.

"A nice sort of man you are, I must say! Where's my dog?"

"Your dog, madam?" he quoted.

"Yes, my dog! He was stolen out of the yard half an hour ago, and the boy was seen to enter this house. So you've got down to encouraging boys to steal dogs, have you? I'll have him or bring the police here!"

"My dear woman, don't get excited. If your dog is here he was taken by mistake, and I am sorry for it. I received him as a homeless, friendless canine."

The dog was found among those in the shed, and the woman went away muttering and scolding. She had not been gone ten minutes and Mr. Bowser was about to lock up for the night, when the doorbell was almost jerked out by the roots. It was a man this time. He pushed his way into the hall, and, shaking his fist under Mr. Bowser's nose, he shouted:

"You miserable old dog thief, but I am going to drive your head through the wall!"

"What—what's the—matter?" was the stammering query.

"The matter is that you are encouraging a band of hoodlums to steal people's dogs and that one of them has stolen mine and brought him here. Trot him right out or I'll thump you till you can't holler!"

"My dear man"—

"Trot him out, I say!"

The asylum was visited and the missing dog recovered, and his still indignant owner talked fight till the gate closed behind him. Mr. Bowser was wondering over the wickedness of his assistants when Mrs. Bowser appeared.

"Don't you think it would be a good idea to turn the rest of the dogs loose and abolish the home?" she queried.

"Never!" shouted Mr. Bowser. "I set out to establish a home, and I'll do it or perish in the attempt."

Unlooked For Developments.

At that moment the sound of an awful racket came up from the shed. The seven dogs left had entered into a battle royal, and the noise was one to arouse the whole neighborhood. Mr. Bowser dashed downstairs and out into the yard, and in another second he had the door of the shed open. He was going to yell at the dogs to stop the row, but no sooner was the door thrown open than the fighting, struggling seven made a rush. So did Mr. Bowser. Instinct warned the dogs that he was to blame for the row and they quit fighting among themselves to snap at his heels. It was a nip and tuck race, with a bulldog trying to find a place to hang on to, but Mr. Bowser not only reached the fence, but went over it into the next yard and wiped out a bed of earth. It wasn't five minutes before twenty men and boys were on hand, and one of them had wit enough to let the dogs out. They went out snarling and howling and fighting, with the bulldog having the best of it, and amid the general uproar Mr. Bowser climbed back into his own yard and got into the house. Mrs. Bowser was quietly awaiting him.

"Well, how many bites did you get from your homeless, friendless dogs?" she asked as she surveyed his tattered trousers legs.

He turned red and glared at her and swallowed the lump in his throat, but he made no reply. He was so mad and scared and upset that he couldn't even charge her with conspiracy, and after seeing that the front door was locked, he followed her upstairs and simply managed to growl out:

"Woman, you and I will settle this thing in the morning."

Lesson IX.—Third Quarter, For Aug. 30, 1914.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. xxii, 15-22. Memory Verses, 16, 17—Golden Text, Matt. xxii, 21—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

This lesson of questions by Pharisees and Herodians and Sadducees, feigning themselves just men, but seeking to entangle Him in His talk that they might catch Him in His words and so deliver Him unto the power and authority of the governor, is found in Matthew, Mark and Luke (Mark xii, 13; Luke xx, 20). His warning to the disciples to beware of the leaven or false teaching of the same three classes of people is found in Matt. xvi, 6; Mark viii, 15. The Pharisees were the most religious people of that day, but were mere formalists. Everything was outward to obtain praise of men; nothing real before God. The Herodians, judging from Herod, could enjoy a good talk, but preferred the sinful pleasures of this world to things real and eternal. The Sadducees were religious, but had no use for things supernatural, angels or spirits, and did not believe in any resurrection. None of them had any use for Jesus Christ or His doctrine. Although they could not deny His wonderful works, His teaching was to them foolish and impractical and impossible. The light of His pure, holy life was too great a contrast to their selfish sinfulness.

Even Daniel's enemies had to confess that he was faithful and that there was neither error nor fault in him and that it would be impossible to find occasion against him unless in some way concerning the law of his God (Dan. vi, 4, 5).

These enemies of Christ were in a similar difficulty, but they would not cease from their purpose. The Pharisees and Herodians unite in a scheme which they think will surely enable them to find occasion against Him, and so they come with flattering words concerning His being a teacher of truth and caring not for what people think or say of Him (verse 16). They propound a question which it seems to them will bring from Him an ensnaring reply: "Is it lawful to give tribute unto Caesar or not?" "Shall we give, or shall we not give?" (Verse 17, Mark xii, 15.)

They probably thought that He would advise not to give to Caesar and thus find Him guilty of teaching against Caesar. They did not begin to know Him, nor that He could read their hearts, nor that they were dealing with one who knew what was in man (Jer. xvii, 10; John ii, 25). How scathing His reply, "Why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites?" How surprising His request, "Show me the tribute money," or as it is in Mark xii, 15, "Bring me a penny that I may see it." When they had brought it and in reply to His question told Him whose image it bore, then He saith unto them, "Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's" (verse 21). So they could not take hold of His words, marveled at His answer, held their peace, left Him and went their way (verse 22; Luke xx, 26).

It was true on all occasions, "Never man spake like this man." He Himself said, "The words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself, but the Father that dwelleth in me He doeth the works." "He gave me a commandment what I should say and what I should speak" (John xiv, 10; xii, 49). If we were as fully yielded to Him as He was to the Father it would be true of us, "It is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you" (Matt. x, 20). He was the image of the invisible God (II. Cor. iv, 4; Heb. i, 3; Col. i, 15).

When we become His by redemption we begin to bear His image and should day by day be increasingly conformed to that image, for to that end all things are intended to work (Rom. viii, 28, 29). If we by faith behold His glory it will be so until when we see Him we shall be like Him (II Cor. iii, 18; I John iii, 1, 2). By creation they belonged to God, for He gave them life and breath and all things, but by choice they denied God in their works through professing to know Him (Tit. i, 16). God wants nothing from those who will not accept His mercy in Christ Jesus. He must first forgive us as sinners and give us Himself in Christ and make us His children before we can render Him anything, but when we become His our song should be "ever only for Thee." The words "went their way" (verse 22) remind us of the same in verse 5 and that all who are not with Christ in the way are still going their own way to everlasting destruction.

The same day came the Sadducees with their question about the seven brethren who, one after the other, had the same woman to wife. "If there be a resurrection, then whose wife shall she be of the seven?" (Verses 23-28.) Thus they thought they had shown the impossibility of a life after this one. Note His reply, "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God" (verse 29). What a farreaching, comprehensive word and in a sense applying to all error, for it all comes from not knowing the Scriptures. The only way to be free from error is to know the truth, which makes us free indeed (John viii, 32-36).

The "Cache" Robbers.

Wolves are responsible for many deaths by raiding the "caches" of woodsmen in northern Canada. When making long journeys through the woods it is often necessary to "cache" food supplies en route. This is done by raising a scaffold, to which sledbells are attached to keep off the wolverines. But however well a "cache" is made, a pack of hungry and determined wolves may succeed in reaching the stores. Their patience is inexhaustible, and they have even been known to bring a "cache" to the ground by gnawing through the timbers.

Music of the Spheres.

The ancients were of the opinion that the planets in their movement through space produced severally the seven notes of the gamut. This music, it was contended, was imperceptible to human ears on account of the fact that it was too powerful for our hearing. Others held that men did not hear it simply because they were so used to it, just as we do not notice the roar of the city from our constant familiarity with it. The real "music of the spheres" is purely intellectual, lying in the great and splendid fact of the universe of law and order.

Canada's Strength

TWO years or so of stringent times have washed out of the fabric of Canadian business some things that were marring the fair sheet of our prosperity---speculation in real estate, excessive personal extravagance, venturesomeness in finance and a tendency to imprudent business expansion. To-day Canada's strength is showing itself unmistakably. We have recovered our self-confidence and courage.

Our business men who advertise owe it to themselves and the times to continue their advertising. Advertisements are declarations of purpose, courage, and service. An absence of advertising is an indication of faintheartedness, and of energy in a state of collapse or suspense.

Strength shows itself in action---in advertising

TOOK SIX MONTHS TO CAPTURE PARIS

Germans Carried Out Whirlwind Campaign in Former Clash With French.

When the Prussians under Kaiser Wilhelm I. with Count Bismarck and Gen. Von Moltke, started the movement against Paris in 1870, the German troops met fierce resistance. It took the Germans six months to capture the French capital.

The first order to mobilize the Prussian army was given by Kaiser Wilhelm I. July 15, 1870. France declared war four days later. Three armies were put in the field by the Prussians. The first was under Gen. Von Steinmetz near Trever, the second under Prince Frederick Charles in the Reinish Palatinate, and the third under Crown Prince of Prussia on the frontier of Baden. Fifteen days after the mobilization order had been given, Prussia had 520,000 men under arms.

On Belgian Frontier

A line 100 miles long from Mountmedy on the Belgian frontier to Belfort, at the junction of the Swiss and German borders, was covered by an army of 350,000 men under Napoleon III. The French army was divided into eight army corps with Marshal MacMahon commander-in-chief, near Strassburg. Emperor Napoleon left Paris July 28 to take command at Metz, and Aug. 2 Kaiser Wilhelm with Count Bismarck and Gen. Von Moltke took the field with headquarters at Mantz.

Saarbrucken was attacked and captured Aug. 2 by Froussard. France was invaded by the German crown prince Aug. 4 He engaged the French under Douey at Weissenburg and drove them back after a terrific five-hour fight, in which the losses were heavy on both sides. Again two days later the crown prince engaged the French. This time he met MacMahon's men at Zabern, and forced them to retreat in disorder. Steinmetz, in the meantime, routed Froussard's corps at Spichern, driving the French back to Metz and Forbach.

Alsace Abandoned

Following these disastrous defeats the eight French corps were consolidated into two armies, one under Bazaine at Metz and the other under MacMahon at Chalons. It was shortly thereafter that the northern part of Alsace was abandoned, while the French retreated along the Moselle.

On Aug. 8 the crown prince left Worth to push on through the passes of Vosges to Nancy. He entered the city Aug. 16. In the meantime Steinmetz was the most active man in the German army. He took Forbach Aug. 7, St. Alvord Aug. 9, and on the 14th was near Metz. In the battle of Colombey-Nouilly, Gen. Von Moltke prevented the junction of the two retreating French armies.

Bent on the capture of Metz, Prince Frederick Charles took part of his army via Saarbrucken and part through Saargemund, and Aug. 16 drove Bazaine back on Crelorrw. He was defeated on the 18th and cornered in the fortifications at Metz.

Surrendered at Sedan

On Aug. 19 the Prussians formed a fourth army to move rapidly through the plains of Champegne to Paris. The crown prince of Saxony was placed in charge of this fourth command. One hundred and thirty thousand men were concentrated at Chalons under MacMahon to defend Paris. On Aug. 21 MacMahon moved to Rheims and, under orders from Paris, attempted to relieve Metz. His division was cut off by the Prussians at Sedan, surrounded and overwhelmed. He surrendered Sept. 2, being taken prisoner with the Emperor. The battle of Sedan was the most disastrous of the entire war.

The surrender of Strassburg came on Sept. 28 and Oct. 11 Gen. Vonder Tann occupied Orleans. Metz was surrendered by Nesaine Oct. 27, Gen. De Caliasines in a heroic effort recaptured Orleans from the Prussians Nov. 10, but was defeated in a battle lasting from Dec. 2 till Dec. 4.

In vain, Gen. Ducrot tried to break the strong Prussian lines at Berle and on Dec. 19 the Prussians captured Mt. Vernon, one of the forts defending Paris. Rouen was captured by the Prussians Dec. 6 and the French were overwhelmed at San Quentin Jan. 19. Paris finally capitulated Dec. 28.

London's Private Wells

The Metropolitan Water Board not long ago issued a report stating that it loses $200,000 a year on account of the number of private wells in existence in London.

Many of the largest hotels, public baths, and banks, including the Bank of England, have their own wells, a fact which would be of considerable importance in case the water supply of the metropolis should be interrupted by the enemy.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

THE only benevolent man in the business world is the one who sells you stock for 20 cents that he knows will sell for one 25 inside of sixty days.

You are growing old when Halloween is foolishness or worse and a circus is as bad.

A sunny smile and a dimple will go a long way toward selling a man a book, but it won't help him a bit in explaining to his wife how it happened.

When a woman marries for support and the man marries for an attendant, what is the answer?

A wise man learns by the mistakes of others to conceal his own.

It isn't exactly a desire to uproot evil that impels a man to dig for money.

Strange! Happiness, they say, is a state of mind, yet a person in a state of mind is never happy.

The Main Chance.

Now congress, chastened and subdued,
To Washington will come
To doctor laws that may be crude
And slightly out of plumb,
To guide the trembling ship of state
Along its distant way,
With peace and safety for its freight
And—well, to draw its pay.

On measures for the public weal
It will be standing pat,
As steady as a bar of steel
Or anything like that,
And anything that isn't right
Will get it in the neck,
For something noble it will fight—
That and its mileage check.

Economy will be the word
That flutters down the line,
And not a whisper will be heard
That smacks of a combine.
No fat appropriation bill
May see the light of day
Unless some minor one that will
A trifle boost their pay.

Yes, it will soon be on the job,
And very shortly now
A nation's restless pulse will throb
As congress shows it how,
With care and watchfulness and zeal
It slowly will advance,
Nor will it pull a shady deal
Unless it has a chance.

Improved the Effect.

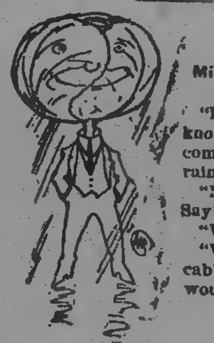
"What a magnificent building!" exclaimed Uncle Cyrus, who was gazing at the capitol building in Washington for the first time.

"It is," said the casual stranger who was volunteering information. "And it looks much better now than it used to when the roof was flat."

"Was the roof flat once?"

"Sure. It was built flat. That dome you see on top like a big balloon was caused by expansion under the pressure of hot air generated by congress."

"You don't say so!"



Missed His Calling.

"He doesn't know enough to come in out of the rain."

"No, he doesn't. Say?"

"Well."

"What a fine cabbage patch he would make."

Some Handicap.

"He has lost his job as a chauffeur."

"What was the matter?"

"The train ran over his car."

"Wouldn't the boss give him back his job?"

"Maybe, but he couldn't find enough of him in one place to make a bargain with."

Responsive.

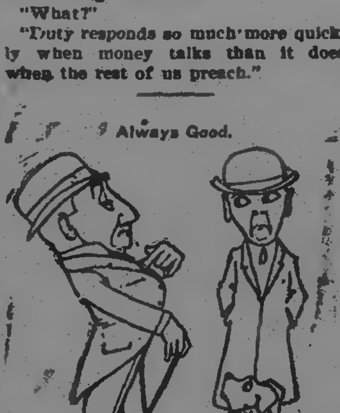
"Money talks, they say."

"Yes, and did you ever notice another thing about it?"

"What?"

"Duty responds so much more quickly when money talks than it does when the rest of us preach."

Always Good.



"I wonder if that is a good dog."

"Yes."

"How can you tell?"

"Because he is mine."

Explanation.

"My wife believes everything I tell her."

"Impossible!"

"Fact."

"She must be credulous."

"No. I am simply mighty careful what I tell her."

GREETING A GUN HANDLER

With a Surprise All Around

By VINGIE E. ROE

That the old west was not entirely gone was apparent on every side as the shoddy old coach lumbered along.

But that it was making its last pathetic stand was equally plain in the dotting homesteads, in the telephone line that had timidly followed the bold old road of the stage line for many miles.

A woman and three men rocked and bumped on the shabby seats inside, and the driver, a weathered old timer, who handled his four lines with the deftness of lifelong habit, swayed on the boot, straight as an Indian, in his blue flannel shirt.

The woman was slim and handsome, about thirty years of age, clad in the last word of urban taste—the east by every sign and token.

And yet she bore one earmark of the west—she "traveled light."

Only one small alligator bag was to her credit amid the luggage.

Of the other passengers one was patently a traveling man, a dapper young man of the new west; one was a rancher, middle aged and calm, and one was that motley offspring of the old and the new, an irresponsible hybrid, taking the worst strains of both parents. He was neither a cowboy, a miner nor a rancher; neither a farmer, a promoter nor a business man, and yet he partook a little of all.

He was loud voiced, with the overdrawn vocabulary of story book wild westerners. His clothes were as motley as himself—a sombrero, a light flannel shirt exaggeratedly open necked, broadcloth trousers, patent leather shoes and a cartridge belt from whose two holsters glowered the black butts of a couple of guns.

He monopolized the conversation and cast bold glances at the young woman.

"Yes," he said loudly, "the west hain't what it usta be. It's be'n overrun with these here d—— Easterns."

"I've met a few of 'em," said the rancher quietly, "an' I've noticed that most of 'em make it a p'int not to cuss before ladies—specially when that same is shet up in a stage with the cusser an' can't help theirselves."

The woman shot the interrupter a grateful glance which struggled with a smile for mastery.

"Hey," said the bully, "meanin' me?"

The rancher looked calmly out at the dropping hills, clad in their noble vestments of constantly heightening pines.

"Shoe pinch?" he asked of the scenery.

The other studied him a moment in suspicious perplexity.

"Old man," he said largely, "a few years back you'd 'a' got plugged fer that."

"Maybe. But the west has changed—also its men."

The woman could not repress the smile that twitched her handsome mouth, and she gazed out of the window at the beautiful road winding and climbing among the ledges.

The dapper traveling man fidgeted uneasily, edging away from the blatant black guns.

The owner saw the signs of the tenderfoot and mistook the woman's absorbed study of the landscape for the fear of himself he loved to instill.

Therefore he talked with heightened vigor.

"Yes, sir, the west hain't what it was. Why, they's been a horse thief rustlin' up on Sleepy Fork fer months, an' they hain't men enough in the country to ketch him—an' string him up."

He glanced at the woman, expecting a shiver of horror. He thought he saw it and pressed his line of talk.

"Five, yes, three years back he'd 'a' be'n in h—in heaven by now. An' fifteen—why, ef he'd 'a' be'n tryin' his doin's in Big Bill Daily's time he'd 'a' furnished sport fer the countryside. Now, there was a man! I know the time he rode into Circle and shot three of the Burgess gang all by his lonesome. He was a gun man right!"

The trim shoulders in the blue traveling suit shivered perceptibly, and the red lips of the woman drooped from their amused smile.

The bully went on delightedly:

"Hain't many of us left of the old gun handlers. I know when Big Bill trimmed a Johnny Eastern's new sombrero into a lacework fringe on his head. Gee! Them was days! Hain't but a few of us left!"

The traveling man was gnawing his small mustache, and the fingers of his immaculate hands were gripped tight together.

The rancher's kindly eyes took in the pain in the woman's face.

"No," he said, "they hain't any left."

"Oh, I don't know," said the other in exaggerated offhandedness, hitching his holsters a bit to the fore. "No, I don't know. I'm goin' up on Sleepy Fork right now."

"The men of the old days shot," he said with contemptuous sarcasm; "they didn't talk. It's the mark of the new west—these talkers like"—

The sentence was never finished.

There was a startled "Whoa!" from the old timer on the boot, a gathering of taut lines, a creaking grind of the brake, and the lumbering old stage lurched to a stand in the presence of grim tragedy.

At the side of the road where it turned around a shoulder and spread out in a wide ledge a dozen men went about a work so wild, so amazing in its steadiness as to bring forward with a jerk that old west of which the little company in the stage were speaking.

With their backs to a ragged pine, their arms pinioned at their sides and their silver stars gleaming ridiculously on their khaki shirts, two officers of the law watched in white wrath the deliberations of the rest.

These others, nine men in corduroys, wide hats and flannel shirts, were masked. One man alone was bareheaded, barefaced, and he stood among them with his hands tied and a rope about his neck. Its huge knot stood out prominently under his left ear. He was a bad type, a heavy featured, bold eyed man, whose record of evil was stamped upon his face.

One of the others was casting the loose end for a high limb as the newcomers stopped abreast.

With a disdainful disregard for interference this bunch of avengers worked in silence, not even protesting against the stopping of the stage.

Not so the two officers against the tree.

"For heaven's sake," cried one hoarsely, "get out of there, you men, and stop this outrage! This man is our prisoner—suspected horse thief from Sleepy Fork—and we were taking him to Circle to the federal jail when these men took him from us by force! Get out and do something!"

All left the stage except the traveling man, who crouched back in one corner, and later when the party returned he was found in a faint. As the bully got out he tried to edge around so as to get behind some of the others as much as possible.

The big black guns in the holsters of the bully attracted the eyes of the sheriff.

"I deputize you!" he yelled. "Cut these ropes and give me a gun! Stop them!"

"Why—why"— said the bully, "why this hain't"—

At this moment the rope sailed over the high limb, fell, swung, was caught by a dozen eager hands and snatched taut in an instant.

The eight masked men stepped back all together, took good grip, their hands reaching high along the rope, and, lifting one foot each for purchase and start, heaved hard away.

The rancher was old in the ways of the wilderness, and he stood silent, being unarmed, only his dilating, kindly eyes showing his horror. The bully was agape with his hands up, transfixed in the presence of death.

Only the slim, handsome woman behind them was keenly alive, it seemed. As that tragic line swayed tautly backward and down her two white hands, from which she had stripped the gloves, reached forward. The sensitive fingers closed caressingly around the gun butts at the bully's hips, there was a flash of gun metal, a spring of the slim blue clad figure to one side, and the next instant the hills awoke to thunder as the horse thief rose, struggling, in the air.

The first shot, a perceptible second apart, was for the spokesman who covered the two men and the driver on the box, and it sent his gun hurtling against the rocks of the roadside.

Then, in such swift succession as to seem a roaring volley, the black guns spoke together, and one by one, like leaves falling in a wind, every second hand dropped, red and shattered, from the rope above their heads.

The miserable thing at the rope's end fell to the earth in a heap.

Yells, screams, curses rose in fantastic clamor as five men flung useless arms in panic. The others, their grip so low as to be shielded by their comrades' bodies, sprang away.

"Don't move," said a clear voice cuttingly. "I have a few shots left."

She nodded to the rancher.

"Loosen that rope on that man's neck. Thanks. Now the officers."

"Now," said the woman at last, "you may go—all of you. And don't look back."

Without protest the masked line strung out, a grotesque procession, and disappeared down the white road, its progress marked by trailing sprinkles in the dust.

Then speech broke out among those left, and the officers and the old driver were for almost groveling before her.

"What nerve! Where do you come from?"

But the woman only smiled and would answer nothing.

She handed the black guns to the gun man with a smile.

"The west hain't what it was," she said. "It's be'n sp'iled by these Johnny Easterns!"

But the bully had no word. He simply climbed up on the boot beside the driver.

At sundown the stage lumbered into the forgotten town among the mountains. The woman looked wistfully around with the light of dim remembered things in her eyes.

As they alighted at the tumbledown shack that had once been Meadow Mine's hotel the rancher took off his hat as he helped her out. "I may be buttin' in on what you don't want to talk about," he said, "but I've seen Big Bill Daily shoot the buttons off a bad man's vest, an' he had a draw like no one's in the world—a sort of flip an' flourish. You throwed his draw."

His bright, kindly eyes held an unspoken question.

The woman smiled.

"Why shouldn't I?" she said calmly. "I'm his daughter. He taught me how to shoot before he died ten years ago."

Ceylon's Animals.

The mammal survey of Ceylon, by Major E. W. Mayor, who has just completed the first part of the survey, has brought to light many rare and interesting specimens. Though only a small part of the island was covered for the purpose of this collection Major Mayor obtained as many as 368 specimens composed of 36 species in 29 genera. Included in these are eleven species new to the mammal survey. It is also interesting to note the discovery of Millardia Meltoda, this being the first time that specimens of this rodent have been received from Ceylon.

Pacific Blockades.

The phrase "pacific blockade" is almost a contradiction of terms, but is used in international law for want of a better. It means the blockade of ports of another country in time of peace without the intention of waging war; in other words, it is a peaceable act of war. Some writers on international law insist that the blockade of the ports of a foreign country is itself an act of war without regard to the motive of future intentions, but as a means of reprisal or of compelling the settlement of international disputes it has become an established feature of the laws of nations.—Philadelphia Press.

GERMANY HAS THREE TO ONE

Concentration in Immense Strength to Crush British Expeditionary Force

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 29.—A Daily Mail editorial, concerning the concentration of Germans in immense strength to crush the British expeditionary force, says: "Germany has brought stupendous odds of three to one against British soldiers, of whom we may well feel proud, but the situation is most critical.

France has done everything in her power. Russia cannot help except by indirect pressure. Great Britain alone can find more men, and find them she should. The nation must prepare on a colossal scale and must send every man and gun that can be spared, here and now, to the decisive point in France."

Italy to Present Ultimatum

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 29.—The Paris correspondent of the Express says, "I am informed, Italy will present an ultimatum to Austria, requiring an explanation of Austrian mobilization on Italian frontier.

Only a brief period will be given for an answer and within a short time Italian troops are expected to be in Trieste.

Austrian Forts Are Demolished

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 26.—A despatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Milan, says a report has declared there from Bari, Italy, that British and French warships combined with Montenegrin guns, resumed the bombardment of Austrian forts at Cattaro on Thursday night.

Two forts were demolished after six hours cannonading. A small Austrian squadron attempted a sortie from its place of retreat at the island of Cherso but without success.

Women and Children Killed

Canadian Press Despatch.

London. — A despatch to the Post from Terneuzen, a seaport in the Netherlands describing the sack of Louvain from what it claims to be an authoritative source says, "Many civilians were killed including women, children and clergy. Their nationality it is declared didn't save one English and one American clergyman.

Says Invaders Crossed Rhine

Canadian Press Despatch.

Rome, Aug. 29.—A despatch to Giornale D'Italia from Basel, Switzerland, says that three German Army Corps, two Austrian army corps and a great quantity of siege artillery have crossed the Rhine.

Fear Another Visit By Zeppelins

Canadian Press Despatch.

Rotterdam, Aug. 29.—Nieuve Courantde says that the people of Antwerp fear another visit, not merely by one but by many Zeppelin dirigibles. The inhabitants of the houses in the vicinity of the Royal Palace have left their homes and steam is kept up constantly on the royal yacht. At the first sign of trouble, the Queen and Princess will be taken to England or the United States.

WITH THE BOYS AT VAL CARTIER

Mr. W. Carson, window dresser in the Peterboro Hardware Co. received a letter last night from Mr. Bruce Mills, son of Major Mills of the local contingent and former member of local bugle band who is with the home contingent at Valcartier.

He says so far things are going along smoothly. They arse at 5.30 a.m., have an hour's drill and then have breakfast. After breakfast a short intermission and then drill to 11 a.m. They then have their rest, starting drill again at 2 p.m. and drilling to 5 o'clock. Night and morning it is cool enough, but serves as an excellent reviver to some of the "lagging" appetites.

57th OFFICERS WILL MEET

A meeting of the officers of the 57th Regt. will be held on Monday evening at 8 o'clock, and not this evening as formerly announced. A large attendance is requested as business of importance will come up for consideration.

New York in Sore Stress

New York, Aug. 29.—More destitute persons have applied to charity organisations for aid since the beginning of the European war than at any time since 1889, according to charity workers, who announced that they had about reached the limit of their resources.

Secretary Frank J. Bruno, of the Charities Organization society, said that he was swamped with applications for help, and added that, as the charity societies are asked to help only the destitute families, there must be thousands of homeless men receiving help from other sources.

The biggest percentage of men out of work are drawn from the ranks of the stevedores and others who depend on the movement of trans-Atlantic freight. The cessation of importation operations also has made idle many who are employed at trades where they use only things imported from Europe.

The British Union Jack and the German Eagle entwined while the two countries are at war. The photograph shows the funeral in England of four German sailors who were killed when the English ship Amphion sank the Koenigin Louise, and four English sailors who died a few hours later when a mine blew up the Amphion. The eight caskets, draped with the English and German flags, were laid side by side in a long English grave.

GERMAN FLEET SUFFERS FROM THE BRITISH ATTACK

Daring Raid on German Scouting Squadron at Heligoland Results in the Sinking of Two Cruisers and Two Destroyers---Another Cruiser is On Fire and in a Sinking Condition ---British Fleet Entire

LONDON, Aug. 29. — At last the fleet has been heard from, and this is the glorious message she sends: "Two German cruisers sunk and another fading into the mist wrapped in flames and in a sinking condition. Two German destroyers sunk and the others damaged, but to what number is not known. Every vessel of the squadron afloat, returning in good order.

The officer chief in command of the British attacking force was Rear Admiral Sir David Beatty. Told in the dry, laconic phrases of the official Admiralty despatch, the story is sufficiently thrilling. Following is the text issued last night by the official Press Bureau:—

"Early this morning a concerted operation of some consequence was attempted against the Germans in Heligoland Bight.

"A strong force of destroyers, supported by light cruisers and battle cruisers, and working in conjunction with the submarines, intercepted and attacked the German destroyers and cruisers guarding the approaches to the German coast. Two German destroyers were sunk and many damaged.

"The enemy's cruisers were engaged by the British cruisers and battle cruisers. The first light cruiser squadron sank the Mainz, receiving only slight damage. The first battle cruiser squadron sank one cruiser of the Koln class, and another cruiser disappeared in the mist, heavily on fire and in a sinking condition.

"All the German cruisers engaged were thus disposed of.

"The battle cruiser squadron, although attacked by submarines and floating mines, successfully evaded them, and is undamaged. The light cruiser squadron suffered no casualties. The flotilla cruiser Amethyst and the destroyer Laertes are damaged.

"The British loss of life is reported as not heavy."

The importance of this daring raid is the fact that the British fleet passed behind the heavily-armed German outpost at Heligoland Island and engaged with signal success the section of the German fleet guarding the mouth of the Elbe and the entrance to the Kiel Canal.

Only the strategists expected the British squadron on guard to take the offensive. The amateurs long ago decided that the squadron would simply wait, content to keep the Germans bottled, and prepared to attack them when they attempted a sortie. But apparently the British got word that the time was favorable, and delivered a blow. The light cruisers and battle cruisers supported the destroyers, which were attended by submarines, and every one that went into this engagement come out under its own steam.

Rear Admiral Beatty, who conducted this brilliant and timely operation, is regarded as one of the ablest officers in the British navy. He is one of its youngest admirals, having reached that rank at record age. He was a great personal favorite of the late King Edward.

Rear Admirals Moore and Christian, who are his immediate subordinates, were both recently promoted, and Commodore Goodenough has already had a distinguished career.

It has rendered its first account now, and it is a good one. German cruisers of Mainz and Koln class were built in 1909. Their tonnage is 4,330 and they cost $1,707,400. Each cruiser of this type carries a crew of 362 and they are armed with 12 4.1 guns. They have a speed of 25.5 knots.

A Central News despatch from Brindisi, Italy, says that a British destroyer sunk an Austrian destroyer off Corfu, after a ten-minutes' fight.

And One In China Seas.

CHEFOO, China, Aug. 29. — The British torpedo-boat destroyer Welland has engaged and sunk the German torpedo-boat destroyer S90.

The Welland belongs to the river class of destroyers, and mounts four 12-pounder quick-firers.

EAST INDIANS ON THEIR WAY TO THE FRONT

Force From Orient Will Be Well Trained Men.

LONDON, Aug. 29.—Lord Kitchener, Secretary of State for War, announced in the House of Lords yesterday that in addition to reinforcements which would be received from his country, the Government had decided that the British army in France should be increased. The troops to increase the forces were now on the way, he said. He added that all the gaps in the army in France were being filled up.

That the employment of native Indian troops was meant by Lord Kitchener was later confirmed by the Marquis of Crewe Secretary of State for India. The Marquis of Crewe said:

"It has been deeply impressed on the Government that the wonderful wave of enthusiasm and loyalty at the present time passing over India is largely due to the desire of the Indian people that Indian soldiers should stand side by side with their comrades in the British army.

"India is aware of the employment of African troops to assist the French army, and it would have been a disappointment to Indians if they had been debarred from taking part in the war in Europe.

"Our army will thus be reinforced by soldiers — high souled men — of first-class training, and I am certain that they will give the best possible account of themselves. I venture to think that this keen desire of our Indian fellow subjects to co-operate with us is no less gratifying than the same desire shown in the self-governing dominions, some of whose soldiers in due course, will no doubt also be found fighting side by side with British and Indian troops in the war.

"I feel confident, therefore, that the action we take will meet with a most enthusiastic reception in India, and I believe it will be approved by your lordships, the House of Commons and by public opinion here generally."

Earl Kitchener's statement is taken to mean that the East Indian troops are very near their destination.

TRENTON'S BIG FIRE

$30,000 Damage Done to Business Centre

Trenton, Aug. 29. — Shortly after midnight this town was visited by a disastrous fire which destroyed one half block of bluidings in the business centre of the place, and created damage amounting to about $30,000. The fire started in the Trenton garage, caused, it is thought, by an explosion of gasoline. The building, a frame structure, was quickly in flames, which spread to the fruit establishment of S. Asic adjoining the Cooper Shoe Co. and the Rathbun livery. Practically all the buildings destroyed lie in the block between the post office and the Canadian Northern station. No lives have been reported as being lost. The prompt action of Chief Colburn and his men undoubtedly saved the damage from being more extensive.

SOCCER PLAYERS MAY SEE FIGHTING

LONDON, Aug. 29.—The incorporation of a brigade of football players into Lord Kitchener's new army is the latest proposal to be made in England. Both the War Office and the football associations have received it with considerable enthusiasm.

The football association has a membership of 7,000 trained athletes, who, it is suggested, might be better employed in charging the Germans on the battlefield than in charging each other on the football field. The council of the association is to hold a meeting on Monday to decide if these 7,000 men shall be released from their present engagements and the football fields turned into drilling grounds.

GERMANS BURN LOUVAIN

Terrible Barbarities Enacted by Invaders at Belgium's University Centre.

TERNEUZE, Holland, Aug. 29.—Louvain was sacked by the Germans on Wednesday night, following their defeat at Malines. The soldiers, enraged at their losses, suddenly started pillaging, going from house to house, shooting women and children. Two clergymen were killed, one being an American. Women were raped and every infamy and outrage known to barbarians were perpetrated. This was done at the end of a week of German occupation and without cause.

The official statement of the Belgian legation at London says in part:

"Last Tuesday night the German corps which had been operating between Antwerp and Louvain, was completely routed by a Belgian expedition. It was forced to retire toward Louvain in the utmost disorder.

"When it came near the city of Louvain the German garrison posted there mistook their comrades in arms for Belgians and fired on them, killing some and wounding others. The Germans, on realising their mistake, accused the townspeople of having fired on them.

"Despite the protestations of the Louvain authorities, the Germans directed the townspeople to march out of the city to a point officially designated. Then, as a "reprisal" for their own acts, the German commnder at Louvain ordered that the city be given to the torch.

"The German commander refused to listen to any protests or even to consider the denials which were attempted to be made by the Louvain officials. He simply announced that the town was immediately to be destroyed. He also directed that several of the more prominent citizens be taken out and shot as an example to all Belgians, which was done.

"The inhabitants were ordered to leave their homes at once. The men were taken prisoners immediately. The women and children were hastily loaded into trains which had been requisitioned. They were hurried away to some unknown destination."

ATTACK REPULSED

Allies Hurl Back German Line in North-Eastern France

Million French Massed for Defence of Verdun and Sedan

LONDON, Aug. 29.—An attack of Germans in superior numbers in the northeastern part of France yesterday was finally repulsed by the French and British troops.

Word has come that, although the Germans are pressing forward reinforcements as rapidly as possible, the second line of defence, on which the allies retired from Belgium, is being stoutly maintained.

An official statement issued by the French embassy last night said:—

"Yesterday our troops took up the offensive in the Vosges, in the region between the Vosges Mountains and Nancy, where fighting has been going on for a fortnight. The German losses were considerable.

"Longwy, which was garrisoned by only one battalion, has surrendered after holding out for 24 days."

The official bureau says that Earl Kitchener has received a telegram from Sir John French stating that the latter feels strongly the necessity of giving full details of the casualties as soon as possible. He hopes to telegraph some of them immediately. It has been impossible in the circumstances to send them up to the present.

The German embassy reports successes for the Kaiser at Longwy and Nancy, France, and advices say that the force under command of Crown Prince Wilhelm has seized the French towns of Longuyon, Villerupt, Jappecourt, Ardun-le-Roman and Briey. Berlin asserts without reserve that the battle of Maubeuge, between the Germans and the British was an overwhelming victory for the Germans. The Teutons seem to be picking out the British especially for revenge, and it is believed that Berlin would rejoice more over annihilating a British force than over the downfall of Paris itself.

Word has come that the French forces massed for defence between the first-class fortress of Verdun and Sedan number no less than 1,000,000 men equipped with notably powerful artillery.

Hastening Forward Reinforcements.

PARIS, Aug. 29.—France is hastening forward reinforcements to the troops menaced at Arras by a strong German force moving on the French flank, in order that the defenders may be able to maintain their position. Should the German flanking movement prove successful, it is conceded practically all of the northeastern portion of France would be at the mercy of Germany, and, in addition, communication between France and England might be cut off.

A full force of 1,200,000 German invaders yesterday hurled itself at the second line of the allies' defence.

An official communication issued by the War Department last night says:—

"The situation on our front from the Department of Somme (northwest France) to the Vosges remains the same to-day.

"The German forces appear to have slackened their march."

The apparent inaction of the armies, as indicated in the official statement, is explained by the frightful exhaustion of both sides, who for days have been fighting furiously. The losses of both armies are appalling, particularly those of the Germans. As an illustration of the losses sustained by the Germans, a prisoner relates that two German regiments, the 112th and 143rd, were so cut down that they were made into one, and of that only 60 men now remain.

La Liberte says that the fighting which began Thursday north of Hirson has lessened in intensity.

Travelers in that locality report that the German forces have been driven back in the direction of Chimay, and that the detonation of the guns is now heard only at long intervals.

A convoy of German prisoners passed through Limoges yesterday. A non-commissioned officer with a group of forty German prisoners said that these were all that remained of the entire division.

Hirson is located in Aisne, France, on the River Oise.

SUGAR EMBARGO LIFTED.

THOSE PEOPLE who so eagerly bought up enough sugar to last them for several years, while the price was low, just because they had the money to do so, are likely not to have made the coup they thought they were going to, as the price may again come down in a few days. Two things caused the rise, one was the increase in Canadian duties, and the other was an order made by the British Government forbidding the exportation of raw sugar from the British West Indies, which have been the chief source of sugar supply of the Canadian refiners. Sir George Foster announces that the embargo has been lifted and that Canadian refiners are now at liberty to bring in raw sugar from the Southern Islands. This will go a long way towards relieving the sugar situation in Canada, particularlarly as the Atlantic is now safe for the passage of freight boats.

WAR CORRESPONDENTS AND NEWS.

IN REFERENCE to the Kaiser's order that all war correspondents found in the zone of fighting in Belgium are to be shot as spies, it will not lead to many executions, says the Mail and Empire, because the war authorities of Britain, France, and Belgium have kept newspaper men far in the rear of their lines. The policy of the strategists on both sides is to let nothing come to light except what can safely be revealed. A few days ago Kitchener decided that no English newspaper men should be allowed to accompany the British expeditionary force, but later reconsidered the decision upon representations by the British press that for the sake of history, if for no other reason, trained observers should follow the operations. But it was settled that until the events now rapidly unrolling on Belgian territory should have definite trend, so that secrecy as to disposition of forces should become less imperative, the war correspondents would have to take what news they could get from points out of the zone of operations, and then submit it to the censor. The Russo-Japanese War practically squelched the war correspondent, the difficulties of getting news from the theatre of war being very formidable, but the restrictions, both natural and artificial, placed on him at the time were trifling with those imposed now. In the heart of Europe, where means of telegraphic and mail communication are most abundant, news of military operations is stifled except through official medium. The Germans will take more kindly to the stringent supression of independent news-getting than do the Anglo-Saxons, because the former have never known a free press as British countries have. It is safe to say that since Germany is under martial law the German press is thoroughly under surveillance., and newspaper men have no place in the German military plan except as combatants, or as mediums for official announcements. The silence of British newspapers regarding movements of British troops and other war arrangements was voluntary. In Germany such silence would be the price of a journalist's life. A German order for the summary execution of war correspondents is in keeping with the savageness of German dealing with non-combatants generally. German bureaucrats hate newspaper men who are not under their thumbs and pliable tools to their ends as they hate an open enemy.

LITTLE FELLOWS SO FAR.

SO FAR in the war, it is the little fellows who have been getting most of the glory, says the London Advertiser. Belgium's magnificent fight is almost epic, and will always be a classic in the world's battle history. And now there is every reason to believe that, following a four days' combat, Servia has broken the Austrian attack for the present. The history of the war may show that the defence put up by Belgium and Servia saved the allies from humiliating reverses, if not something worse. Belgium has held the Kaiser in check long past the date he had set upon for arrival at Paris, and Servia, by her splendid stand, has given the Russians time to bring their hordes into play. Everybody's calculations have been upset. Even the experts could see nothing better than a frail defence by the Belgians, and they confidently predicted that Austria's overwhelming superiority in numbers would quickly smash Servian resistance. As a result of the battle of Losnitza, Servia is in full control of Bosnia, and Austria will have her hands too full with Russia to attempt a recovery at present.

A significant feature about the four days' fighting was the terrible execution done by the Servian artillery, which was made in France. In fact, the whole army system of Servia is modelled on that of the Republic, and the training has been in the hands of French officers. This is a good augury, as the foremost military authorities believe that the present struggle will be decided in favour of the armies carrying the most effective field artillery.

THE NATIONALIST BOGEY.

THE FOLLOWING EXTRACT from La Patrie gives a good idea of what is now thought of the Nationalist—the true know-nothing of Canada. The Nationalists remind us of ungrateful little children who are bound to have their own nasty, cowardly, selfish way—if they can get it:

> "The Nationalist sheets, which have had nothing better to do since the declaration of war than to speak of the schools of Ontario and of our sacrificed language, might be good enough to tell us what would happen to Canada if Great Britain should be conquered by Germany. Germany victorious means the dismemberment of the British Empire, and the British flag would cross the seas, to be replaced by the Prussian eagles, unless the United States would be strong enough, by virtue of the Monroe doctrine, to take possession of our country. Would not our language and our schools be then exposed to sacrifice? The whole interest of Canadians is to remain attached to the British crown and to defend it with both ardor and generosity. Those who are indifferent to the terrible conflict now in progress are those who do not appreciate the wonderful advantages which we have under the protection of the British flag, and who cannot appreciate the complete liberty which we enjoy. They are traitors who would do otherwise than give loyal support to Britain. Shame to them!"

EDITORIAL NOTES.

IN STRIKING CONTRAST to some concerns is the action of the Canada Bread Company of Toronto, at its annual meeting on Thursday, when a most unusual statement was made by the president of the company, Mr. Cawthra Mulock. In effect, he told the shareholders not to look for profits this year, and further stating that he would like to be able to promise no increas in bread prices, but, while he could not do this, he would say that there would be no increase by his company until it was necessary to save the company from loss. As the Canada Bread Company does a large business throughout Canada, its attitude will probably have considerable effect.

"ALL SOLDIERS who give the subject their attention can hardly fail to be impressed by the very real thoroughness with which Canada is now dealing with the question of national defence," says the Naval and Military Gazette. "In this country there are very many old women of both sexes who see in the military training of young men and boys a pandering to the spirit of militarism. Col. Sam Hughes is not troubled with these gloomy forebodings. Canada is very much in earnest and her militia will soon be what the Defence Minister intends it should be—a serious organization inculcating citizenship and affording all a means of training themselves for the primary duty of the citizen," says the paper.

'Tis An Ill Wind, Etc.

(Montreal Journal of Commerce.)

Many of our manufacturers, such as those supplying clothing, boots and shoes, flour, textile goods, etc., will profit enormously by the war. In addition, it should be pointed out that the outbreak of hostilities will mean increased prices for the grain and cattle and other products which our farmers have to sell.

If the Kaiser Wins.

(Toronto News.)

If Germany wins, there will be no place in the world for the little nations. The brutal treatment already meted out by the kaiser's legions to the gallant Belgians furnishes a clue to what will happen in the case of an overwhelming Teutonic triumph. Belgium, Holland and Denmark would disappear from the world, and millions of French will be brought under the tyranny long endured by the people of Alsace and Lorraine.

When Eager to Criticize.

Youth's Companion.

When you are eager to criticize just stop a moment and put yourself soberly in the place of the man you wish to criticize, reflect on his difficulties, and especially on what you are sure must be his good intentions. Reflect also on your own vast ignorance of the facts he has to deal with. You will be surprised to find how much tamer your tongue grows.

Defying Rules of God and Man.

(Montreal News.)

What with sowing the high seas with mines, the use of dum-dum bullets, the levying of piratical imposts on Liege and Brussels, after having broken treaty with Belgium and reduced it to a welter of blood, the Germans are showing themselves in a ghastly role. It was bad enough to wantonly break peace, but these acts stamp the nation as desperate, reckless and defiant, alike of the rules of God and man.

Nordica's Estate.

St. Thomas Times.

The announcement that Nordica has left a million or more, will no doubt set ambition throbbing in the breasts of most of those choir singers who can hit high C on their lucky days. For 40 years rumors of fortunes achieved by great singers have been flooding Europe with American girls, most of whom had more vanity than talent, and more of whom came to grief than to distinction. The girls who are thus moved by Nordica's wealth should consider, not so much whether they have so good voices as hers, as whether they have her amazing perseverance and her almost unlimited capacity for hard work. Nordica's voice was by no means perfect and she had little dramatic aptitude for operatic work. But she learned to act as she learned to sing, by boning down to hard work and by applying her keen intelligence to a matter which was not instinctive at all.

Brothers in Arms.

London Times.

By common consent the Dominion peoples have risen with splendid unanimity to the needs of a moment when Great Britain requires all the help that they can give her. But there is some risk that, after our first impulse of gratitude has passed away, we may too easily forget what these efforts mean to those who make them and to us who receive them. For years men have doubted whether our loosely-knit system might not shake apart when put to any sudden test. And now the test has come. It has been a test as sudden and as severe as the most gloomy prophet of Imperial dissolution could ever have conceived. But we have emerged from it, so far at least as immediate consequences go, not only with supreme ease, but with a spontaneous advance towards Imperial consolidation. For this we have to thank the Dominions. Let us not forget, too, that the brotherhood which binds these peoples to us is not wholly a brotherhood of blood. French-Canadians, Dutch South Africans, the peoples of India, the native races of South Africa—each and all have declared during the last week their invincible attachment to the British Crown.

NAPOLEON

By Walt Mason

If great Napoleon's shade looks down from some red star, on mighty hosts arrayed for stern, decisive war, he'll see so many traps unheard of in his day, that he will groan, perhaps, and heave a sigh, and say: "Great Scott! Had I possessed such implements as those, how quickly galley west I should have knocked my foes! Ah, these quick-firing guns—magnificent, sublime! They scatter tons and tons of hardware at a time! And see those soldiers fly, on boiler metal wings! They soar up to the sky, and drop their bombs, by jings! Alas in all my wars I rode a spavined beast, but now, in motor cars, the generals proceed. When messages I sent, a soldier bore the same, and foemen, as he went, shot fragments from his frame; but now this wireless scheme sends messages afar, it all seems like a dream, and not a bit like war. My soldiers used to slay, with sword and spear they hewed; but now in half a day, they kill a multitude. Alas, I think with tears, of my brave, trusty ones, who fought with rusty spears and muzzle loading guns. The modern fighter knows no weary toil, I ween; he sizes up his foes, and kills them by machine. Had I been thus equipped for but one single hour, I surely should have stripped all captains of their power."

TURCOS ARE ALGERIANS

France's Dusky Warriors Have Splendid Record as Fighters.

The French Turcos, who immediately upon the outbreak of hostilities were sent into upper Alsace, are native Algerian troops, with a record for dash and courage that dates back to the Crimea.

They are an offshoot from the famous Zouave corps organized in Algeria by France eighty-five years ago.

There are four regiments of Turcos, and every man of them is a native Algerian. Three of these regiments are stationed in Algeria, but the fourth, known as the Turco Zouaves of the Imperial Guard, always have been kept in France.

In the Crimea, the Turco regiments distinguished themselves by their fearlessness, perfect discipline and marvelous endurance. They added greatly to their fame in the Franco-Prussian war, especially at the battle of Fraschwiller, in a charge of conspicuous gallantry against the Germans.

PREMIER TO OPEN

Canadian National Exhibition Toronto, August 31st

Sir James Pliny Whitney, Prime Minister of Ontario, will press the button on August 31st, that sets in motion all the machinery on the grounds of the Canadian National Exhibition, and formally throws the gates open to visitors from every land and clime. The selection of this sturdiest of Canadians for this important function has met with the most enthusiastic approval from citizens of all shades in politics, as being particularly appropriate for Peace Year. Sir James has devoted his life to building up Ontario, of which Toronto is the centre, and his broad and statesmanlike policy has had no little effect in bringing about the great success that has attended the Fair. While essentially a peace loving man, he is known as a bonnie fighter, and his recent successful struggle with the Great Conqueror, Death, won him universal admiration. His appearance on August 31st will no doubt take on the character of a public ovation.

FOR SALE

Mr. J. W. Fitzgerald is offering for sale some beautiful Building Lots on Benson and Geraldine Avenues.

This property lies within two minutes' walk of the Street Railway and within ten minutes' walk of the heart of the City. The City water, gas, light and sewer service are installed, the property already being completely surrounded by beautiful homes. The site is an ideal one, with a gentle southeasterly slope, and being considerably elevated above the city and not in the immediate vicinity of any manufacturing industries. The air is always pure, healthy and invigorating. Nearly all the lots are already beautifully wooded with foreign and domestic shade trees, and for anyone contemplating the erection of a home, there are certainly no lots in the city that offer equal advantages.

Copies of Registered Plan No. 149, which covers the property, may be seen and all other information may be had at the offices of Mr. R. J. Kidd, J. T. O'Connell & Co'y, C. J. Carroll & Co'y, also at the office of the owner, Mr. J. W. Fitzgerald, Ontario Land Surveyor, 435 George St. 'Phone 885.

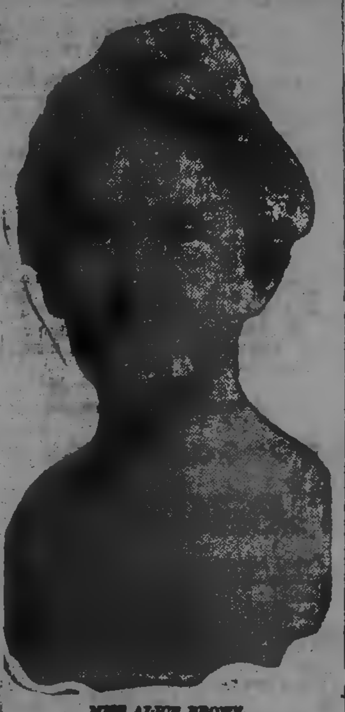
New England Novelist Wins $10,000 Prize With Her First Play.



MISS ALICE BROWN.

The prize of $10,000 offered on March 21, 1913, by Winthrop Ames, formerly director of the New theater and now proprietor of the Little and Booth theaters, New York, for the best American play, has been awarded to a woman.

Miss Alice Brown of Boston, novelist and short story writer of New England life and types, is the victor in the contest. The cash prize of $10,000 has already been paid to her, and her play, "Children of Earth," is in preparation for production early next season, probably at the Booth theater.

Miss Brown, who thus finds herself conspicuous in the theatrical world, was born at Hampton Falls, N. H., in 1857. She gained her education at Robinson seminary, Exeter, N. H., from which she was graduated in 1876. Almost immediately she took up literary work. Her insight into New England character and her knowledge of the life of which she was a part have been great factors in her success.

Her first book, "Meadow Grass," a collection of short stories, brought her immediate recognition. She has also published a volume of poems, a book of essays on travel, a great number of short stories that have first appeared in magazines and several ambitious novels. The best known of the latter are "The Story of Thyrza" and "Rose MacLeod."

MIND AND HEALTH.

Physical Conditions Often at the Mercy of Mental Attitudes.

A scientist writes: "A woman fancied she had swallowed a frog and was rapidly sinking. The efforts of physicians failed to afford her relief. It occurred to some one that she might be deluded into health. A tiny frog was caught and put into a tube with which they were attempting to wash out her stomach. When the frog was thrown out of the tube the girl expressed relief and said she hoped they were satisfied her complaints had a real foundation. In a short time she was restored to health. This is only one of the instances in which the mind has affected the physical condition.

"No one doubts that persons have been frightened to death, and ridicule in statements of this kind should end. The influence of the mind is a subject which calls for investigation and study. There is no question that mental agitation aggravates, if it does not cause, disease. Many a child droops and dies because it feels it is unappreciated and neglected. Many who survive drag out a miserable existence instead of being full of hope and joy and energy, promise and pleasure and making themselves useful in the world."—New York Press.

Marriage Age Still Rising.

Though two fourteen-year-old girls, thirteen aged fifteen, and one fifteen-year-old boy were among the brides and bridegrooms in the 283,834 marriages in England and Wales in 1912, the average marrying age in both sexes is steadily rising.

According to the Registrar-General's report for that year, which has just been issued, both brides and bridegrooms under twenty-five years old have shown a heavy and continuous fall ever since 1870. Among spinsters there is a fall at every age except between twenty-five and thirty-five, in which there has been a steady rise since the 'eighties.

The average age of all bridegrooms in 1912 was 29.12, of all brides 26.84. Bachelors averaged 27.34 years; remarrying widowers, 46.77; spinsters, 25.85; and widow-brides, 41.39.

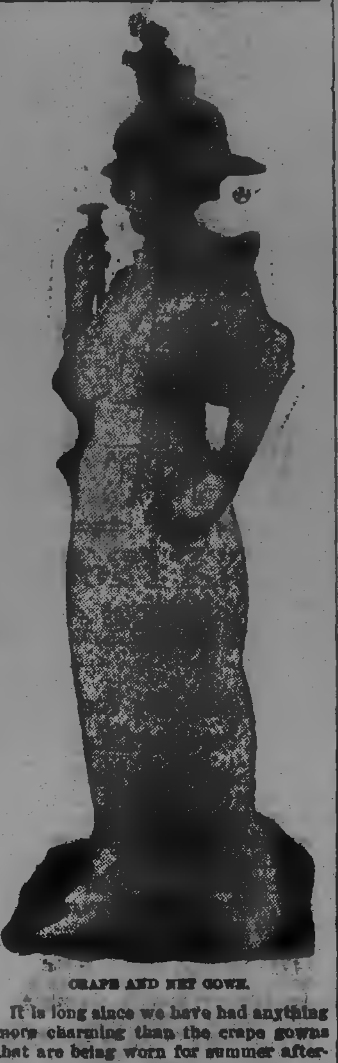
AFTERNOON GOWNS.

Crapes Are Used With Net For Garden Party and Casino.



CRAPE AND NET GOWN.

It is long since we have had anything more charming than the crape gowns that are being worn for summer afternoon fonctions. The dainty frock pictured here was donned recently by a fascinating debutante to wear at the garden party given by a Newport society leader. White net was combined with the pink and white figured crape. Net formed the much frilled skirt, the vest and finished sleeves and neck. The wide girdle was of white satin ribbon. Worn with it was a wide rimmed hat trimmed with flowers in small nodding sprays. The silk parasol was in a shade to harmonize with the figure in the gown. White suede shoes and long white silk gloves completed this much admired toilet.

AN INVITATION TO SICKNESS

Impure Blood Means a Breakdown in Your Health.

Impure blood is an invitation to sickness. The blood is at work day and night to maintain the health, and any lack of strength or purity in the blood is a weakness in the defence against disease. Anaemia is the doctor's name for lack of blood. There may be an actual loss in the quantity of the blood or one or more of its constituents may be lacking. Its truest symptom is pallor. Anaemia is particularly common in young girls. It is not, however, confined to them alone, for it is this same lack of blood that prevents full recovery from la grippe, fevers, malaria and operations. It is also present in old age and in persons who have been under unusual mental or physical strain. If you are suffering from this trouble, take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. They make pure, new blood with every dose, and this new blood means health and strength. Thousands have proved the truth of these statements, among them Mrs. Minnie Barteaux, Annapolis, N. S., who says: "Following the birth of my third child, I was a complete wreck. I felt and looked as if I did not have a drop of blood in my body. My heart would palpitate so violently that I could not walk upstairs without being completely exhausted. Night after night I would have to sit up in bed to get my breath. I had no appetite and suffered from severe headaches. I was taking doctor's medicine all the time and naturally felt very much discouraged. While in this deplorable condition my husband brought me home a couple of boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and before they were gone I could feel some improvement. I gladly continued their use until I had taken, I think, ten boxes, when I was completely cured, and I never was so well in my life as I have been since."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers in medicine, or will be sent by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Explaining It.

"I see, as the blind man said," remarked father when he was trying to be emphatic and facetious at the same time.

"He couldn't, though, could he?" inquired Willie.

"No, son. That was just the blind man's bluff."

Business.

"What would you consider evidence of a clever modern woman?"

"A clever modern woman?"

"The same."

"Well, I should think if she were wealthy she would keep her divorce lawyer on a salary."

A POSITIVE CURE FOR RHEUMATISM

Hundreds of People Have Found "Fruit-a-tives" Their Only Help

READ THIS LETTER

Superintendent of Sunday School in Toronto Tells How He Cured Himself of Chronic Rheumatism After Suffering for Years.

55 DOVERCOURT ROAD, Oct., 1st. 1913.

"For a long time, I have thought of writing you regarding what I term a most remarkable cure effected by your remedy "Fruit-a-tives". I suffered from Rheumatism, especially in my hands. I have spent a lot of money without any good results. I have taken "Fruit-a-tives" for 18 months now, and am pleased to tell you that I am cured. All the enlargement has not left my hands and perhaps never will, but the soreness is all gone and I can do any kind of work. I have gained 35 pounds in 18 months".

R. A. WAUGH

Rheumatism is no longer the dreaded disease it once was. Rheumatism is no longer one of the "incurable diseases". "Fruit-a-tives" has proved its marvellous powers over Rheumatism, Sciatica, Lumbago—in fact, over all such diseases which arise from some derangement of stomach, bowels, kidneys or skin.

"Fruit-a-tives" is sold by all dealers at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

EVER SEE A PINK MONKEY?

This South American Brand Is Worse Than the Other Kind.

If you should ever happen to be wandering about the Choco section of Colombia it would be well to have an eye out for the sobbing monkey. If this animal gets on your trail you might as well ring down the curtain and put a period after yourself.

When it gets after the Colombian Indians, according to H. G. Spurrell, naturalist and member of the London School of Tropical Medicine, the Indian listens to the beast's soul withering sobs for three days and three nights and then commits suicide.

Mr. Spurrell says that the sobbing monkey is pink and is one of the most rare animals in South America. For reasons that have never been made clear the sobbing monkey will at certain times in the year leave its home in the most impenetrable wilderness and go to the nearest Indian encampment, where it will select its victim and follow him day and night, keeping up a continual weeping and wailing.

According to tribal traditions this is a sure sign that the victim will shortly be taken with the sleeping sickness or some other fatal disease. It has been customary for the natives to listen to the monkey's sobbing for three days and three nights and then commit suicide, thus avoiding death by the dreaded sickness.—New York Mail.

Expensive Spoons.

Have you got a set of old Apostle spoons? If so, they may be worth hundreds of pounds to you. These silver spoons, the handles of which end in figures of the Apostles, were common baptismal presents in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. They have been copied very extensively, the modern ones, however, being of little intrinsic value.

The most valuable are those made by a certain Elizabethan silversmith towards the end of the sixteenth century. Apparently he got tired of using only the figures of the Apostles, for he designed quite a number bearing the figures of King David, Joshua, Judas, Maccabaeus, Hector of Troy, Alexander the Great, Julius Caesar, King Arthur, Guy of Warwick and Queen Elizabeth.

The full set of these unique Apostle spoons numbers thirteen, and quite recently a set of twelve, with the London hall-mark of 1592 and the original maker's mark—a crescent enclosing "W" in a shaped shield—were sold for $10,000.

The Earth Drying Up.

According to a report just laid before the Senate at Cape Town, South Africa is drying up, not because of any lessening of the average rainfall, but on account of the steady disappearance of the local water supplies. "There is no doubt," it is added, "that many parts of the Union will eventually become uninhabitable." Long ago Livingstone pointed out this probability, and within the last half century quite a number of lakes in Central Africa have disappeared, while Lake Chad is shrinking every year.

Europe is in no better case. A German geologist recently made an exhaustive inventory of the European lakes and found that hundreds had disappeared or been reduced to insignificant proportions. In the canton of Zurich 150 lakes were catalogued in 1660; now there are barely 70.

SIR JOHN JELLICOE

The Smallest But Mightiest Man in the British Navy.

Admiral Sir John Rushworth Jellicoe, K.C.B., commander of the British Home Fleet, is just the man to repel a German invasion of the British Isles, for he was commander of that part of the British fleet which represented a hostile German fleet in the last naval manœuvres. His fleet outmanœuvred the squadron representing the naval might of Britain and landed his troops on the coast of Lincolnshire.

He has seen much active service at various times. He took part in the relief of the legations at Pekin in 1900, commanding the Naval Brigade and acting as chief of staff to Sir Edward Seymour, who was in command of the British forces. Prior to that he had served with distinction at the bombardment of Alexandria and at Tel-el-Kebir.

He is the smallest man in the British Navy, and the tiniest Admiral in the world. Despite that, he is a great martinet, and the British Empire owes to him the complete reorganization and much consequent improvement in gunnery practice. He is idolized by the British "tars" by whom he is known as "J. J."

Work of the Sappers

To check the advance of an enemy, sappers construct an impenetrable hedge of barbed wire many feet thick, through which no human being could hope to cut his way with wire nippers, or by using explosives.

LAST GERMAN EMPEROR

(The London Express.)

Three years ago L'Echo du Merveilleux published a horoscope of the German emperor, cast by M. R. Larmier. It was as follows, and makes curious reading to-day:

Wilhelm II, born at Berlin, Thursday, January 27, 1859. The conjunction of Saturn, Mars and Taurus predict the fall of the House of Hohenzollern, and of the German empire, in 1913 or 1914. Jupiter predicts that Wilhelm II is the last German emperor of the House of Hohenzollern. If there is war in 1914 between France and Germany, France will be victorious."

The lines containing these words are to be found on pages 521 and 522 of the publication quoted.

We are not always ashamed of the things we conceal, but we run the risk of that accusation.

Rules of the Summer Pastime

A PLEASING GAME. The competition known as The Review Summer Pastime is being held through the columns of this newspaper for 75 days. In each issue of The Review there will be printed a rebus picture out of which the name of a baseball, hockey or football player can be made. The names are generally known throughout Canada, being published in newspapers frequently. A part of the names are Canadian and a part are from the important leagues of the United States.

HOW TO STUDY. See how a rebus picture will apply to any name you know. For example: MASON might be represented by a mason at work and WAGNER by a picture or statute of the famous musician. Only one name will logically fit any rebus picture when carefully analyzed. Although initials, first names or nicknames may be worked into rebus pictures as a guide to correct solving, it will suffice if surnames are written in Answer Form.

USE THE ANSWER FORM. Under each picture will be printed a numbered Summer Pastime Answer Form. On this the name of the player is to be written and when the series of Answer Form Coupons is completed, there will be 75 names. Only one name may be written on one Form. The contestant is to keep his or her Forms until the end of the series then send to this office, the series of 75 with a separate list of the names written additionally on a form that will be printed in The Review after the last picture has appeared. Our "Logbook" may be used; it entitles you to send in four sets of Answer Forms. You may win four prizes!!

QUESTIONS ANSWERED. Those who feel it necessary to ask any questions may write to Summer Pastime Department, The Review, Peterborough, and the letter will be placed with others to be answered in the columns of The Review from time to time.

COMMITTEE. A Summer Pastime Committee of fair-minded persons of high standing, who have no personal interest in this establishment or in the Pastime, will be selected to ascertain the winners. The decision of the Committee shall be final and all who enter do so distinctly upon this understanding.

OPEN TO ALL. The Review's Summer Pastime is open to everybody—excepting employes of this newspaper establishment and their families—regardless of sex or age; and it makes no difference where a competitor lives, provided the package of Answer Forms is returned within the time allowed. There can be no favoritism of any kind.

GENERAL RULES. Answer Forms may be filled in with pencil, ink, or typewriter. Poor handwriting or trifling errors will not count against a participant. No sets of Answer Forms are to be sent in until called for in The Daily Review after the last rebus picture has appeared. The management reserves the right to make any modification in the rules that may be found necessary during the progress of the Summer Pastime, or until the Committee takes charge. One participant may send in as many separate sets of Answer Forms as desired but he or she will be allowed to win not over four prizes. All persons are treated as independent individuals; therefore two or more members of a family or household have the same rights as if they were strangers to each other.

WINNERS. The person who sends in the set of 75 Answer Forms with largest number of correct names will be entitled to the first prize. If there should be a tie, then the prize will be evenly divided, unless there should be more than three participants tied for a prize, in which case those who have sent in sets of equal merit will be given a further opportunity to determine which shall win by solving a supplementary competition test. This rule will also apply in the ten lesser prizes. There will be no lottery or chance selection; all winners will be rewarded according to merit.

MRS. H. VON RODEN of LYNDON, KY.

Recommends Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for Backache, Nervousness, Headaches.

Lyndon, Ky.—"I have been taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for headaches, neuralgia pains, backache, nervousness and a general run down condition of the system, and am entirely relieved of these troubles. I recommend your remedies to my friends and give you permission to publish what I write."—Mrs. H. Von Roden, Lyndon, Ky.

When a woman like Mrs. Von Roden is generous enough to write such a letter as the above for publication, she should at least be given credit for a sincere desire to help other suffering women, for we assure you there is no other reason why she should court such publicity.

Canadian Woman's Experience:

Windsor, Ont.—"The birth of my first child left me a wreck with terrible weak spells, but I am glad to tell you that I do not have those weak spells and I feel like a new woman since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I am now well and strong and can do my own housework. I do not take medicine of any kind. It was Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that restored me to health."—Mrs. Robert Fairbairn, 72 Parent Avenue, Windsor, Ontario.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Budget Campaign by Presbyterians

At the behest of the committees on systematic giving for the Synods of Montreal and Ottawa, Toronto and Kingston, Hamilton and London, arrangements have been made for Dr. W. T. Herridge, Moderator of the General Assembly, and Dr. A. S. Grant, chairman of the Board of Finance, to visit the Presbyteries within their bounds. After their visits to the different Presbyteries, where they will deal with the church as a whole, a vigorous budget campaign is to be carried on through all the congregations. This will be undertaken by the Presbytery committees in co-operation with the secretaries of the church and representatives of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. Dr. Herridge and Dr. Grant are to begin their itinerary at Quebec on Tuesday, September 1, and will work westward. Their addresses will be delivered to the Toronto Presbytery on Tuesday, October 6.

Rev. Robert Laird, secretary of the Board of Finance, left Toronto yesterday for the Canadian North-west and will meet committees in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and will arrange for a budget campaign in those provinces.

FRANCIS JOSEPH HAS VAST WEALTH

Austrian Emperor Receives Highest Annuity

Vienna, Aug. 29.—The Emperor Franz Joseph's personal wealth is enormous. In addition to his revenues he receives a civil list of $6,600,000 kronen, the highest annuity paid by any nation to its sovereign. Out of this he provides allowances for the members of his family, pays for the upkeep of his numerous properties, makes donations to museums and libraries, subsidizes the Imperial theatres of Vienna and Budapest, and, if it were not for his princely income, his many charities would put him deeply into debt.

With all that, his personal abstemiousness is proverbial in Austria. The people say that he lives no better than the average of his middle-class subjects, and the valet who served him for more than thirty years is reported to have declared: "Ten kronen a day are enough for my imperial master to keep alive on."

Franz Joseph's menus are frugal. When he has worked from 6 o'clock in the morning to noon—going over ministerial reports, compiling documents concerning state and army, having the Vienese papers and clippings from all over the world read to him, receiving officials and so forth—he takes luncheon with his adjutant-general. There are soup, two dishes of meat, a glass of Bavarian beer and one of his special Havana cigars. Often he does not even take the time to sit down to his meal and simply has a plate of sandwiches and a glass of beer sent to his study. Dinner is at 7, and this also he takes alone with his adjutant-general, since his wife and son are no more and his daughters are married. It is generally composed of five courses; some light hors-d'-oeuvres, soup, boiled or roast meat, the celebrated Vienna "Mehlspeise" in some form or other, a dessert, beer and a cigar. He dislikes wine, and even at banquets and court dinners he is never seen but to sip at his glass of champagne when he makes or answers a toast.

Why Worry

Change Your Residence to Japan and Live on $23 a Year . . .

Seven thousand miles away is a nation of 52,000,000 people, whose average income is $23.00 a year. How do the Japanese live on such incomes? Their menu cards, if they had any, would read like this:—

BREAKFAST.
Tea.
Dried Fish Soup.
Boiled Barley and Rice.
Miso. Tea.
LUNCHEON.
Tea.
Ball of Cold Rice.
Cold Broiled Fish.
Tea.
DINNER.
Sake.
Vegetable Soup. Boiled Rice.
Sake. Miso.
Raw Fish Sliced. Rice Boiled.
Sake. Radish Pickle.
Tea. Sake.

Or, if you were to get a peep at the bookkeeping of a Japanese, you would see something like this:—

By one year's income .$23.00

To Taxes	54.40
To Rent	1.60
To Food	14.40
To Clothes	2.00
To incidentals	1.00

It is remarkable how the Japanese have taken to modern drinks. There are already three big beer breweries, and one may see the advertisements everywhere. The old time Japanese was satisfied with salt, rice beer or rice whiskey. It is a very strong liquor, and he drank it in large quantities every night of his life.

A Japanese gives the following estimate of the monthly cost of living for a mechanic's family, in which the husband earns 37½ cents a day and the wife 12½ cents. In this family are two children, one 9, one 7 years old, and an old mother of 60. The wages would amount to $15 per month if both worked thirty days, so this family is slightly above the average:

Rent	$1.50
Rice	4.00
Fuel, oil	.81
Vegetables	.81
Saving	1.00
Newspaper	.12
Sugar, soy, salt, tea	.93
Liquor and tobacco	1.35
School expense	.60
Children's allowance	.60
Bath	.37
Hair dressing	.26
Paper and matches	.10
Clogs	.24
Contingency	.80

The Miyako, a Japanese journal, gives the following estimate for a family of a little better standing. In this case besides the married couple there are two children, a grandmother, and a servant:—

Rent	52.50
Rice	3.50
Soy	.37
Salt, miso	.35
Sugar	.45
Milk	.55
Newspapers	.38
Vegetables	.75
Tea	.25
Oil (kerosene and vegetables)	.35
School expenses	.45
Stationery and books	.45
Hair dressing	.35
Bath (every other day)	.75
Fish (nine times)	.90
Beef (six times)	.60
Pickles	.21
Charcoal and wood	.90

In Japan there are only two men who pay taxes on an income of over $125,000 a year; there are 13 men who pay on $19,500; 67 who pay on $12,000 1-8, 96 who pay on $12,000; 96 who pay on $8,500, and 140 who pay on $5,500. Out of every 1,000 people there are seven who make at least $1,350 a year. The daily wages of workmen average as follows:—

Weaver, male	$0.22
Weaver, female	.13
Tailor, native dress	.27
Tailor, foreign	.40
Shoemaker	.33
Confectioner	.22
Carpenter	.40
Plasterer	.41
Stonecutter	.47
Sawyer	.39
Tile roofer	.47
Bricklayer	.56
Shipbuilder	.41
Cabinetmaker	.37
Cartmaker	.32
Harnessmaker	.35
Lacquerer	.30
Jeweller	.31
Blacksmith	.33
Potter	.32
Gardener	.36
Fisherman	.24
Farm Laborer	.19
Papermaker	.21
Printer	.25
Day laborer	.26
Maid servant, monthly	1.48
Man servant, monthly	2.18

No wonder America seems a paradise to the Japanese newcomer. If he be a coolie he can earn as much here in a month as he could at home in a year. The manner of living of the Japanese does not make allowance for palaces, automobiles, steam heat and such things. In all Japan there are just three hundred automobiles, and half of them are owned by foreigners.

The thick straw mats are the only furniture needed in a Japanese house. They are three by six feet in size and take the place of tables, beds and chairs. The house is never heated. In winter the people put on thick wadded kimonas, sit on their feet and hold their hands over a little charcoal brazier. For recreation they go out to the family burying ground to worship the spirits of their ancestors or to a shrine to see the cherry blossoms.

Redpath SUGAR

"I'VE three good reasons, Mother, for buying sugar in these sealed REDPATH Cartons.

"In the first place, I am sure of getting genuine REDPATH. Then, too, I know it is perfectly clean and pure, for it has never been exposed or handled. And the third reason is that this Carton makes the handiest sugar box you ever saw. I just clip off the corner, and the sugar runs out beautifully, as I want it."

"You are lucky, daughter. Ever since I've kept house I have always ordered REDPATH Sugar—and generally got it—but with these original packages you are always sure of the genuine, in perfect condition."

REDPATH Extra Granulated Sugar is put up in 2 and 5 pound Sealed Cartons and in 10, 20, 50 and 100 pound Cloth Bags—a size to suit every home. 79

WHOLE PROVINCE TO TAKE UP UNEMPLOYMENT CONDITIONS

Civic Heads Are Invited To Province-Wide Conference at Toronto—Not Charity But a Chance To Earn a Living

Toronto, Aug. 29.—The City Hall next Tuesday will be the scene of a Province-wide conference on unemployment. At a special meeting between Mayor Hocken, President Gundy of the Board of Trade, and Mr. W. K. McNaught, it was decided to invite the Mayors and Presidents of all the cities and larger towns in the Province to be present at the conference, which has already been called for Tuesday, between the city and the Provincial Government.

In a communication to Mayors of the various cities and towns in Ontario, giving notive of this meeting, his Worship, Mayor Hocken, says in part:

Dear Sir: It is now an acknowledged fact that on account of the unprecedented conditions created by the European war a large number of Ontario citizens are at present out of employment, and that their number will be largely increased before the end of the present year.

These citizens and their families must be kept from starvation, and the choice seems to lie between "work" or "charity."

They do not desire charity; but they do want a chance to earn a living for themselves and those depending upon them.

How best to effect this object has engaged the attention of many public-spirited citizens, and plans have been proposed and organizations projected, all having this end in view.

The general consensus of opinion is that in order to cope effectively with this situation every industrial municipality must be thoroughly and systematically organized along similar lines, and must undertake, so far as its means will permit, to look after its own quota of unemployed. Beyond this they must necessarily have the prompt and hearty co-operation of the other municipalities, and this can only be secured by a Central Provincial Association, such as that indicated above.

For the team he was always out reuton.
But now he don't care

BIBLE FOR EVERY FIGHTING MAN

London, Aug. 29.—The British nation at heart is still profoundly religious. The naval and military missions are distributing individual pocket bibles to every man in the army and fleet. Each bears this inscription for every sailor and soldier, written by Lord Roberts, "Fighting Bobs," the idol of the British army:

"I ask you to put your trust in God. He will watch over you and strengthen you. You will find in this little book guidance when you are in health, comfort when you are in sickness, and strength when you are in adversity.

"Roberts, F. M."

QUALITY CUSTOMERS

The most influential people of this city and surrounding locality are coming to our Optical Parlors regularly — placing their confidence in us and our goods, and imparting that confidence to their circle of friends. The public would not have confidence in us if we did not merit that confidence by giving the very best Optical Service.

Our motto has always been to give $1.00 value or a little more for every $1.00 that is spent with us. We want every patient that we fit with glasses perfectly satisfied. We are always pleased to make any necessary changes, until the patient is perfectly satisfied free of charge.

The thousands of records of satisfied customers which we have on file and which are open for your inspection at any time, show that the people of this city and vicinity appreciate our honest efforts to give them the very best Optical Service that can be had anywhere. [illegible] Quality Lenses are sold by us exclusively.

A GOOD IDEA

If the city council will borrow money from the citizens, they will have plenty of capital to go on with in much-needed work. It is better to give people work than to embarrass them with charity which they do not want. There is a very general impression that something of this nature should be done, and quickly, too. Distress is already here, and prospects are growing worse. Ordinary methods fit ordinary occasions, but we must adopt extraordinary methods for extraordinary occasions.

Give the citizens a chance to buy debentures, and spend the money on municipal works.

The city might be greatly benefited in all ways by this course, and something must be done. It is useless to leave the burden to others. They need not be imposed upon, and may refuse to assume it.

WORK FOR THE UNEMPLOYED!

PROTECTION WALL AT MURRAY STREET CREEK WILL FILL LONG FELT WANT

The board of works is doing a much needed work at present. That is the building of a protection wall along Murray street, where the creek flows along. At this point the creek has always been a great source of trouble. Since the drainage of the Cavan swamp has been turned into the creek, the water rises to the height of the roadway. Last spring it was more troublesome than ever. It washed away a large part of the roadway and nearly took the sewer with it.

So the board of works appropriated $450 to construct a wall parallel with the creek at this point. The wall is 250 feet long and tapers from 3 feet 6 inches at the bottom to 18 inches at the top. The concrete is all reinforced. A lot of trouble has been encountered in trying to secure a solid bottom. There is a large quantity of clay at this point, which has made the excavating very hard. The foundation is laid about two feet under the level of the creek, and will stand about seven feet high. There are ten men on the job, under the foremanship of Jack Thirnbeck, and, though only at work for a short time, they have made rapid progress. When this is completed, it will improve the surrounding vicinity, and put at ease the minds in the engineer's department.

SAID HE WAS ONLY BLUFFING

Man With Revolver Charged With Threatening

Robert Gardner appeared before Magistrate Dumble this morning charged with threatening to shoot his father-in-law, William Francis. The accused strongly expounded the fact that he was only bluffing, but as he had purchased a revolver, the bench decided that it would be best to have him bound over to keep the peace.

The bond was placed at $200 and if not produced Gardner will spend thirty days on the hill.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

SECOND SUGGESTION TO HOLD FAST DAY.

Editor Review:

Sir,—The fighting is not lessening, and, as far as reports go, the enemy is making conquests. We all know dear ones who have left their homes to help to bring about a defeat. So far, so good. But although I already suggested the proclaiming of a "fast day" for humiliation for the nation's sins and for supplications, no notice has been taken of it.

It would be too much time lost to give a whole week-day to God! The first day of the week—Sunday, as it is now paganly called—is plenty; but does He thank us for that? The Sabbath Day is His own institution.

Jonah was told by God as follows: "Arise, go to Nineveh, that great city, and cry against it, for their wickedness is come up before me." But Jonah did not want to go, for he knew that God would be merciful if they repented. So he slunk into a ship out of the road, but God sent a great wind into the sea, and there was a mighty tempest in the sea, so that the ship was like to be broken. It shows that for the disobedience of one of His messengers, He will make a big commotion that will affect more than the disobedient one.

The word of the Lord came to Jonah the second time: "Arise, go to Nineveh, that great city, and preach the preaching: I bid thee." So Jonah began to enter the city and to cry, "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be overthrown."

"So the people believed God and proclaimed a fast. The king laid aside his robe and covered himself with sackcloth and ashes, and he caused it to be proclaimed and published through Nineveh: Let neither man nor beast, herd nor flock, taste anything. Let them not feed, nor drink water, but let man and beast be covered with sackcloth, and cry mightily unto God. Yea, let them turn everyone from his evil way and from the violence in his hands. Who can tell if He turn that we perish not?"

This is just what appeals to me as being what we are required to do today. I believe that God will delay answers to prayer, until the nations come down off their pedestals and think Him worthy of one whole week-day, to humble themselves before Him. Every individual has to come before Him one day—sooner or later.

He can stop the war pretty quickly if we are willing to put Him to the test.

My prayer is, to see King Jesus glorified, and He will be glorified, but perhaps at a great cost, if we do not consider our ways and turn our feet unto His testimonies.

I am, etc.,
"HUMBLE SCOTTIE."

The Silver Lining of the War Cloud will be the subject of the discourse by Rev. J. R. Webb in Murray Street Baptist church Sunday evening.

If a man is attentive to his wife in public, she will overlook a lot of private neglect.

A Duty of Tomorrow

Editor Review,

Sir,—May I through your columns direct the attention of all members of the Church of England (especially non-Church-going persons) to the important intercessions on behalf of the Empire and her forces, and particularly for the restoration of peace, to be offered in all churches of our communion tomorrow, at the usual hours of service.

We all realize that it is our patriotic duty and privilege to be interested in, and to give support to the men who have gone to the front, to fight for the Empire, and for what we believe to be a righteous Cause. Already these men are falling by thousands on fields of battle, their souls hurried into eternity with little possibility of preparation. Surely they and their sorrowing relatives need the sympathy and prayers of us, who can gather quietly in our churches in living fellowship with them. While they do their duty, let us do ours.

Through prayer, and what goes with it we can yield a mighty power, and the more earnest helpers the mightier will this power be.

In the vast and critical international complications, when human diplomacy has failed and reason has given way for the moment, to brute force, it is all important, that the still overruling Divine Power should be brought to bear.

This most serious time is a season for serious things, if ever the churches should be crowded by prayerful people, now is that time. For the sake of the Cause of God, and of this Empire, we simply can't afford to let our people stay ineffectively scattered about in their different homes, thus weakening the Church and Her work. Let every single individual hear "the call to the colors" and come into united effective action.

While there is to be a special and distinct effort tomorrow, the necessity for steady continuance will be readily seen and alms, efforts and prayers must all be offered together, though if a man cannot give money, it would seem all the more important that he should offer the prayers which he can give. While I may with diffidence thus speak to only members of the Church of England, I well know, that in this Cause, all sections of the Church are in warm co-operation.

At this time of national need, we shall all be brought into closer comradeship, as loyal sons and daughters of the Empire.

Yours, etc.,
J. C. DAVIDSON.

THE PRESS ON THE WAR

Classified.

(Cincinnati Times-Star.)

Belgium may at least claim the championship of bantamweight nations.

The Right.

(Rochester Herald.)

Can it be possible that the sober thought of the eight or ten nations now in opposition to him are wrong, and that he (the Kaiser) alone is right? We think not.

Victoria's Words Recalled.

(News of the World.)

Martin Harvey recalls the words of Queen Victoria in the worst days of the Boer war: "I refuse to allow my house to be made a melancholy house." This is the spirit which wins battles.

"Driven to War."

(Ottawa Journal.)

Rather a commentary on the preaching that the toiling masses are always driven to war by people who don't go themselves, is the fact that the first British soldier dangerously wounded is a nobleman with an income of $600,000 a year.

The Woman's Part.

(Harper's Weekly.)

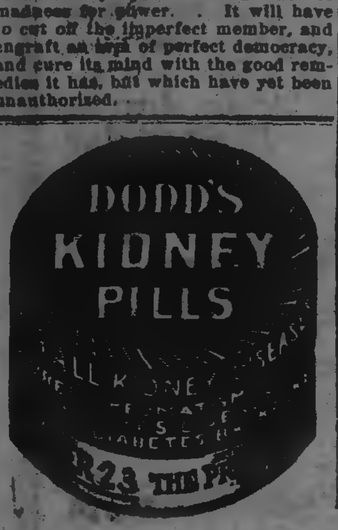
The women of Europe have the harder part to play in the great struggle. Victory or defeat, both alike will bring desolation to many homes. If there be such a thing as patriotism, its highest form is surely the surrender of the best beloved to the call of battle. There is work for the women who wait, happily, work to occupy their minds. And when peace comes, may women speak out plainly. They will have earned the right to be heard.

The Withered Arm.

(London Advertiser.)

The Kaiser has a withered arm. It was because of this that he reviled the good name of his mother, though his father's early death indicated to the European observers the real cause of the emperor's physical imperfection. When Wilhelm eats his meals he must use a fork with a handle twice the length of the ordinary instrument. His photograph is almost always taken to show his perfect arm, and no one in Germany has ever made public reference to the affliction knowing it to be a forbidden subject.

The Kaiser's withered arm and the peculiar mental deficiency of the man may yet come to symbolize the German empire. It stands a fine, advanced figure of a nation, able and efficient, advanced and investigating. Yet it has the withered arm of autocracy upon it and a trace of madness for power. It will have to cut off the imperfect member, and engraft an arm of perfect democracy, and cure its mind with the good remedies it has, but which have yet been unauthorized.



TO ATTACK LEMBERG

Russians Ready For Assault on Capital of Galicia

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 29.—The Russian army has driven in the outlying Austrian defences and is now in position to attack Lemberg, capital of Austrian Galicia. The Russians are now within twenty miles of the city in heavy force. The Austrian army corps, which have been opposing the Russian advance, have been split and forced back on the fortifications of Lemberg with heavy losses.

Announcement was made by the War Office yesterday that Russian troops in force are already in the vicinity of Koenigsburg, having driven back the German outposts on the crossings of the River Alle to that fortress. The first real strength test of the German and Austrian defence is being made. Two general battles, one in eastern Prussia and the other in Austrian Galicia have begun.

The Austrian battle has for its objective Lemberg, capital of Galicia. Gen. Wanaff with a Russian army of 200,000 men, heavily supported by artillery, has attacked the fortified Austrian positions along the Sereth river and in the Dneister river valley. Russian aeroplanes have already flown over Lemberg and report that Austrian reinforcements are being sent to the scene. Another strong Russian force is being sent to Gen Wanaff's assistance. This column is moving from the northeast and is said to comprise three army corps. It is the intention of the Russians either to capture or isolate Lemberg before any further advance is made.

In Eastern Prussia the Russians are now pressing Koenigsburg, the Prussian outposts having been driven from the positions along the Alle river. The 20th German Army Corps which suffered severely in the early fighting is now isolated in the forts at Allenstein. The German force are now marching on new positions and are believed to be preparing for their first real stand.

Thirty Thousand Dollar Fire.

TRENTON, Aug. 29.—Trenton was the scene of a $30,000 fire yesterday morning, when, starting from the Trenton garage in a gasoline explosion, the flames spread to the Asiz wholesale fruit establishment, thence to Cooper's shoe store and the Rathbun livery. About a dozen automobiles were burned in the garage, and early this morning the flames were spreading into a group of houses near the railway tracks. There is very little insurance on the burned buildings.

Austrian Troops Starving.

ROME, Aug. 29.—(Via London.)—The correspondent at Trieste, Austria, of The Messagero says:

"A serious condition prevails at Pola, where the troops have been reduced to half rations. An entrenched camp is being constructed around Pola.

"The Austrian troops operating in the south have been ordered to remain on the defensive, because a large number of troops have been taken from Bosnia and sent to Galicia to oppose the Russians, who are making alarming progress."

Germans Threaten Art Works.

LONDON, Aug. 29. — A despatch to Reuter's Telegram Co. from Ostend, says that of the German war levy of $40,000,000 on the city of Brussels, thus far only $200,000 has been paid, and the Germans declare that if the remainder is not made good they will seize the pictures and works of art in the museums.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 28.—The wheat market was more settled today, fluctuations being comparatively narrow and trading quieter. Quite a lot of hedging was going on and cash premiums were fading away, the demand being less keen. Sentiment generally is that the bulge recently seen is enough for the present.

Winnipeg wheat opened 1c to 1⅞c lower for October and December and the range in prices up to noon was 1¼c to 1¼c. Oats opened unchanged and ranged ⅛c to 1c. Flax opened 1c lower and dropped five cents, altho it recovered later slightly. Wheat closed 1⅝c to 2⅛c lower.

Cash grains closed: Wheat, 2¼c to 2⅝c lower; oats, 1c to 1¼c lower; barley, ¼c lower; flax, 3c lower.

Atlantic Fleet Reinforced.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—The British consulate admitted yesterday that at least five additional British warships have been added to the British-French patrol now engaged in searching for German warships in the Atlantic and in keeping the steamship lanes open to British shipping. A number of British battleships have been reported off the coast, and it is assumed they are here to convoy the Canadian expedition army force to France.

TSINGTAU IS STRONG.

Narrow Neck of Land Will Aid Germans In Their Defence.

KIAOCHAU, China, Aug. 29.—German reservists from distant parts of China are still entering Tsingtau. Many of them, khaki-clad, are along the railway in Wei-hsien, Province of Shantung, and Tsingtau. The first German outposts are at a village 12 miles from Tsingtau. It is there that the bridge has been broken.

The outer line of defence runs from the small river Litsum through the mountains, about eight miles from Tsingtau. This line is not strongly fortified, and the real defence probably will be made across a narrow neck of land only three-quarters of a mile long, three miles from Tsingtau.

The mountains within this line are named Moltkeberg, Bismarckberg and Iltisburg. Powerful guns are in position on the slopes leading to these mountains. The defences are strengthened by barbed wire entanglements and mines on the plain between the two ranges of mountains, while trees have been felled and villages burned.

PUBLIC TO KEEP OUT.

Special Hours Appointed For Visitors to Valcartier.

VALCARTIER, Que., Aug. 29.—The woman who was arrested Thursday night by a sentry masquerading as a soldier, was taken from the camp yesterday by a member of the provincial police. She was escorted to Montreal and then deported. It has developed that her name was Lewis and she was connected with a Boston paper.

Headquarters placed sentries at all entrances to the camp yesterday morning. Four different points were selected where passes will be issued to visitors who have important business in the grounds. Six hours on Sunday and nine hours on Saturday were set aside for those who care to enter the camp, but any other time any person found in the camp without a pass will be handed over to the civil police.

This was an ideal day for soldiering and the troops were drilled for many hours in skirmishing, shooting at the rifle ranges, physical exercises and company formation. Lieut.-Col. McBain has offered a cup to the company in the camp which displays the best marksmanship in advancing on the targets and rapid firing.

More than 1,800 western troops arrived yesterday, putting the camp strength to 22,000. The first detachment of artillery is expected early today. About 4,000 artillerymen, comprising ten batteries, only one of which is from the west, are moving toward Valcartier. All are due to be here within the next 36 hours. About fifteen special trains will reach the camp to-day.

TIDE IS TURNING.

Belgian Army Forcing Germans Back on Brussels.

OSTEND, Aug. 29.—The situation in Belgium is changing gradually. The Belgian army is forcing the Germans back on Brussels. The Belgians have definitely recaptured Malines, and the train service there was resumed yesterday. In the morning they reached Vilvorde, within ten miles of Brussels, and well known to tourists as the terminus of the Brussels trams. Fighting commenced at Hemixena, outside the city, and the Germans are entrenching themselves for defence to the north of Brussels. One German army corps has been withdrawn from the south, through Alost, to check the Belgian advance. A great battle is impending, and every day the Belgians are regaining lost ground.

The change that is beginning will be most gratifying to the allies, and to Belgians in particular it will mean that the two theatres of war, the first in the south and the other at Malines and Antwerp, now regarded as two distinct fields of action, will be merged into one. Since the fall of Brussels a wedge has been driven through Belgium by the German forces, but it is a wedge that has not much substance in it.

Drowning at Cornwall.

CORNWALL, Aug. 29.—Otto Curtis, 24, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Curtis of Massena Point, was drowned in Grasse river below the power house. Curtis, who was employed on the night shift on the dredge Charles M. Hall, went out on the pipe line, slipped, fell and was carried by the current under one of the pontoons.

THE SPORTING WORLD

PETES GOT VERDICT IN TWELFTH INNINGS

AFTER twelve innings of errorless ball, hard-fighting ball, the Petes returned from the ball yard yesterday afternoon, or rather yesterday evening, with the scalps of Doc Reisling's warriors dangling from their belts. Baseball is a funny old game, but if it wasn't marked by that peculiar strain at times it would soon pass to oblivion. On Thursday the Blountmen practically booted the game away, and yesterday they displayed as much real baseball as the winers of a real World's Series, and in that fact lies the victory. For twelve long innings did they fight, and fight hard.

Heck and Sterling were the opposing twirlers, and at the end of the ninth both teams had one run to their credit and both pitchers were going strong. Sterling was taken out to allow a pinch hitter to bat, and at the tenth frame Louis Schettler climbed to the top of the rubber. For three stanzas he and the other eight men held the visitors scoreless, and in the last half of the twelfth Blount's single, Welsh's sacrifice and Dolan's double put another to the long string of Schettler's victories.

We now present the minutes of the meeting, which kept some hundred and fifty late for supper:

First Inning.

London. — Linneborn lifted to Rooney, Bierbauer walked but went out stealing, Kelly to King. Whitcraft grounded to King. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterboro.—Blount flied to short, Welsh walked but was caught stealing. Dolan singled but was left stranded when Rooney popped to short. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Second Inning.

London.—Lamy went out, Byrne to Bierbauer, Reidy struck out, Neale singled through second but went out stealing, Kelly to King. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterboro.—Byrne skied to Neale, King raised to Lamy and Fox went out, Whitcraft to Bierbauer. No runs, hits or errors.

Third Inning.

London.—Mullin flied to Blount, Snyder singled, Heck was hit, Linneborn missed three. Bierbauer walked, filling the bases but Sterling got out of the hole by fanning Whitcraft. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterboro.—Kelly singled to right, Sterling fanned, Kelly stole second, and took third on Blount's death at first. He was left stranded when Welsh raised to Reidy. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Fourth Inning.

London.—Lamy flied to Rooney, Reidy raised to King and Neale died on a grounded to Dolan. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterboro.—Dolan went out, Mullin to Bierbauer, Rooney bounded a hit off Mullin's glove and went to third on Snyder's bad peg to first but went out stealing home. Byrne fanned. No runs, one hit, one error.

Fifth Inning.

London.—Mullin went out, Sterling to Dolan, Snyder raised to Blount. Heck walked, but went out stealing, Kelly to King. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterboro. — King flew out to Lamy, Fox went out in a similar manner to Neale and Kelly popped to Whitcraft. No runs, hits or errors.

Sixth Inning.

London.—Linneborn skied to Welsh, Bierbauer struck out and Whitcraft raised to Welsh. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterboro. — Sterling fanned, Blount beat out a bunt and went to second on Mullin's bad peg. Welsh walked. Both runners advanced on Dolan's death at first but were left stranded when Rooney went out, short to first. No runs, one hit, one error.

Seventh Inning.

London.—Lamy went out, Kelly to Dolan, Reidy raised to Welsh and Neale went out, Dolan to Sterling. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterboro.—Byrne bounded a hit of Mullin's shins, King sacrificed, Fox burned one at Heck which the pitched couldn't handle, Kelly walked, Sterling raised to Whitcraft but Blount fanned. No runs, two hits, no errors.

Eighth Inning.

London.—Mullin popped to Byrne, Snyder doubled to the barns and scored on Heck's single. Linneborn sacrificed, Byrne to Dolan. Bierbauer singled but Heck was caught coming home on a nice peg by Welsh. One run, three hits, no errors.

Peterboro.—Welsh was out, hit by batted ball. Dolan went out, Heck to Bierbauer, Rooney walked and went to second on a passed ball. Byrne raised to short. No runs, hits or errors.

Ninth Inning.

London. — Whitcraft skied to Welsh, Lamy lined to Blount and Reidy went out, Byrne to Dolan. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterboro. — King poled out a triple, Fox died, second to first, Kelly beat out a bunt, Miller batting for Sterling hit to Bierbauer who threw too late to get King at the plate. Blount forced Miller at second and Welsh went out, short to first. One run, two hits, no errors.

Tenth Inning.

London.—Schettler went to the mound for the Petes and passed Neale, Mullin singled and Snyder hit to Dolan who threw Neale out at third. Heck hit to Fox who got Mullin at third. Linneborn singled but Bierbauer died, Schettler to Dolan.

Peterboro. — Dolan singled and Rooney sacrificed. Dolan took third on Byrne's death at first but King grounded to first. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Eleventh Inning.

London.—Whitcraft went out, Fox to Dolan. Lamy flied to Blount and Reidy fanned. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterboro. — Fox fanned, Kelly flied to Neale, Schettler died on a grounder to Mullin. No runs, hits or errors.

Twelfth Inning.

London.—Neale beat out a bunt, Mullin sacrificed, Snyder flied to Welsh and Neale was caught stealing. Kelly to Byrne. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterboro.—Blount singled, Welsh sacrificed then Dolan drove in the winning run with a double to right. One run, two hits, no errors.

Just Wondered.

"By the way, did you know Julius Caesar?"

"Of course not. He has been dead for about 2,000 years."

"That's so, isn't it? Say, how long have you been dead?"

Doesn't Talk Long.

"He tells all he knows."

"Is that so?"

"That's a fact."

"Then what does he do?"

Three Games Next Week

London and Petes will bring the present series to a close this afternoon at 3 o'clock, and then the Cockneys will depart for their home town. The Blountmen remain for the first three days of next week to entertain George O'Neil's Erie aggregation. The last three days of next weke the locals will be in Hamilton and then jump to Ottawa to close the season on Sunday and Labor Day.

COMMENT

As You Like It

King's triple in the ninth frame of yesterday's enconnter came in the right time as did Kelly's single which sent the second baseman across the pan with the timely run. That's two triples for Crester this week.

When Bob Sterling grooved the pill in the eighth with Snyder at bat he hardly realized that the catcher would hoist the spheriod to the top of the barns. A little wind and it would have gone over for a homer.

Lefty Welsh's heave which enabled Kelly to get Heck at the pan was a beautiful peg. The southpaw left fielder has demonstrated the prowess of his whip on several occasions of late and is also fielding well.

Snyder had a double play unassisted in the fourth innings. It came when one man was down, Rooney on third and Byrne at the bat with 2 and 2 on him. Heck tossed Byrne a spitter and as he delivered the ball Rooney tried to steal home. Byrne miss, striking out, and the rightfielder was caught about five feet from the plate.

Oskee Neale is not batting as well as he should. Somehow or other he has acquired the habit of stepping back when he swings and that always brings disastrous results.

Jack Halligan continues to struggle in the darkness. On several occasions yesterday he brought the players to their toes with his raw decisions. He tacked a five dollar fine on Speed Kelly in the eleventh for talking too much at the plate.

"What do you thing of the Umps in the Canuck League?" was the question asked Doc Reisling. After a cold shiver had passed over his big frame the Doctor expressed himself as being surprised that President Fitz, being such a good fellow as he is, wouldn't take a shot around the circuit and see the men he has working for him. In the Doc's opinion Lush is the rawest and Buck Freeman the best of the outfit. We didn't see much of Buck but Lush is very, very poor. It would pay the President of our little circuit to pay the groundkeepers half a dollar a day more and send them in to handle the indicator.

The fans of the city are going to see something unusual on Labor Day when the local amateurs hook up with the Chemong Indians. The Red Skins haven't lost a game in the past two years, hence they must be playing a good class of ball.

As is generally known, Edwin Lamy the fleet outfielder of the London Cockneys is a wonder on ice, that is as far as fancy skating is concerned. It was reported that he intended trying out for professional hockey this winter and approached about the matter, Lamy stated that he already has an offer and intends taking it.

For Lamy to get into pro hockey is considered by many the height of folly. He has a few good years of baseball in him yet and nothing will put a man under quicker than playing the professional winter pastime. Lamy might be a speedy skater but he's not a hockey player and he will find it harder to get out a russle for a place than Bobby Heck would trying to work behind the bat. If the speedy outfielder is wise he will leave professional hockey alone.

Johnny Evers, better known as the "Trojan," sometimes called the "Human Crab," stands forth today as one of the greatest ball players of this or any other age. Toasted as a player under Frank Chance; he was roasted as a manager by Charles Webb Murphy and others. Evers stands forth today as having redeemed himself in the eyes of the baseball world.

Evers has "made" the Boston Nationals. It was predicted during the winter months that the Trojan would make the Braves a pennant contender and Johnny has come through with the goods.

A year ago with practically the same team in the field George Stallings piloted the Braves home in fifth place. They finished the season with 69 victories and 82 defeats, a mark of .457. This was 31½ games and .207 percentage points in the rear of the pennant winning Giants. McGraw's team winding up the campaign with 101 victories and 51 defeats, a .664 rating.

Look at the Braves today. They are right in the running for the National league flag. And evers probably has made them what they are. Johnny supplanted Capt. Sweeney at second and his great batting, sensational fielding, clever base running and above all his incomparable baseball brain have made the Braves over from a fair team into one that has the respect of every National league club.

Frank Shaughnessy's methods have proved successful. The big bow-legged and dominating pilot of the Ottawa Senators is once again on a fair way to the Canadian league championship, and now that he has wrested the top rung from the Londoners it is going to prove a mighty tough job dislodging him.

Shaughnessey has spent considerable money to get his club up there, but his spendthrift tendencies have not been in vain. He deserves credit. A month ago the race was considered practically over and the championship was conceded to London. At that time Ottawa was in the throes of a bad slump and was suffering from injuries that threatened to shove them down toward the second division. However, the always-fighting "Shag" never gave up and his stick-to-itiveness has resulted in him again topping the clubs and putting him on the road to the championship. Should the Senators go along and maintain their lead till the finish, one week from Monday, it will be a great boost for the big manager, who has already taken two pennants to the Capital. He's a fighter, and it's the fighter who wins.

Meeting of Red Cross Committee

A meeting of the Red Cross Committee was held Friday afternoon in the Public Library. It was decided to start immediately with the making of the various hospital supplies required which include night shirts, pillow slips, bandages, covers for hot water bottles, cholera belts, shirts and socks.

Donations of grey flannelette and grey or red wool fingering will be gratefully received and may be sent to the Y.W.C.A., care Miss Peacock.

Party of Koreans who together with Colonel and Mrs. Hoggard will visit Peterboro Friday, Sept. 4th, and will hold a great missionary meeting in the S. A. Temple.

These Christian Koreans have suffered very much in the recent persecutions that have taken place in Korea and will have some thrilling stories to tell.

Colonel and Mrs. Hoggard who pioneered the work of the S. A. in Korea will also have something rich in the way of experience to tell.

The Koreans will be dressed in their native uniform and will present a rather strange spectacle. Altogether this had ought to be a very interesting meeting not only the Salvationists but for all who are interested in missionary work.

HERE AND THERE

If there is one man in Canada who has shown a supreme patriotism, it is Major Hamilton Gault, of Montreal. In addition to equipping the Princess Patricia Light Infantry, he and his wife will both go to the scene of the conflict, Mr. Gault having accepted a commission as major with the regiment.

MISTAKES OF WAR

Charges in Close Order Against Machine Guns Means Annihilation.

There is something curiously reminiscent about the method of attack of the Germans upon a heavily fortified town like Liege.

Learning nothing from the experience of 1870, this assault was made in "close order," which, in the technical military phrase would be in quarter column, with the men practically touching, and each company a few yards behind the other. It was made, moreover, against machine guns and magazine rifles, in spite of all the lessons about open order fighting furnished by the Boer war and that in Manchuria.

At the battle of Worth, General Schmidt drew up the Guards Brigade within 1,200 yards of the French lines, in similar close order. He saw 10,000 of his 30,000 men put out of action in twenty minutes, and he returned to Berlin in disgrace.

At that time the French were armed with the then new breech-loading Chassepot rifle. It was an arm of precision at that distance, and its grave defect was scarcely discovered until the frightful defeat of the French at Sedan. The cartridge had a brass end; but the rest of it was composed of material largely consisting of silk fibre. In the discharge of the rifle this silk fibre jammed the action of the gun. During the French defeat the appalling spectacle was seen of whole French batallions out of action and powerless for this reason.

But forty-four years after an experience like that of Worth, the German drill sergeants still think it good war to waste human lives in a frontal attack in close order upon a fortified place. It cost the Japanese months to capture Port Arthur, and they made no such mistake. Its outlying fortifications, in fact, were destroyed by siege artillery, and the Boers had taught them, through the British, to fight in open order, at long intervals between each man, with every possible use of cover.

Tea Embargo Removed Price Drops Five Cents

The Salada Tea Company announced Tuesday that they had reduced the prices of their teas five cents a pound. They make the following announcement:

The embargo on tea has been definitely removed in England, and however temporary this may be, we have taken advantage of it to immediately reduce our prices five cents per pound.

This is in spite of the fact that war risk insurance and freights are still abnormally high, and that no shipments have yet been made from Ceylon or India.

All these conditions leave the tea situation, while relieved somewhat from last week, still in very difficult condition and it is impossible to see a week ahead.

We are undertaking to take back all the tea we shipped last week from the grocer, and pay him for it exactly what he paid us. The cost of this will be very large, but we know this is the only way in which the interests of both the consumer and the grocer can be safeguarded.

Grand Trunk Ready to Move Grain From Prairie Provinces

The Grand Trunk and Grand Trunk Pacific Railways are busily preparing to move their share of the big harvest from Western Canada to the shipping points. Arrangements have been made for a plentiful supply of cars and in the territory served by the Company's lines it is expected that there will be very little delay in the grain movement this year.

The Grand Trunk Railway System has done good work for both the grain grower and grain dealer, by steadily increasing its elevator capacity at the various important tidewater and lake terminals, including Montreal, Portland, Tiffin, Depot Harbor, Sarnia and Fort William. The Company now has in its elevators of varying size—from the small country elevator receiving grain from waggons and loading into cars to the huge terminal elevators at Fort William — capacity for over twenty million bushels of grain. The prediction has been made that within the next ten years as much Canadian grain from Saskatchewan and Alberta will find its way to Europe by way of the Pacific Coast and the Panama Canal as will get out by the Atlantic. Indeed giant elevators are already planned for Prince Rupert. That port as the Pacific terminus of a transcontinental railway surpassing its rivals by reason of its practically level roadbed, would appear to be the natural shipping point for much of the Canadian West.

KITCHENER BARS CAPTAIN WHO COULDN'T APPEAR IN PUBLIC WITHOUT MONOCLE

An aristocratic captain of one of England's crack cavalry regiments is bitterly repenting ever having donned a monocle.

Despite the chaff of his brother officers, the officer never appeared without his single pane of glass. It was currently reported that he wore it in bed and when he took a bath.

A couple of days after Lord Kitchener took over the war office the monocled captain, feeling certain his family influence would secure him a staff job, presented himself and asked for an appointment.

"K. of K." glared at the window-pane and said:

"Is it absolutely necessary for you to wear that glass in your right eye?"

"Yaas, certainly, my lord, I weally couldn't see without it."

"Ah, I am sorry to hear that," said the famous field marshal grimly, "you had better report yourself for depot duty. I can only have men with me who can see well."

As the discomfited officer descended the stairs a crash of glass was heard.

BRITISH TROOPS ARE RESTED AND REINFORCED, KITCHENER'S STATEMENT

They Have Not Been Molested Since Thursday Last—During Four Days From Aug. 23 to Aug. 26 Gen. French's Force Stubbornly Resisted Advance—Loss to British is Placed at 5,000 to 6,000

LONDON, Aug. 31.—After four days of desperate fighting, the British army in France, is rested, refitted and reinforced for the next great battle, according to an announcement yesterday by Lord Kitchener, Secretary of State for War. In a statement based on reports from Sir John French, commander of the British expeditionary forces, the Secretary says that the British, after struggling against tremendous odds, retired to a new line of defence where they have not been molested since Thursday. Their casualties are between 5,000 and 6,000. Since this fighting ceased, the French on the right and left, have brought the German attack to a standstill, it is declared.

The official news bureau issued a statement yesterday, authorized by Lord Kitchener, regarding the recent fighting of the British troops. It says in part:

During the four days, from Aug. 23 to Aug. 26, the British troops conforming to the general movement of the French armies, resisted and checked the German advance and withdrew to new lines of defence. "The battle began at Mons, Belgium, on Sunday. The stubborn German attack was completely checked on the British front. The Germans made vigorous efforts with superior numbers on Monday to preserve the safe withdrawal of the British force and to drive it into the fortress at Maubeuge (in France, southward of Mons). Their efforts were frustrated by the steadiness and skill with which the British retirement was effected.

"Very heavy losses were inflicted on the enemy's force, exceeding ours.

"The enemy was in dense formation and in enormous masses marched forward again and again to storm the British lines. The British retirement proceeded on Aug. 25. There was continuous fighting, though not on the scale of the previous two days.

"By night on Aug. 25, the British troops occupied a line from Cambrei to Landrecies and Le Cateau. It had been intended to resume the retirement at daybreak on Aug. 26, but the German attack, in which no less than five army corps were engaged, was so close and fierce that it was impossible to carry it out.

"The battle on Aug. 26 was of the most severe and desperate character. Our troops offered a superb and most stubborn resistance against the tremendous odds with which they were confronted. They finally extricated themselves with severe losses. They were under the heaviest artillery fire, but no guns were taken by the enemy except those of which the horses were all killed or had been shattered by explosive shells.

"Field Marshal Sir John French estimates that during all these operations, from Aug. 23 to 26 inclusive, our losses amounted to from 5,000 to 6,000. On the other hand, the German losses in the attacks across the open, with dense formations, are out of all proportion to ours.

"In Landrecies alone, on Aug. 26, a German infantry brigade advanced in the closest order through a narrow street, which was completely filled. Our machine guns were brought to bear on this target from the end of the town. The head of the column was swept away and a frightful panic ensued. It is estimated that not less than 900 dead and wounded Germans were dying in this street alone.

"The British troops have not been molested apart from cavalry fighting since Aug. 26. They have rested and refilled after their glorious achievements. Reinforcements amounting to double our loss have already joined the force and every gun has been replaced, and the army is now ready to take part in the next great encounter with undaunted spirit."

Order Applies to Detached Forts

Paris, Aug. 31.—The decision of the military authorities to clear the zone of the forts around Paris, doesn't affect the zone immediately surrounding the old fortifications of the city. It only applies to detached forts such as those at Montvalerien, Issy and others. Under the decision, all buildings and small structures of no great value surrounding the forts will be pulled down. Steps have been taken to provide shelter for all homeless persons.

Austrians Run Terrible Risk

London, Aug. 31.—Commenting on the temerity of the Austrians in crossing the Vistula, apparently with the intention of joining hands with the army engaged in the procuring of Lublin, the St. Petersburg correspondent of the Times says: "By placing the Vistula between themselves and the base at Cracow, the Austrians are running a terrible risk. We must conclude that their aid is needed in Lublin, where, according to the headquarters staff, desperate fighting has been in progress for nearly a week."

Conditions Are Different To-day

Paris, Aug. 31.—Lieut.-Col. Leonice Rousset, a military critic, writing for his paper, Petit Parisien, reassures those who may be frightened by the possible investment of Paris. He declares that in 1870 the capital was held for five months under conditions much different than those of to-day.

Germans Take 30,000 Prisoners ?

Berlin, Aug. 31.—It is officially announced here to-day that about 30,000 Russians had been taken prisoners by the Germans in the fighting in East Prussia, particularly at Ortelsburg, Hohenstein and Tormenbury.

They include many officers of high rank.

FRENCH FORCES OF 600,000 TO BE READY FOR THE FIELD WITHIN THE NEXT FEW DAYS

Canadian Press Despatch.

Paris, Aug. 31.—French forces totalling 600,000 will be ready for active service in about six weeks, as a result of the decision announced yesterday to call out the 1914 young men and older classes of reservists. The reservists will be equipped and ready for the field in a few days.

London, Aug. 31.—Premier Asquith publicly reprimanded the London Times in the Commons this afternoon for having published the pessimistic despatch from Amiens which created such excitement Sunday morning. "The publication of this despatch," said the premier, seems to me a regrettable exception to the patriotic reticence which the press as a whole has shown up to the present, and I trust it will not recur."

Mr. Asquith opposed the suggestion to allow all correspondents to go to the front, but he admitted the public was entitled to prompt and authentic information as to what was happening there, and said arrangements were being made which he hoped would prove adequate.

Reverting to the Times despatch, the premier then said: "It may become necessary to ask the House to pass some drastic legislation, which I shall be very loath to propose until the urgency becomes extreme."

Washington, Aug. 31.—The British capture of Apia, in German Samoa, was announced in the following official message from London to the British embassy here to-day: "The secretary of state for the colonies has received a telegram from the governor of New Zealand, stating that Apia, in German Samoa, surrendered at 10 a.m., August 29, to an expeditionary force sent by the governor of New Zealand."

RECRUITS WANTED

57th Regiment Asked for Three Hundred Men

The 57th Regiment has been asked for three hundred recruits to act as motorcar drivers, cleaners, and artificers in active service. The men who receive these appointments will be regularly enlisted, will have to pass a medical examination, and will require to hold certificates. Their wages will vary from $1.60 to $2.80 per day. Anyone desiring to enlist, application can be made at the armouries tonight at 8 o'clock or on any following night.

NOTHING OFFICIAL

Regarding Capture of the German Cruiser Leipzig

Canadian Press Despatch.

Ottawa, Aug. 31.—"We know nothing official about it up to the present moment," was the reply at military headquarters this morning regarding the Vancouver report of the capture of the German cruiser Leipzig.

"We have no confirmation of the press despatches, nor have we any denial."

VANCOUVER, B.C., Aug. 31.—The Vancouver World publishes the following despatch under Victoria date:

"The chase for the German cruiser Leipzig, which has been playing hide-and-seek with the cruisers protecting British trade in Northern Pacific waters, is over. The German warship is on her way to Esquimalt. She will be in that port to-night, according to most reliable advices obtainable.

"To the French cruiser Montcalm and the Canadian cruiser Rainbow, according to the information so far received, the credit of the capture is assigned. The casualties aboard the Leipzig are said to have reached 120 killed and wounded. The full details both of the fight, the capture, the casualties and the bringing in of the only German war vessel in British Pacific waters are being withheld owing to the close censorship and to the implicit instructions to the naval authorities here to report direct to the British Admiralty."

No confirmation of this despatch is to be had, the naval authorities at Esquimalt denying all knowledge.

ATTEMPT MADE TO WRECK TRAIN

Engine of Troop Train Swept Rail From the Track

Canadian Press Despatch.

Valcartier, Aug. 31.—That an attempt was made to wreck a C. N. R. troop train early Sunday morning, about 90 miles east of Montreal, was stated this morning by Lieut.-Col. Creelman, commander of the 21st Battery of Montreal.

An iron rail had been placed across the track, but the engine of the special fortunately swept the obstruction into the ditch. The train was travelling at about 40 miles an hour.

GENERAL PAU INFLICTS TERRIBLE PUNISHMENT ON GERMAN TROOPS

Official Statement at Dieppe Gives Meagre Bulletin of Part of Extensive Battle Now in Progress—Allies Left Wing Yields Ground, But Advance is Made in Lorraine—Germans Move on La Fere.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—The London Daily Mail, in a despatch from Dieppe, dated Sunday, says: It is announced officially at the Sous Prefecture at Dieppe that a German army corps has been "wiped out" by Gen. Pau's troops.

Yielded on Left.

PARIS, Aug. 31.—"The progress of the German right wing has obliged us to yield ground on our left," says an official statement issued here last night.

A previous statement was as follows:

"In Lorraine our forces have advanced. We occupy a line along Mortagne, and our right wing is pushing forward. There is no news from the Meuse.

"A violent battle occurred yesterday in the region of Lannoy, near Lille, Signy l'Abbaye and Chateau Poicien, but the result has not been decisive, and the attack will be resumed to-morrow.

"Four French army corps engaged in a violent battle on the left wing. The right wing of these four corps, taking the offensive, drove back on Guise the 10th German Corps and the guard, both suffering considerable losses.

"Our left was less fortunate. The German forces are advancing in the direction of La Fere."

La Fere is a town in Aisne, fourteen miles northwest of Laon, and 75 miles from Paris. It is a fortress of the second class.

It is officially announced that the military government has ordered all residents of the zone within action of the defending forts of Paris to evacuate and destroy their houses within four days from to-day, Aug. 30. This is a precautionary measure in case Paris has to stand a siege.

According to Liberte, the Germans have penetrated a short distance farther on the River Somme. The British, in conjunction with the French left, have resumed a vigorous offensive. Farther west the French troops have checked the enemy's advance guard. At the other extremity of the line on the Meuse the French are offering a strenuous and successful resistance, which extends along nearly the whole front.

"Our offensive succeeded on our right, but was checked on our left," The Liberte says. The Germans gained ground, as announced, toward La Fere. At any rate, we hold firm, even under attack—a sure sign of the confidence of our army."

GERMAN LOSSES AS MADE PUBLIC AT BERLIN TODAY

Two Million Volunteers for Service it is Said

Canadian Press Despatch.

Berlin, Aug. 31.—The list of German losses was made public to-day. It contains 1,006 names. The total of German casualties made public up to the present time is 1,143 dead, 3,326 wounded and 1,761 missing. No news from either of the German fronts had been given out up to midnight.

As an evidence of the enthusiasm of the German people in the war, it is announced that two million volunteers have presented themselves for service.

Active Preparations For Defence of Paris

Canadian Press Despatch.

Paris, Aug. 31.—All night long troops from the south and west of France have been arriving at the capital and passing by rail around the city to locations in the encircling fortifications to which they have been assigned. There is great activity on the part of the administration in completing details of plans for the defence of Paris.

No official information regarding the military situation on the frontiers had been made public up to noon today. The unusual animation to be noticed on the streets of Paris today was caused chiefly by thousands of persons who are preparing to leave the capital. People are departing and taking their families with them as a matter of prudence. Tickets for trains leaving Paris today to the west and south were all sold out last night.

SEVENTY THOUSAND ENGLISH HELD BACK TWO HUNDRED THOUSAND GERMAN SOLDIERS

Canadian Press Despatch.

Washington, Aug. 31. — Seventy thousand British troops for the last three days held in check two hundred thousand German troops until relieved by French reinforcements according to information received here today through neutral diplomats. The advices did not give the place of battle.

Although the German forces broke through the British lines in many places, the English held their own until French reinforcements arrived and then retired in good order. Military experts of the allied forces reported as being greatly encouraged by the manner in which the British forces withstood the superior forces of the enemy. The information came from Paris through diplomatic sources.

considering the advisability of moving the seat of her government from Paris to Bordeaux as a precautionary measure according to official advices received here today.

Washington, Aug. 31. — Great Britain has joined with France in objecting to the purchase by the United States of any German liners in connection with the plan to build up American merchant marine.

Allies Stemming Tide of the German Hordes

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 31. — The French army and our English troops are now holding good positions in much stronger and closer line and stemming the tide of the German hordes rolling up to Paris," says the Chronicle's Amiens correspondent. Paris is still safe for the time being, with the great army of allied forces drawn across the country as a barrier which surely will not be broken by the enemy.

Auto Trucks of Invaders a Marvel

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Aug. 31.—Arno Dosch, a corespondent of the magazine, World's Work, who went into Belgium some days ago arrived in London today from Brussels which city he left last Thursday. Referring to the military situation in Belgium Mr. Dosch said :—

The German auto trucks are a marvel. Equipped with scythes they mow right through hedges and wire fences, if the roads do not suit the drivers. These trucks are heavily armoured and are able to resist anything except artillery fire. They enable the German forces to make forty miles a day. The number of these trucks seems unlimited. It is estimated three hundred thousand German troops have made their way through Brussels and that four hundred thousand moved south of Brussels. Troops which passed through Brussels were later engaged with the British forces.

AN OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT SUMMARIZES THE SITUATION

Canadian Press Despatch.

Paris, Aug. 31.—An official statement issued this evening summarizes the situation to date as follows:

On our right after partial checks we have taken the offensive and the enemy is retiring before us.

In the centre we have had alternative checks and successes but a general action is now being fought.

On our left by a series of circumstances which turned in favor of the Germans and despite lucky counter attacks, the Anglo-French forces were obliged to give way.

As yet our armies, not withstanding a few incontestable checks, remain intact. The morale of our troops is excellent in spite of considerable losses which also are being rapidly filled from regimental depots.

London, Aug. 31.—Heavy firing was heard at Dover this morning which appeared to come from vessels along the French coast. The official bureau announced that it has no information on the subject.

Rome, Aug. 31.—A telegram from Nish, received in Genoa says that Servia is preparing to invade and conquer Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Paris, Aug. 31.—Louis Bleriot, the first aviator to fly over the English channel announces that he will establish an aeroplane school for pilots and will struct them in the business of bomb dropping.

London, Aug. 31.—The Times correspondent at Ostend records at second hand a conversation with a German officer from Brussels who said that fresh efforts were being made to inflict a crushing blow on the allies and especially on the English forces. Notwithstanding the success achieved by the German army the despatch says, there is a feeling among German soldiers that they are fighting against too great odds. The Emperor has made it known to every soldier that his orders are to take Paris or die, the despatch concludes.

London, Aug. 31.—The correspondent of the Express at The Hague gives another version of the conversation between King Albert and the Prime Minister De Broqueville when the King expressed determination to fight to the last.

The incident occurred in Antwerp, Saturday when the King said to the Prime Minister in the presence of the Queen: "If necessary you can my dear Mr. and Mrs. De Broqueville take out rifles and go to the field."

"So will I," said the Queen, "and all Belgian women will go with me."

GUARD SHOT AT THREE TIMES

Looks Like Murder Case at Smith's Falls

Smith's Falls, Aug. 31.—Smith's Falls is seething with excitement over what appears to have been a wanton murder committed here about 2 o'clock Saturday morning, when a young man, Patrick Moran, was shot to death. Moran was acting as a guard on the C. N. R. track and subway in the north end of the town, being one of the men employed by the company to guard its line since the outbreak of the war.

The scene of the shooting is just at the edge of the town, and at the place where the C. N. R. passes under the C. P. R. in a subway. The works of the Canadian Cooperage Co. are close by, and about 2 o'clock in the morning the watchman there heard three revolver shots and then heard Moran call to some saying that he was shot.

BRITISH TROOPS ARE RESTED AND REINFORCED, KITCHENER'S STATEMENT

They Have Not Been Molested Since Thursday Last—During Four Days From Aug. 23 to Aug. 26 Gen. French's Force Stubbornly Resisted Advance—Loss to British is Placed at 5,000 to 6,000

LONDON, Aug. 31. — After four days of desperate fighting, the British army in France, is rested, refitted and reinforced for the next great battle, according to an announcement yesterday by Lord Kitchener, Secretary of State for War. In a statement based on reports from Sir John French, commander of the British expeditionary forces, the Secretary says that the British, after struggling against tremendous odds, retired to a new line of defence where they have not been molested since Thursday. Their casualties are between 5,000 and 6,000. Since this fighting ceased, the French on the right and left, have brought the German attack to a standstill, it is declared.

The official news bureau issued a statement yesterday, authorized by Lord Kitchener, regarding the recent fighting of the British troops. It says in part:

During the four days, from Aug. 23 to Aug. 26, the British troops conforming to the general movement of the French armies, resisted and checked the German advance and withdrew to new lines of defence. "The battle began at Mons, Belgium, on Sunday. The stubborn German attack was completely checked on the British front. The Germans made vigorous efforts with superior numbers on Monday to preserve the safe withdrawal of the British force and to drive it into the fortress at Maubeuge (in France, southward of Mons). Their efforts were frustrated by the steadiness and skill with which the British retirement was effected.

"Very heavy losses were inflicted on the enemy's force, exceeding ours.

"The enemy was in dense formation and in enormous masses marched forward again and again to storm the British lines. The British retirement proceeded on Aug. 25. There was continuous fighting, though not on the scale of the previous two days.

"By night on Aug. 25, the British troops occupied a line from Cambrel to Landrecies and Le Cateau. It had been intended to resume the retirement at daybreak on Aug. 26, but the German attack, in which no less than five army corps were engaged, was so close and fierce that it was impossible to carry it out.

"The battle on Aug. 26 was of the most severe and desperate character. Our troops offered a superb and most stubborn resistance against the tremendous odds with which they were confronted. They finally extricated themselves with severe losses. They were under the heaviest artillery fire, but no guns were taken by the enemy except those of which the horses were all killed or had been shattered by explosive shells.

"Field Marshal Sir John French estimates that during all these operations, from Aug. 23 to 26 inclusive, our losses amounted to from 5,000 to 6,000. On the other hand, the German losses in the attacks across the open, with dense formations, are out of all proportion to ours.

"In Landrecies alone, on Aug. 26, a German infantry brigade advanced in the closest order through a narrow street, which was completely filled. Our machine guns were brought to bear on this target from the end of the town. The head of the column was swept away and a frightful panic ensued. It is estimated that not less than 900 dead and wounded Germans were dying in this street alone.

"The British troops have not been molested apart from cavalry fighting since Aug. 26. They have rested and refilled after their glorious achievements. Reinforcements amounting to double our loss have already joined the force and every gun has been replaced, and the army is now ready to take part in the next great encounter with undaunted spirit."

Order Applies to Detached Forts

Paris, Aug. 31.—The decision of the military authorities to clear the zone of the forts around Paris, doesn't affect the zone immediately surrounding the old fortifications of the city. It only applies to detached forts such as those at Montvalerien, Issy and others. Under the decision, all buildings and small structures of no great value surrounding the forts will be pulled down. Steps have been taken to provide shelter for all homeless persons.

Austrians Run Terrible Risk

London, Aug. 31.—Commenting on the temerity of the Austrians in crossing the Vistula, apparently with the intention of joining hands with the army engaged in the procuring of Lublin, the St. Petersburg correspondent of the Times says: "By placing the Vistula between themselves and the base at Cracow, the Austrians are running a terrible risk. We must conclude that their aid is needed in Lublin, where, according to the headquarters staff, desperate fighting has been in progress for nearly a week."

Conditions Are Different To-day

Paris, Aug. 31.—Lieut.-Col. Leonice Rousset, a military critic, writing for his paper, Petit Parisien, reassures those who may be frightened by the possible investment of Paris. He declares that in 1870 the capital was held for five months under conditions much different than those of to-day.

Germans Take 30,000 Prisoners ?

Berlin, Aug. 31.—It is officially announced here to-day that about 30,000 Russians had been taken prisoners by the Germans in the fighting in East Prussia, particularly at Ortelsburg, Hohenstein and Tormenbury.

They include many officers of high rank.

FRENCH FORCES OF 600,000 TO BE READY FOR THE FIELD WITHIN THE NEXT FEW DAYS

Canadian Press Despatch.

Paris, Aug. 31.—French forces totalling 600,000 will be ready for active service in about six weeks, as a result of the decision announced yesterday to call out the 1914 young men and elder classes of reservists. The reservists will be equipped and ready for the field in a few days.

London, Aug. 31.—Premier Asquith publicly reprimanded the London Times in the Commons this afternoon for having published the pessimistic despatch from Amiens which created such excitement Sunday morning. "The publication of this despatch," said the premier, seems to me a regrettable exception to the patriotic reticence which the press as a whole has shown up to the present, and I trust it will not recur."

Reverting to the Times despatch, the premier then said: "It may become necessary to ask the House to pass some drastic legislation, which I shall be very loath to propose until the urgency becomes extreme."

Washington, Aug. 31.—The British capture of Apia, in German Samoa, was announced in the following official message from London to the British embassy here to-day: "The secretary of state for the colonies has received a telegram from the governor of New Zealand, stating that Apia, in German Samoa, surrendered at 10 a.m., August 29, to an expeditionary force sent by the governor of New Zealand."

THE BATTLESHIP NEW ZEALAND.

THE BATTLESHIP "New Zealand" fought in the great battle yesterday. More than that, New Zealand herself, through her battleship, fought in the great battle for freedom yesterday. If it had not been for the Nationalists of Quebec and those who voted with them in parliament and out to crush the spirit of Empire in Canada, we would have had one or perhaps two ships in line yesterday. War is not altogether evil. Some good comes out of it, and the least is not the death of Nationalism and the death of little-Canadianism. Circumstances have favored the All-Empire policy—the true co-operative, sane, mutual help policy—which alone by its strength can prevent war, or, being in, can end it in the interests of liberty.

TORONTO'S ACTIVITY.

THE CITIZENS of Toronto have demonstrated in no mean way their loyalty and generosity by raising almost a million dollars toward the war relief fund, and from appearances there is more to come. When it was decided, at the meeting of the committee the other night, to devote all over $750,000 to the relief of the unemployed during the winter, Mayor Hocken remarked ;

> "We are facing a staggering problem of unemployment in the city during this winter. On behalf of the board of control, I assure you, gentlemen, that we will do everything humanly possible for their relief. The citizens of Toronto have contributed in three weeks 2,500 men and $882,000. We do not know how far we must go, but we say, with England's greatest newspaper, that the struggle will never end until Germany has been brought to her knees."

Toronto's unemployed problem is being met in a courageous manner, all public work possible being carried on, and arrangements being made now, before the cold weather sets in, for taking care of the unemployed. We would like to see more activity displayed by Peterborough along these lines, for there is the same problem to be worked out here as in Toronto, although not so large a one. It is the clear duty of the council to grapple with this matter without further delay.

CONFISCATE GERMAN PATENTS.

IF THE GOVERNMENT at Ottawa can find any way of confiscating German investments in this country, as reported, we shall all cheer them on. Little mercy should be shown to an enemy of the world's peace like the Kaiser, and his own personal property or that of his subjects in Germany should be seized, if possible, as spoils of war.

It might be necessary to establish a special prize court, and it may be that the course is irregular if we adhere to the Hague rules, which, however, Germany has already violated in various ways. The Hague rules certainly provide for the protection of the private property of the enemy, merely permitting it to be seized, but compensation has to be given to private individuals on land after the war is over. The laws as to property on land are, in fact, very different from those on the sea. On the other hand, these rules were intended to apply rather to the property seized by an army of occupation, limiting to some extent their right of seizure to the property of the enemy state. The situation here is a rather unique one and apparently unprovided for. Germany is displaying little regard for Hague rules in Belgium, and the sooner she is made to suffer, the sooner she will be inclined to be careful.

We have in the seizure of money belong to British, Russians and French, in the banks of Germany, a very fair excuse, and a good precedent in the action of the old country in seizing German funds. There is, however, another way in which Canada could help the allies, and that is by cancelling the Canadian patents held by Germany. It is a pity that a longer session of parliament was not held, so that some of these matters could have been fully considered and weighed by the many able lawyers in parliament, and legislative action taken on them, instead of such questions being left to the government.

The value of German patents in this country must be great. Take the Diesel engine, as an instance, the great oil-burning engine which has revolutionized oil burning as a fuel. If we were to seize and confiscate a patent like this and put it up to auction, with a proviso that it must be made in Canada, there are plenty of astute American capitalists who would secure the Canadian rights, especially as, no doubt, such engines could be safely exported and sold in England, where the patent rights would also be confiscated.

There are other valuable German patents in electrical apparatus and other spheres of life which hamper manufacturers in this country, and which could now be seized as spoils of war, if the government would act and secure such a boon for Canada.

It is also reported that the Kaiser, either directly or indirectly, has large holdings in British Columbia property, which might as well be confiscated.

The money proceeds would go into the Canadian treasury and help meet our war loan and the royalty which might be exacted would still further help to repay the sacrifices our people are making, while the new industries thus created would add to Canada's wealth and give employment to thousands, not only now but for years to come.

Germany, in similar case, would not hesitate, and we should be prepared to act at once, so as to damage the enemy as much as possible. By such action we should not only be benefiting our own people, who are already feeling the strain of this war, and repairing some of the broken fortunes, but we should be materially weakening the enemy, and in this way assisting our motherland.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

WHEN Col. John Currie, M.P., who is now off to the war, at the head of his regiment, the 48th Highlanders, was a reporter on the Mail newspaper, many of us who knew him then marveled at his enthusiasm in military matters and believed he was wasting valuable time in preference to greater devotion of his well-known ability to literary matters, but time has shown that the military spirit he then imbibed and the training he received have not been wasted. With Col. John Currie at their head, we are sure the fine kiltie regiment will acquit themselves with credit alike to Canada and the Empire.

IN VOLUNTEERING for service, the thousands of brave men from all parts of the country should leave with every possible assurance that those dependent upon them will be cared for during their absence. While the task of staying at home and keeping the national shop open may be a prosaic one, it is, nevertheless, one which calls for patriotism and self-sacrifice. We should be willing to endure a few hardships when our brave soldier lads are going out and bearing the brunt of an arduous campaign.

THE PLAN now adopted in the civil service is to appoint a man to an assistant's position nominally until he is qualified to take the one he is intended for. This technical arrangement does not interfere in any way with any regular deputy or assistant, but allows the department's plans to be completed before, not after, trial.

Everybody's Asking.

Galt Reporter.

What many people would like to know is: Who puts the bull in the bulletins?

The Smart Stamp Clerk.

(London Standard.)

Pompous Lady—Must I put this stamp on myself?

Postoffice Clerk—Well, you can if you like, but it's usual to put it on the letter.

Getting Down to Business.

(Brooklyn Life.)

Her Father—You have been paying attentions to my daughter. You haven't proposed yet?

His Lordship—Not yet, sir.

Her Father—Now let us come right down to business. What will you take not to propose?

The Fighting Belgians.

(Hamilton Herald.)

There should be no surprise at the superb fighting qualities displayed by the Belgians. This people of mixed Teutonic and Celtic stock have been great fighters from 'way back. Julius Caesar testified to their prowess before the Christian era, and in the middle ages they distinguished themselves in many wars.

War Prophets.

(Des Moines Capital.)

The hair-trigger prophet is always with us. It is now predicted that the present will be a very short war. Perhaps it will, but there are those who were just as sure that the conflict between the North and South would not last over ninety days.

Britain's Moral Prestige.

(Pittsburg Press.)

The Union Jack is the emblem of the highest civilization, from which our own sprang, and with which it holds priceless blood-bought heritages in common. Chief among these heritages is the blessing of liberty, the rights of the common man. Nowhere in the world—our own great public not excepted—does naked manhood count for more than in the British Isles.

Bake Bread Like Grandmother.

(Montreal Gazette.)

Because the bakers in Hamilton have advanced the price of bread a cent a loaf, Mayor Allan has advised the housewives of the city to do as their grandmothers did and bake their own bread. It may be safely predicted that his advice will not be generally followed unless conditions grow worse, and there is a greater rise. Home baking in few cases would mean a saving of money. Besides, the cooks might not be able to bake bread like grandmother used to make.

The Brute in Scientific Man.

(Montreal Gazette.)

The dropping of bombs from airships is reported from Antwerp. The damage done could have little effect from a military point of view, though it might be demoralising to the civilian inhabitants. The practice is new in war, and while it may, like many other inhuman things, be justified from a military point of view during a battle or as part of siege operations, there is nothing to be said in excuse of it in connection with an uninvested city. The brute in the scientific man is even more cruel than in the rough fighter.

WAR LEXICON.

The following war lexicon taken from the New York Sun is especially appropriate to Montreal, where scare headlines and the absence of real news characterizes most of the newspapers:

Terrific Slaughter—Sixteen French and seventeen Germans wounded.

Hurled Back—The withdrawal of an advanced outpost.

Thousands of Prisoners—Three German farmers arrested.

Deadly Air Battle—French aeroplane seen in the distance.

Gigantic Army of Invasion—Two troops of cavalry on a reconnaissance.

Overwhelming Force—A sergeant and a detail of twelve men.

Fierce Naval Battle—Mysterious sounds heard at sea.

Americans Outrageously Maltreated—One American asked to explain why his trunk contained maps of German roads.

Bottled Up—A fleet at anchor.

Trapped—An army in camp.

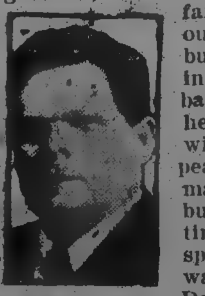
Rout—An orderly retreat.

Heroism A failure of soldiers to run away in the face of danger.

Decisive Conflict—A skirmish of outposts.

PEACE AT HOME

By Walt Mason



We who infest this favored land should happy be, and doubly grateful; we need not, at some chief's command, engage in warfare, grim and hateful. No cannons thunder on our shores, we see no fierce, bloodthirsty faces, but we can do our daily chores, and not be shot in fifteen places. No reckless soldiers fire our barns, no tyrant o'er the wreck rejoices, and says he doesn't care three darns, when we protest, with tear wet voices. Oh, everywhere is balmy peace, in this fair land, beloved of heaven, and man, who uses elbow grease, may earn three bucks, or maybe seven. Sleep has for us its pristine charms; we go to roost, our prayers once spoken; no danger here of night alarms; we wake at morn, our legs unbroken. We feed old Dobbin in his stall, we milk the cow and herd the pullets; we are not backed against a wall and then shot full of fusty bullets. So let us thank our divers gods, that we may live our lives serenely, work out our plans, increase our wads, and die in bed, in manner cleanly.

BOULOGNE EVACUATED?

British Press Bureau Says Report Is Not Confirmed.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—The official press bureau has announced that it has no confirmation of the report that the allied troops have evacuated Boulogne.

White Flag Ready.

BOULOGNE, Aug. 31. — From a military point of view Boulogne is evacuated. The city's white flag is said to hang ready for instant hoisting at the historic old chateau which crowns the high central hill, and can be seen a mile away. No trains have arrived from Paris since Saturday.

When it was apparent that it was not in accord with the larger purposes of the campaign for the allies to defend Boulogne there was a sudden alteration in the spirits of the people. As long as the city was filled with British and French soldiers it was possible for it to retain some of its essential character of a ville de plaisance. Now, when the pomp and circumstance which always surrounds military headquarters have been withdrawn and no staff automobiles racket their way through the streets, the people have given themselves over to depression.

Photographs By Wire.

A photograph in London can be reproduced in Paris on the same principle as a telegram within the space of forty minutes. This has already been achieved by the Photo-Telegraph & Cable Co., Ltd., and a practical demonstration was given recently to experts and journalists at the Hotel Cecil.

By means of the invitation, the "Telectograph," a newspaper, a theatre, a private person, can receive in a few minutes from a place hundreds of miles away a pictorial representation of current events. Police authorities also will be able to circulate the photographs of wanted criminals in several towns with lightning swiftness, whilst clubmen will be able to see faithful representations of people "in the news," just as now they are able to read the news itself on the tape machines.

What is a Tusker?

The capture of elephants is regulated by law in Ceylon, but several complications have latterly arisen owing to the defects of the law. One of the points of difference in a case at Kandy was whether the animal was a tusker, opinion differing as to whether two protuberances were incipient tusks or the ordinary taches of an elephant. A Bill is accordingly being introduced which will obviate similar litigation by extending the law relating to the capture and possession of tuskers applicable to all elephants. The new ordinance will also make possession of a wild elephant, which has not been legally captured, an offence.

MOTORING OUTFITS.

Convenience and Good Looks Are Combined in Outing Garments.

Motoring garb is of all varieties of convenience. The quite unattractive features that at first characterized coats and headgear have been eliminated. Motoring hats and bonnets are often charming affairs, and motoring wraps are so contrived that they may be used for any emergency that calls for an outing coat. Illustrated here is a motoring costume that includes a dainty straw bonnet, with a long veil of chiffon and a short coat of checked materials. The little toilet outfit is a convenience for the woman who motors or for the woman traveler.

MOTORING COAT AND BONNET.

A Good Comparison.

W. A. Fraser, the short-story writer, has carried his knack of epigram with him into commercial life. The other day a knot of boosters were discussing a gold proposition in the lobby of the King Edward Hotel, when one of them turned and appealed to the author.

"What do you think of it as an investment?" he asked.

"Think of what?" asked Mr Fraser.

"The Tarantula gold mine."

"I think," said Mr. Fraser, taking a fresh grip on his cigar, "that it's about as safe as lending money at a racetrack."

Unclean Money.

A London doctor has been advocating the use of a steriliser at all banks to clean the dirty money. He complained of receiving from his bank $25 in silver in such a "disgustingly filthy condition" that he had to boil it with soda before he could handle it. "This," he adds, "is not the first or the twenty-first time this has happened, and in one bank, patronized by Billingsgate firms, I have many times been unpleasantly conscious of the source of much of the silver."

He suggests that all silver paid in over the counter should pass through a steriliser. The desirability of such precautions is emphasized by the knowledge that practically all infectious diseases are communicable by means of dirty coins—typhoid, scarlet fever, measles, diphtheria, and the rest. As a fact, however, a very small proportion indeed can be traced to this cause.

It Was Good Advice.

A wildly turbulent peasant was once a witness in a trial before Chief Baron O'Grady. The counsel, after pestering him for some time, put a question to him which reflected on the witness' character.

"If ye ax me that again I'll give ye a kick in the gob!" was the answer.

The counsel appealed to the court, stating that an answer was necessary to his client's case, ending up with the query, "What would your lordship advise me to do?"

"If you are resolved to repeat the question," replied the court, "I'd advise you to move a little from the witness."—London Mail.

An Apology?

A London journal says that a lively discussion once took place in a town council in the north of England. One thing led to another till one of the disputants gave another the lie direct. The insulted party rushed forward, and the pair clinched. At that moment the first man exclaimed, "I reiterate that you are a liar!" To the astonishment of every one, the aggrieved party let go his hold. "Oh, well," he said, "in that case I accept the apology. If a man says he reiterates, that is all any gentleman can ask." He did not understand why the bystanders laughed, but the fight was off.

How We Go to Sleep.

Sleep begins in its first phase by a state of distraction, which brings on states of absentmindedness, accompanied always by numerous and separate hallucinations, closely connected with the length of the absentminded states. Immediately afterward, in a second phase, these states of distraction pass into a very delicate motor disturbance, due to the absence of parallelism in the axes of the eyes or by the deviation of their conjugate movements, says the Family Doctor. Finally, in a third and final phase, which indicates the very near approach of actual sleep, the vasomotor system seems to conform to laws very different from those that regulate its mechanism during waking hours.

Hint For Week Enders.

To keep your neckwear smooth and fresh when traveling with a suit case put such things between the different leaves of a magazine, which takes up less room than a box and is very convenient when removed to the dresser drawer. It is especially suited to laundered neckwear and ribbons.

FOR HOUSEWIVES

The Cookbook.

Fried food should not be allowed to become chilled before serving.

To make cabbage digestible, when half boiled pour off the water and place in fresh boiling water.

In testing the oven for cake baking remember that greater heat is required for a cake baked in layers than for a single loaf.

If eggs are to be stuffed they must be put into cold water as soon as they are taken from the stove. This will keep the whites in better shape.

Homemade Liniment.

A cheap stimulating liniment, which will be almost odorless and yet effective for outside application, can be made as follows: In one quart of turpentine mix one quart of coal oil. Pack half an ounce of alkanet root and two ounces of pulverized capsicum in a large ordinary funnel. Over this mixture pour the turpentine and oil, allowing it all to percolate through the capsicum and alkanet root. In this way it will extract the substance of the capsicum, and take on a beautiful red from the alkanet. After this has been done add one ounce of the oil of peppermint and four ounces of gum camphor. To make it more fragrant add a little oil of peppergrass. This liniment thus completed is a strong, efficacious one to rub on the skin and so clean and fragrant that even the most fastidious would not hesitate to use it.—New York Telegram.

Whittier's Visitor.

Pilgrims used to visit Whittier continually. A typical one came from Missouri. Though told that Whittier had a headache, he forced his way into the poet's study, where he declared that he adored all Whittier's works, which he knew almost by heart. He asked Whittier to write his name several hundred times on a large sheet of foolscap, so that he could cut out and distribute the autographs among his Missouri friends. In fact, it was all the poet could do to keep the enthusiastic Missourian from clipping all the buttons from his coat as souvenirs.

"And all the time"—so Whittier would end the anecdote pathetically—"all the time he called me Waitetaker."—Exchange.

Cruel Kindness.

"What's the matter, old man?"

"Oh, I've had a bit of hard luck."

"Haven't been bit in the stock market, I hope?"

"No, a fellow who pretends to be a friend of mine has a box at the opera and he has invited my wife and myself to go as his guests next Tuesday evening."

"I shouldn't call that hard luck."

"You would if it made it necessary for you to buy your wife a new hat, new gloves, new silk stockings, new twelve dollar shoes, a new gown, a new opera cloak and rent a taxicab for the night."—Chicago Record.

Piano Playing.

Once Rubinstein said: "Do you know why piano playing is so difficult? Because it is prone to be either affected or else afflicted with mannerisms, and when these two pitfalls are luckily avoided then it is liable to be—dry. The truth lies between those three mischiefs."

Describing Love.

In "The Desert and Mrs. Ajax," by Edward S. Moffat, one of the characters, an American girl, thus describes love:

"Oh, Amy (she says), isn't it splendid when you love some one? You just want to sacrifice—and give up—and work—and be devoured by fire or drowned in ice water if it will do any good. Sometimes it makes you feel, oh, so strong! And then, almost right away, your knees get wabbly, and you just turn into a cobblestone inside. And one minute he's looking at you in the most wonderful way, and you feel as if you were floating on a lovely pink cloud, eating ice cream smothered in violets, and the next thing you know something terrible happens, and everything goes to pieces, and you see that he doesn't love you after all—and, oh-h-h!"

CHINESE HUMOR.

Illustrated by a Story of the Hospitality of Two Friends.

That the Chinese are possessed of a keen sense of humor is shown by the following anecdote which is related in the Spirit of the East Magazine:

"There were two men who had been friends from their school days. One lived in the town, the other in the country. After a separation lasting a whole year, the countryman decided to pay a visit to his friend the townsman. The latter gave him a hearty welcome, but the repast he furnished consisted merely of two bowls of rice and a single egg.

"'What a pity,' he said with a great sigh, 'that you came so early! If you had only waited for another year, my friend, we should have had fowl for our dinner, as this egg would have developed into a chicken!'

"Not long afterward the townsman returned the visit. For his entertainment the countryman cut a hard piece of bamboo rod into small pieces, salted them, roasted them in fat and served them up.

"'What a pity,' he ejaculated, 'you come so late! If you had only come a year ago, my friend, we should have had tender bamboo shoots for dinner today!'"

An Unrepresentative House.

One of the most elaborate calculations of the composition of the house of commons a hundred years ago is given in Dr. Oldfield's "Representative History." According to this, 218 members were returned by 87 peers in England and Wales, 31 members by 21 peers in Scotland and 51 members by 36 peers in Ireland. Thus just 300 members were returned by peers. In addition 137 members were returned by 90 commoners in England and Wales, 14 members by 14 commoners in Scotland and 20 members by 19 commoners in Ireland, while the treasury commanded 11 seats, the admiralty 4 and the ordnance 1. Consequently in a house of 658 members 171 could claim to be more or less independent.—London Chronicle.

HOW TREES EAT.

They Seem to Digest Their Food Before Absorbing It.

Every gardener knows that a tree can be fed and made to grow with increased vigor. If proper nourishment in the form of humus, nitrogen, phosphate, etc., be placed about its roots the tree will absorb this food and grow rapidly and strongly.

But how the tree feeds is somewhat more difficult to explain. In all probability the tree digests its food first and consumes it afterward. Certain it is that the average tree has no means of consuming food as a whole, as members of the animal kingdom absorb it. It is well known that the larvae of certain insects digest their food first and consume it afterward. Observation would indicate that this is exactly what the tree does. The tiny rootlets act on the substances in the earth, dissolving and breaking them up so they can be absorbed through the root pores. In order so to be taken up the chemicals must be in liquid form and devoid of all waste.

The end of each root is armed with a horny substance, with which it can burrow through the hard soil in search of food. When food is found it is dissolved into a liquid and absorbed by the root fibers. From the root the food is carried by the sap to all parts of the tree.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

GERMANY'S "WHITE PAPER" EVENTS LEADING UP TO WAR

One of the most remarkable documents issued in the history of diplomacy is the German "White Paper," explaining, of course, from the German standpoint, the history of events leading up to the war of the nations. It is labelled "Denkschrift Undakenstecke Zum Kriegsaubruch," meaning "Memoranda and Documents with Regard to the Outbreak of the War."

Its method is different from that of the British "White Paper," which prints without comment the diplomatic correspondence exchanged. The German document, on the other hand, purports to give a reasoned statement of the causes of the war. Beginning with a lengthy resume of the crisis, originating with the assassination of the Austrian Archduke on June 28, it includes events up to August 1. The "Denkschrift" is ilnet with regard to Belgium, and says nothing about the negotiations with the British Government. The conflict, from the Kaiser's viewpoint, is regarded as one simply between German and Russian aspirations.

Prefacing the German statement of the formation of the Balkan league, "under Russian patronage,' ' the White Paper says: " For the third time in the course of the last six years Servia has brought Europe to the verge of world war in this manner. She could only do this because she believed herself supported by Russia in her endeavors." It then goes on to state that the activities of the Balkan League this time were directed, not against Turkey, but against the existence of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy.

"The idea was that Servia should cede to Bulgaria the section of Macedonia that she had won in the Balkan war, and offset the loss by the acquisition of Bosnia and Herzegovina at the expense of the Monarchy of the Danube. For this purpose Bulgaria, by her isolation, was to be made pliable; Roumania, as the result of a propaganda undertaken with the aid of France, was to be chained to Russia; and Servia was to be given Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Germany's Approval

"In these circumstances Austria had to admit that it would not be consistent either with the dignity or the self-preservation of the monarchy to look on longer at the operations on the other side of the border without taking action. We were able to assure our ally most heartily of our agreement with her view of the situation, and to assure her that any action that she might consider it necessary to take in order to put an end to the movement in Servia, directed against the existence of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy, would receive our approval.

"We were fully aware, in this connection, that warlike moves on the part of Austro-Hungary against Servia would bring Russia into the question, and might draw us into a war in accordance with our duties as an ally."

Alluding to the danger of "Slavonic sway under the Russian sceptre, making the position of the Germanic race in Central Europe untenable," the German statement continues, "we therefore gave Austria an entirely free hand in her action against Servia. We have taken no part in the preparations. Austria chose the way."

The unsatisfactory nature of Servia's answer to Austria's demands is commented upon, with remarks on Servia's preparations for war, and the breaking off of diplomatic relations on August 28.

Austria's Affair

"From the very beginning of the conflict," it is affirmed, "we took the stand that this was an affair of Austria, which she alone would have to bring to a decision with Servia. We have therefore devoted our entire efforts to [illegible] the war."

Austria's assurance to Russia that she did not intend to disturb the balance of power in the Balkans is mentioned, and the replies of both the French and the English Governments that they would co-operate in localizing the conflict, but "these efforts did not succeed in preventing Russia's intereference in the Austro-Servian disagreement."

Then Berlin heard of mobilization of troops in Russia and threatened counter action in the following message:

German White Paper

The military preparatory measures of Russia will compel us to take counter action which must consist in the mobilization of the army. Mobilization, however, indicates war. Inasmuch as we know France's obligations towards Russia, this mobilization would be directed simultaneously against Rusia and France. We cannot assume that Russia wishes to let loose such a European war. Inasmuch as Austria-Hungary will not impair the continuance of the Servian Kingdom, we are of the opinion that Russia can adopt a policy of waiting. We shall be all the more able to support Russia's wish not to allow the integrity of the Servian Kingdom to be called into question, since Austria does not call this integrity into question herself. It will be easy to find a basis of agreement in the further course of the affair.

How Germany Worked for Peace

Following reports of continued mobilization in Russia, "On July 27 the first reports of preparatory measures by France arrived. The Fourteenth Corps discontinued its manoeuvres and returned to garrison duty. In the meantime we continued to exert our most energetic influence on the Cabinets to insure the localization of the conflict."

It is admitted next that Germany and Austria threw cold water on Sir Edward Grey's proposal of a conference of ambassadors to go into the Austro-Servian dispute. "It was purely an Austro-Hungarian affair," reiterates the White Paper, which goes on to state that Germany's claimed efforts to forestall a general war were continued strenuously, adding: "Unluckily, all of these mediatory acts were soon overtaken by the military preparations of Russia and France." Still . . . "Shoulder to shoulder with England we continued to work without cessation for mediation, and supported every suggestion in Vienna which we believed showed hope of the possibility of a peaceful settlement of the conflict. As late as the 30th we transmitted an English proposal to Vienna which established this basis of negotiation, that Austria-Hungary, after succeeding in marching into Servia, should dictate her terms there. We had to assume that Russia would accept the basis.

Rulers Take a Hand

"While these efforts of ours for mediation, supported by English diplomacy, were continued with increasing urgency in the time from July 29th to the 31st, there constantly came new and increasing reports concerning Russian mobilization measures. The assembling of troops on the East Prussian border and the declaration of a state of war in all important places on the Russian western boundary no longer left any doubt of the fact that Russian mobilization was actively going on against us, while at the same time all such measures were denied anew on word of honour to our representative at St. Petersburg. Even before the reply to the last English-German mediation proposal, the basis of which must have been known in St. Petersburg, could reach Berlin from Vienna, Russia ordered a general mobilization. On the same day an exchange of telegrams took place between His Majesty the Kaiser and King and Czar Nicholas in which His Majesty called the Czar's attention to the interesting character of the Russian mobilization and to the continuance of his own activity as mediator.

On July 31 the Czar directed the following telegram to his Majesty:

I thank you from my heart for your mediation, which permits a gleam of hope that everything can yet be settled peaceably. It it a technical impossibility for us to halt our military preparations which became necessary through Austria's mobiliation. We are far from desirous of war. So long as the negotiations continue with Austria concerning Servia, my troops will not undertake any challenging action. I solemnly pledge you my word as to that. I am trusting in the grace of God with all my might and hope for the success of your mediation in Vienna, for the welfare of our countries and for the peace of Europe. Your sincerely devoted

NICHOLAS.

"Faithful to Russia"

"To this His Majesty the Kaiser replied;

"Upon your appeal to my friendship and your plea for my help, I have undertaken a mediatory action between your government and the Austro-Hungarian Government. While this negotiation was under way your troops were mobilized against Austria-Hungary, which is allied with me. As a consequence of which my negotiation was almost made illusory, as I have already informed you. Notwithstanding this I continued it. Now I am in receipt of reliable reports of serious preparations for war on my eastern boundary also. Responsibility for the safety of my empire compels me to take counter defensive measures. I have carried my efforts for the maintenance of world peace to the utmost limit. It is not I that bear the responsibility for the calamity that now threatens the entire civilized world. Yet at this moment it lies in your power to stave it off. No one threatens the honor and might of Russia, which might have awaited the result of my mediation. The friendship for you and your empire which was bequeathed to me by my grandfather on his deathbed has always been sacred to me, and I have been faithful to Russia when she was hard pressed, especially in her last war. It is still possible for you to maintain the peace of Europe if Russia will decide to put a stop to the military measures that threaten Germany and Austria-Hungary.

After stating that Germany declared war against Russia because of the latter's preparations, the White Paper records that the mobilization of the entire German army and navy was ordered at 5 p.m. on August 1st, the same day on which Russian troops crossed the border. On the following day France opened hostilities.

The close of the chapter is labelled officially, "Annex 27," and is a telegram, dated August 1, 1.05 p.m., from the German ambassador in Paris to the German Chancellor. It says:

"To my repeated inquiry as to whether France, in case of a German-Russian war, would remain neutral, the Premier declared that France would do that which might be required of her by her interests."

PTE. BETTS IS ACCIDENTALLY KILLED

MONTREAL, Aug. 31.—The killing of Pte. Gordon Betts, the 15-year-old member of the Fifth Royal Highlanders, living at 261 Colonial avenue, Montreal, who was shot when on guard on the Soulanges Canal last Thursday night, by Pte. Charles Taunton, of the same regiment, a fellow sentry, was accidental. This was the verdict of the coroner's jury at the inquest Saturday.

Eighty-Five Spies Imprisoned.

KINGSTON, Aug. 31.—Eighty-five supposed German spies were brought here from Montreal yesterday and lodged in quarters at Fort Henry. There is now a total of 112 prisoners in the fort. The fort is to undergo extensive repairs and the prisoners will be put to work.

DIFFERENT RIFLES BEING USED IN PRESENT WAR

British Rifle is Shortest and Has Largest Magazine

It has been charged that the German infantry is using dum-dum bullets in the present war, despite the fact that they are prohibited by the rules that are supposed to govern civilized war. Germans, also, are said to be employing a peculiarly murderous bayonet, one with hooked edges, that makes terrible wounds when it is withdrawn. We became familiar with the dum-dum bullet for the first time in the Boer War, the soldiers of Oom Paul using this sort of missile on many occasions. The dum-dum bullet has not the penetrating powers of a hard-nosed bullet, but inflicts a far worse wound, for as soon as a bullet strikes a bone it flattens out and tears a jagged hole, whereas the hard-nosed bullet drills a clean hole, and very often passes through the body leaving hardly a mark. The so-called stopping power of a bullet is very different from its penetrating power. For instance, a heavy bullet travelling at a comparatively low velocity has far more stopping power than a smaller bullet travelling twice as fast.

Criticism of French Rifle.

The rifles, bullets and explosives used in the present war are widely different, different nations pinning their faith to not only different makes of rifles, but different styles. Germany, Russia and Belgium are using the Mauser, which was the Boers' favorite small arm, as it was that of the Spaniards when they fought the United States. Great Britain uses the Lee-Enfield, Austria's troops are equipped with the Mannlicher and the French the Lebel. All are magazine guns, but the French rifles are radically different from the others. The French rifle has a tube through which the bullets pass to the barrel, while the others have boxes or clips just under the stock and in front of the trigger guard. The general opinion is that the French method of storing the extra bullets is a mistaken one, since with each shot fired the centre of gravity shifts back to the butt, and the tendency will be for the second and succeeding shots to go high, whereas the opposite tendency would be better. By storing the bullets compactly under the breech the balance of the weapon is not disturbed.

British Magazine Largest.

Until recently the theory of the British authorities upon rifle shooting was that the soldier should reload his gun after each shot, and reserve the magazine for an emergency. Now, however, the British infantryman, like all others, will not reload until he has discharged all the cartridges in the magazine. The British magazine holds ten bullets. The Mauser and Mannlicher hold five, and the Lebel eight. Speaking generally, the range of modern rifles is about 2,000 yards, this being the extreme distance for which they are sighted. The German rifle is sighted up to 2,882 yards, but the idea that a German soldier can hit another soldier at a mile and a half appears to be a fanastic one. Experts usually place 1,000 yards as the greatest range at which effective shooting can be done. At that distance any of the rifles of the armies now engaged would kill a horse.

Britain's Short Rifle.

There is considerable variety in the length of the rifles of the various armies, that of the British being considerably the shortest, the French the longest, and the Austrian the lightest. The French rifle weighs nine pounds and three ounces, and the Belgian rifle only eight pounds and half an ounce. With the bayonet attached the Austrian rifle weighs one ounce less than nine pounds. Previous to 1906 the rifle of the British army was the long Lee-Enfield, which, with bayonet attached, weighed ten pounds three and a half ounces, or two ounces more than the French rifle with bayonet, which is now the heaviest carried by any modern European soldier. The long Lee-Enfield, however, has been discarded by the regulars, and now is the weapon of the second line of defence. The present Lee-Enfield measures three feet eight and a half inches. The German rifle is some five inches longer. The French and Russian rifles are from three to four inches longer still. It is thought that the greater length and weight of the French rifle and bayonet will give the French considerable advantage in fighting at close quarters.

Different Explosives Used.

The rifles also vary as regards calibre, the Russian bullet being the smallest, .3 inches. The British is .303, the German .311, and the French .315. The Austrian bullet is the heaviest and the British the lightest, the latter being round, while most of the German bullets are of the Spitzer type, or sharp-nosed. The muzzle velocity of the bullets ranges from 2,882 feet per second of the German pointed bullet to 1,985 feet per second of the Russian bullet. The muzzle velocity of the British bullet is 2,060. The explosives also are different. Britain uses cordite and Russia uses pyroxiline. The other powers use nitroglycerine. The weight of the British explosive is the least, being about three-quarters of the charge that sends home the Austrian bullets.

Belgian Ministers off for U.S.

OSTEND, Aug. 31.—The commission of Ministers left for the United States Saturday, charged with a mission to President Wilson, to whom they will deliver a document from the Belgian Government relating to alleged violations of international law by Germany, and to solicit action by the American Government.

Composing the commission are Messrs. Goblet, Delvielle, Desadeleer and Vandervelde, the latter Socialist leader in the Belgian Chamber of Deputies.

BRITISHERS WERE SUPERIOR IN HELIGOLAND BATTLE

Attack Had Been Carefully Planned and Guns Did Deadty Execution.

London, Aug. ?1. — Twenty-nine killed and thirty-eight wounded was the price in men paid by the British for the naval action against the Germans in Heligoland Bight Friday.

The Admiralty announced the casualties as follows :

"The light cruiser Arethusia lost Lieut. Eric Westmacott and nine men killed ; four men seriously wounded, and Lieut. Robinson and eleven men wounded, but not seriously.

"The torpedo boat destroyer Liberty lost Lieut.-Commander Bartellot and six men killed ; one man who has since died from wounds ; one dangerously wounded ; five seriously wounded, and five slightly wounded.

"The destroyer Laurel suffered ten men killed ; one has since died of his wounds ; two men dangerously wounded, seven seriously wounded, and two slightly wounded."

The Liberty, one of the British destroyers which took part in the battle off Heligoland, was hit by a shell which shattered her mast and tore away part of her bridge first of all and then smashed her searchlights and killed her commander, Lieut.-Commander Nigel K. W. Bartellot and William Butcher, his signal man. Their deaths were instantaneons.

Perfect in Execution.

Accounts of the battle say it was perfect in exection as well as in plan. Led by a fearless small detachment, the destroyers crept within the German lines at dawn between Heligoland and the German coast.

An aeroplane sighted them and gave the news to the Germans, whose destroyers then came out. The British destroyers lured the Germans to the open sea, where other destroyers were waiting spread out in fan shape.

A small engagement followed and then the German cruisers came out. The British light cruiser Arethusa, after a sighting shot, got her range splendidly, and hit the foremost gun of one of the German cruisers, demolishing it. The Arethusa then fired a few broadsides at the enemy. Her practice was excellent. She hit a German cruiser which at once burst into smoke and flame, but soon afterwards a German shot did some damage to the engine-room of the Arethusa.

The destroyers Laertes and Liberty fought a grand fight. A shell brought down the mast of the Liberty. The Laertes was hit amidships, a hole was shot through her funnel, her forward guns were damaged and she received a shell in the dynamo room and a shot aft which wrecked her cabin.

Cruisers' Deadly Work.

It was hot work, but at that moment the British light cruisers and battle cruisers appeared. It was the moment for which they had been waiting and their execution was deadly. The first shot from one of the British cruisers sank a German cruiser which had been battering a destroyer.

The German fleet then turned and fled in the direction of Cuxhaven, but they were pursued by the British destroyers, which did terrible execution with their four-inch guns.

Many of the Germans landed from the British ships after the battle were wounded by revolver bullets. It is declared that the revolvers were used by German officers to prevent their men surrendering to the British boats which had put off to save their drowning opponents. Some of the boats, lowered to the rescue of the Germans, it is said, were fired upon by German cruisers.

The German official announcement of the naval battle confirms the British report that the German cruisers Ariadne, Koeln and Mainz and one torpedo boat were sunk. A despatch received here by the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company from Berlin says :

"The naval engagement near Heligoland is treated by the press as being without significance, and as an occurrence which cannot affect the general situation. The fighting took place apparently within the range of the Heligoland forts, which, however, were unable to use their guns, owing to the thick weather."

An official British statement, issued tonight, says that of 1,200 men composing the crews of the five German warships sunk off Heligoland only 330 were saved.

The official information bureau announces that Vice-Admeral Augustine Boue de Lapeyrere, commander-in-chief of the French navy, has assumed command of the combined Anglo-French fleet in the Mediterranean. As a consequence, Rear-Admiral Sir Archibald Berkeley Milne, who was senior to the French admiral, has given over his command of the British Mediterranean fleet.

An official statement, issued tonight, in describing the action between the British and German warships off Heligoland, says :

"The principle of the operation was a scouting movement by a strong force of destroyers to cut off the German light craft from home and engage them at leisure in the open sea.

After briefly describing the sinking of three German cruisers — the Mainz, Koeln and Ariadne — the statement continues :

Superiority of British.

"Although only two of the enemy's destroyers were actually observed to sink, most of the other eighteen or twenty boats rounded up and attacked were well punished, and only saved themselves by a scattered flight.

"The superior gun power and strength of the British destroyers, ship for ship, was conclusively demonstrated. The destroyers themselves did not hesitate to engage the enemy's cruisers, both with guns and torpedoes, with hardihood, and two of them got knocked about in the process.

"Intercepted German signals and other information from German sources confirms the report of Admiral Beatty as to the sinking of the third German cruiser, which now appears to have been the Ariadne.

"The British destroyers exposed themselves to considerable risk in endeavoring to save as many as possible of the German sailors. British officers present vouch for the fact that German officers were observed firing at their own men in the water with pistols, and that several were shot before their eyes.

"Under these peculiar circumstances a destroyer was actually picking up wounded with her boats when she was driven off by the approach of another German cruiser, and had to leave two of her boats, containing one officer and nine men, behind. It was feared that these would be made prisoners, but, happily, a submarine arrived and brought the British party home.

"The complements of the five German vessels known to have been sunk aggregated abou: 1,200 officers and men, all of whom, with the exception of three hundred prisoners, wounded and otherwise, perished.

"Besides this, there was the loss, which must have been severe, aboard the German torpedo boats and other cruisers, which did not sink during the action.

"The total British casualties amounted to 69 killed and wounded. Among the killed must be included two officers of exceptional merit, Lt.-Commander Nigel K. W. Bartteleot and Lieut. Eric Westmacott. All the British ships will be fit for service in a week or ten days.

"The First Lord of the Admiralty has telegraphed the American Ambassador at Berlin, desiring to inform Admiral von Tirpitz, the German Minister of Marine, that his son had been saved and had not been wounded."

AUTO HORNS

From his study of the effects of different noises on persons of varied sensitiveness, Prof. Marage recommends that automobiles have two signals—an inoffensive grave sound for city use, and a far-penetrating loud and shrill sound for the country. Everybody, no doubt, agrees with him on this point.

Some of the noises coming from motor cars these days are nerve-rackers. If allowed to continue making such auto horns, manufacturers and invenists will soon have the human voice speaking from auto horns. By the way wouldn't it be feasible to have a smoke tank in an automobile for storing smoke while in crowded city districts and this smoke could be let out at intermittent points when the car was in an uncrowded district and would not be so offensive to the man on the sidewalk. Just another, perhaps that tank could be so constructed as to allow the smoke to warm the bottom of the car and make it quite comfortable for the feet in cold weather.

A NAME FOR THE WAR

New York Sun.

How shall the war be named in history? What is or is likely to be the salient feature of characteristic that will stand out most descriptively in the popular mind?

Some wars name themselves. The Crimean war, the Seven Weeks war — though this is often spoken of merely as the Sadowa campaign — the Balkan war could hardly have been called anything else. Our own great war has been called by many names, but with the progress of reconciliation the title Civil war steadily gains acceptance.

The very convenient designation by the hyphenation of the belligerents has given us the Franco-German—contemporaneously Franco-Prussian war— the Russo-Turkish, Russo-Japanese, and the Spanish-American wars. But one cannot hyphenate all the countries in Europe, and it looks as if pretty nearly all would soon be engaged. The Austro-Hungarian-Servian-Russian-Anglo-Franco - Germano-Belgian-Portuguese would be a comprehensive designation, but rather long for common use.

Two possible ways of naming the present struggle seem to suggest themselves. The more obvious and perhaps the one that will win most general acceptance is the Pan-European war, which seems to fit the situation. But it is not impossible that the popular imagination, fastening upon the essential fact of the two great empires of common language and curiously interwoven history fighting back to back against all the rest of Europe, may unconsciously drift into recognizing the mighty struggle as the German war.

It is the struggle, not the victory, that constitutes the glory of noble hearts.—Sir Arthur West.

ITALY WANTS AN EXPLANATION

PARIS, Aug. 31.—An Italian ultimatum to Austria, which will require an explanation as to why the Austrians are mobilizing on the frontier of Italy, it is expected, will be sent immediately. Italian troops are expected to gather at Trieste shortly. There is great interest here in a statement of Italy's policy, as outlined in a Rome newspaper. The paper says that the war will alter the map of Europe, and especially the relative positions of Servia and Austria in the Adriatic. It thinks that Italy's neutrality must be temporary only. The article, which appeared in Corriere Della Sera, does not intimate on which side the Italians will be found.

GAVE HIS LIFE FOR ANOTHER

Toronto Man Overcome With Gas

Toronto, Aug. 31.—In a brave effort to rescue John Simons, Danforth road, who was overcome with gas while digging a well for Robert Hutton, Westlick avenue, on Saturday morning, Andrew Cooper, a young man living on Bridge avenue, east Toronto, was overcome with gas and died before his body was brought to the surface. A third man, William Sims, 659 Carlaw avenue, was also overcome with the gas while going to Cooper's assistance. Simons and Sims were rescued after some time. They recovered consciousness two hours later.

The well had been sunk forty-two feet when the gas broke into the excavation. At this time the diggers had failed to reach water. When the gas broke through Simons was the only person in the well. He was quickly overcome, but managed to warn those overhead of his plight. Cooper was standing at the top of the excavation, and, without hesitation, went to Simon's assistance. He managed to bring the unconscious Simons to the surface. As he reached the mouth of the well he fell back.

With a rope about his waist Sims went to Cooper's assistance. Before he reached the bottom of the well he was unconscious and was dragged to the surface by his companions in a serious condition. Doctors worked over Simons and Sims successfully. They used a pulmotor.

When it was seen that it would be impossible for those about the mouth of the well to rescue Cooper, a message was sent to the central fire station, asking for the use of their diving equipment. Cooper's body was brought to the surface during the afternoon.

HOTEL AT ATHERLEY DESTROYED BY FIRE

Orillia, Aug. 31.—Fire visited this locality in two places in the early hours of Saturday morning, doing damage to the extent of about $2,000. About 2 o'clock a building in the south end was destroyed, and about 4 o'clock the old hotel at Atherley was burned. The contents of the hotel were saved. There was very little insurance.

No wife should tell her husband of her mistakes, domestic or otherwise; he will see quite enough of them for himself.—Marie Connor Leighton.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

CHURCH COLLECTIONS.

Editor Review:

Dear Sir,—Being a constant reader of your appreciated paper, I respectfully desire this short but valuable epistle to be inserted in your paper. Let my voice, through the Review, be heard by all sections of Christian people in this city. I suggest that every church in this, our Peterborough, will on Sunday, September 6, give all the morning collections to the war fund. The soldiers have left wives and children behind them and gone to the front to take part in silencing the wicked guns of our enemy. Let us be Christian soldiers and provide plenty of dollars for our churches and thus respectfully provide for the dear ones that have their bread-winner at the war. Hoping my epistle will meet with a quick response from all the churches, I remain,

Yours truly,
WAR VETERAN.

WHAT IS THE CAUSE OF IT?

To the Editor of The Review:

Sir, — For a disregarding of the warnings of the Most High some of the kingdoms of the Jews were destroyed. The Jews were quick to recognize a blessing because it chimed in with their own views, but a curse they would not recognise, even when their prophets proclaimed it. For this, great calamities overtook them. The present condition of Europe and the progenitor of Christian Europe, Palestine, would indicate to an unprejudiced mind that the Christians so-called have not been following the commands of God. No one pretends that any blessing is now resting upon the world, unless it be in disguise. What I wish to call the attention of the various religious bodies to is the utter blankness and uselessness, if not worse, of their present methods. They have apparently set up their own little gods of money and denominational squabbling and enterprise, or whatever it may be. It may be their neglect of conduct and the well-being of the mass of the people. There is no God but God, and His ways are plain and straight, and if we substitute for what He makes manifest from day to day our own ideas, then we will suffer. Is it not plain that we cannot defy Nature? God made Nature and makes it inviolable. No man can violate a law of Nature and escape. Wouldn't a wise people pay more attention to this fact? So long as we put up all sorts of arguments and emotions and hopes and fears as a substitute for what we see every day around us, we can expect nothing better than what we have brought ourselves to. If all His paths are pleasantness and peace how comes it that we do not try and follow them? When we cease to substitute man for God, we will be able to reconcile all things, but not till then.

Yours,
NATURE.

Ceremony Postponed.

WERE ARE ALL AT THE FRONT SAYS REV. J. R. WEBB

Murray Street Church Pastor Sees a Silver Lining to the War Cloud — Our Duty

Rev. J. R. Webb delivered a very eloquent and impressive sermon in Murray Street Baptist church Sunday evening on "The Silver Lining of the War Cloud," taking for his text Psalm 46, and dealing chiefly with verse 10: "Be still and know that I am God. I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth.

Just as we in the western hemisphere of God's kingdom were awaiting the clearing of the clouds and looking for better times, war suddenly loomed on the horizon, and Britain's statesmen were straining every nerve, trying to prevent what has developed into one of the greatest calamities that the nations of the world have witnessed in their history.

All that has been said and revealed by our mediums of news is nothing in comparison with the awfulness of the battlefield—words fail to describe the horrors. We had thought war impossible, but our hopeful desires were prostrated. But, considering this, it is not a time for wild excitement. We must remain calm and look on the silver lining of this war cloud. The duty of every man is to possess a feeling of optimism, and by exercising this spirit we are acting as benefactors in the present unsettled condition of the world. In times of peace we have many sordid enjoyments, which too often lead to strife, but such hell as is imminent in this city to-day is far in excess of what we have experienced in the past. Men are daily being thrown out of positions which are their all in all, and their only means of keeping up an existence. In the past we have shown fellowship, but greater fellowship than ever is needed in this time of need. Many have volunteered from this fair Dominion, and are awaiting the call to the front, but whether we are at the immediate scene of the battle or far distant, we are all at the front in common, suffering together.

Not Hour for Luxury.

Although we may look on the silver lining of this cloud, it is not the hour for luxury, pleasure and carelessness concerning each other. We must be prepared in church, store, factory, office and home to do with less, whether forced upon us or not—thus we are showing a fellowship with those who are in dire need.

Men who have been active in the militia in times of peace should all be volunteers for service now, whether called upon or not. All should show a spirit to go and defend what is right in God's eyes.

Those laying in extra supplies of provisions at this time, realizing that they are rapidly advancing in price, are sinners against their fellow men who are unable to purchase these extra supplies. In this buying of large quantities, it is showing a spirit of selfishness, and increasing the price of table supplies to those who are unable to buy an extra quantity. Heroism on the battlefield was thought to be a thing of the past, but August, 1914, will stand out in the calendar of history as the scene of great heroism. England would not tolerate selfishness, injustice, cruelty and oppression—every Briton was roused to a feeling of patriotism as a result. Can we see a small, inoffensive child smitten on the street by a big bully? Can God be pleased with that? No. Neither will England and her allies.

The present furnace of war will be a forerunner of the sword being welded into a ploughshare, and we must be calm, realizing that the present heavy cloud speaks for good times in future and a peace for all. God will be exalted on earth. Be calm; there is a silver lining to this cloud.

MAYOR RECEIVED LARGE DEPUTATION OF UNEMPLOYED

Promises Some Measure of Relief After Meeting of Council To-night

"If the city and the laboring men stand shoulder to shoulder during the present crisis, I am sure that we will come through with flying colors."

With these words did His Worship Mayor Buller close his reply to the deputation of unemployed headed by Mr. J. H. Burnham which waited in the Council Chamber this afternoon.

The deputation consisted of over fifty men and Mr. Burnham, the champion of the cause of the unemployed of Peterboro made an apppeal to the city of Peterboro to do something so as to enable the working men to get employment. He claimed that the men do not want to take sustenance money for nothing when they could earn it and it is up to the city council, being the representatives of the citizens to provide work for them. Mr. Burnham suggested that the city could sell small bonds and raise enough money to go ahead with the city's work. He himself was willing to buy $1000 worth and knew numerous other men of the city who were willing to buy similar amounts and of even greater amount.

Mayor Buller in reply told the deputation that it was not the desire of the council to see the men traversing the streets of the city and as he stated when he first took possession of the Mayor's chair if there was anything he could do to assist the laboring man he was only pleased to do it. He assurred the deputation that the city council had left no stone unturned in its effort to raise money. They appealed to the bank with which they dealt but they were turned down and then they set about trying to get the money by other means. The city of Peterboro is not financially embarrassed but is one of the best debentured cities in the Dominion of Canada. When they couldn't get money from their own bank they went in search of other sources. He was pleased to state that another bank had made them a proposition which in all probability will be accepted by the city council tonight at the special meeting, and it is also probable that the city would make some move along the lines of Mr. Burnham's suggestion, that is to sell bonds of small amount to citizens and pay them six per cent. Any citizens with two or three hundred dollars or more will be able to place that in "their own bank" and secure twice the interest the banks are paying.

Provide for Families.

Mayor Buller also spoke of the question of providing for the families of the men who are fighting for the cause of the British Empire which is to be discussed tonight at the meeting fo the Council and made it evident to the men that something definite would be done.

He understood that the government intended going ahead with the work on the public building and dock yard in East City and this, with the outfall sewer and other civic work would enable the city to come out of the crisis with flying colors. The only way was for the city and laboring men to stand shoulder to shoulder.

His Worship's reply was enthusiastically applauded and the men left with the firm belief that something would be done for them immediately.

READY AGAIN FOR SCHOOL

Pupils Will Assemble at Halls of Learning To-morrow

NORMALITES HERE

All the public schools of the city re-open to-morrow morning, and it is expedient that every pupil be in his or her proper place at 9 o'clock. The classes will be arranged and everything put in readiness to begin work on Wednesday morning.

Every train arriving this morning brought students for the Normal school. The term commences to-morrow.

With the exception of the School of the Sacred Heart, all the separate schools of the city and St. Peter's Continuation Classes will be resumed to-morrow morning. Extensive repairs and additions have taken place at the School of the Sacred Heart, and, owing to the inclement weather, it will not be ready for occupancy for another week.

LAID AT REST.

The funeral took place this afternoon, of a life long resident of this city in the person of Chas. A. Alexander. The pallbearers were Messrs. Greene, Forsythe, Curran and Montgomery. Rev. Canon Davidson conducted the services. Interment took place in Little Lake Cemetery.

Our right to enjoyment is limited by the similar right of those who live at the same time as ourselves.—Maurice Maeterlinck.

FR. MEAGHER IS APPOINTED TO LAKEFIELD

Commenced His Duties as Parish Priest on Sanday

Rev. Father Meagher, of St. Peter's cathedral, has been appointed parish priest of Lakefield, and commenced his new duties yesterday. Rev. Father Meagher, who was ordained some five years ago by the late Bishop O'Connor, has been in charge of the Norwood parish, in the absence of Rev. Father Galvin, and it was from there he received his appointment. No definite word has been received from Father Galvin as to when he will arrive home, but it is expected that it will be in the course of two weeks.

YOUNGSTERS STEAL TOOLS

They Get a Lecture and Rod is not Spared

Daniel Thompson was not obeying the Lord's command on Sunday, but was right royally enjoying himself on a good sized spree. He was relieved of $5.00 at Police Court this morning.

Two twelve year old boys were up in the Juvenile Court on a charge of stealing tools from Edward Wand's mill in East City. The value is about $15. They gained entrance to the mill by a hole large enough for them to crawl through and made away with the tools. They pleaded guilty. Court read them a lecture, which will be supplemented by punishment in the good old way, viz., the strap.

COUNCIL TO MEET

To-night's council meeting will discuss the formation of a patriotic fund to assist the needy of the city, and will also consider a proposition made by the Bank of Montreal to furnish the city with much needed money.

KAISER HAS BEEN TOO SLOW TO SAVE EAST PRUSSIA; RUSSIANS AT VISTULA

Immediate Advance on Berlin is in Prospect if Russian Army Gets Across River—Fierce Fighting is Reported all Along the Eastern Frontier—Germans Going East to Defend Frontier.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—The German Emperor has not been quick enough to save East Prussia. The invading Russians are now in West Prussia and threaten to cross the Vistula river, and it has been promised in their behalf that should they succeed in crossing they will march directly to Berlin.

It was officially announced here yesterday that the Russians have attacked Thorn and Graudenz in West Prussia, having marched from Allenstein in East Prussia. Graudenz is on the Vistula, while Thorn, a fortified town, is about 35 miles to the south also on the Vistula and just above the edge of Posen.

In their attack on the two towns of on Thorn at least the Russians are expected to use the numerous siege guns they have with them. It is also announced that the Czar's troops have taken the offensive along the entire front and fierce fighting is progressing on the eastern frontier.

The Austrian troops resisting the Russians of Galicia have concentrated at Kielce, in Russian Poland, and are proceeding along the right bank of the Vistula. They will take part in the battle to the east of Lemberg, where the Russians have taken 300 prisoners. In the fighting in that region the enemy, it is stated, lost 300 men in killed and wounded.

The Hungarians also lost four cannon and a number of caissons to the Russians.

Near Pedgoroz the Czar's troops took 1,000 prisoners, while north of Tomacheff the 15th Hungarian division was defeated. Entire regiments surrendered, it is reported.

Newspapers in St. Petersburg have made quite a stir in the Rusisan capital by the announcement that the German railways are preparing to transport German troops from the western frontier to Prussia. The Russian forces are expected to be engaged in an enormous contest within the next few days.

German Army Corps Going Back?

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 31. — During Saturday night 160 trains, representing an entire army corps of German soldiers, with all their transports, passed through the southwestern part of Belgium, headed northwards. This fact leads to the belief that the Germans are withdrawing an army corps from the French frontier.

The German troops are being withdrawn from the captured City of Brussels, only 2,000 men being left there.

MAY DECLARE WAR ANY DAY NOW

Turkey Being Egged on to Plunge Into Whirpool

LONDON, Aug. 31. — The Daily Telegraph's diplomatic correspondent, in an article printed to-day, says:—

"Turkey may declare war at any moment. It is now only a matter of a few days—possibly a few hours.

"All efforts of the powers of the Triple Entente have failed, and the London Embassy admits the situation very grave. The military party, now dominant in Constantinople, has reached the conclusion that the present is the best time to secure the restoration of Macedonia and the Aegean Islands.

"German officers and men are being poured into Constantinople to help the Turkish army and navy. Turkey apparently counts on the Balkan states quarreling among themselves while Turkey fights Greece, but it seems likely that Turkey's declaration of war against Greece will be regarded as a hostile act by the Triple Entente, which will send a fleet to dispose of all the Turkish and German ships.

Kaiser at Cologne and Mainz.

PARIS, Aug. 31. — Word comes from Basel, Switzerland, that the Kaiser and general staff of the German army are making their headquarters at Cologne and Mainz. The emperor is constantly going from one place to the other in giving directions in the fighting in Belgium. It is said that the crown prince is not with the general staff.

Wanted:

A Message From Canadian Manufacturers

There never was a time in the history of Canada when the people of Canada needed so badly a message from the manufacturers of Canada.

The factories of Canada's foes are closed to the need of her people. The factories of Canada's allies are forced temporarily to desist from shipping Canada-wards.

These facts are known to the people of Canada, but many of them do not know that Canadian manufacturers are now making many of the articles that have been imported from Europe, and that many Canadian manufacturers will shortly be manufacturing in Canada many other articles that have not been made in this country heretofore.

There is here an opportunity for the manufacturers of Canada to render a real service to the people of Canada and in the rendering of that service to greatly benefit themselves.

Let the manufacturers of Canada use the newspapers at this time more than ever to tell the people of Canada that they are in a position to supply most of the things that have been imported from Europe and that they are equipping their factories to supply more of those things.

The eyes of the people of Canada are looking toward the manufacturers of Canada, waiting their message of re-assurance and of ability to serve. The newspapers of Canada are at the service of the manufacturers of Canada to carry their message to the Canadian people.

BOMB WAS DROPPED IN CAPITAL

German Aeroplane Flies Over French City

PARIS, Aug. 31.—A German aeroplane, flying at a height of 6,000 feet over Paris, dropped a bomb into the city at 1.30 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The bomb struck near l'Est railway station, not far from the military hospital, but did no damage.

Zeppelin Is "Winged."

LONDON, Aug. 31.—A Reuter despatch from St. Petersburg says that a Zeppelin dirigible which bombarded the railway station at Mlawa, just over the border of Russian Poland, was brought down by Russian fire. There were eight soldiers in the car with quick-firers and explosives.

German Attempt Fails.

BASEL, Switzerland, Aug. 31.—The German aeroplanes made an unsuccessful attempt early yesterday to destroy with bombs the dirigible balloon hangar at Belfort, France, which is 35 miles northwest of here.

ADVANCE WAS CHECKED BY THE BRITISH

Wounded Germans Admit Britain Played Chief Role

LONDON, Aug. 31. — A despatch from Boulogne says the wounded Germans are being given the same attention as the French and British. "They declare," says the despatch, "that the extraordinary resistance offered by the allied armies was a great surprise to the invaders. After the occupation of Brussels they expected to march to Paris with comparative ease. Their information was that the main French army was distributed along the frontiers of Alsace and Lorraine, so an easy victory for the enormous German forces in Belgium was anticipated.

The wounded German officers admit that the British have taken the principal part in holding up the German advance. The resistance made by the British to the superior German force enabled the French to convey by railway large reinforcements from the eastern to the northern frontier and to interpose new obstacles between the invaders and Paris.

"The wounded Germans say their losses surpass anything ever experienced in warfare, that the dead number thousands, but they claim that the spirit of the German army is still unbroken and that no sacrifices will deter them from hacking their way to Paris."

The ability to say a mean thing graciously is what makes enemies.

CONVOY IS NOT READY

Megantic With Princess Pat's Infantry is Stopped

VALCARTIER, Aug. 31. — Col. Sam Hughes stated last night that the Princess Patricia Light Infantry, which was ordered to disembark at Quebec, had been stopped in its journey because the British Admiralty was not ready to have the steamer Megantic convoyed across the Atlantic. Some time ago the Dominion Government had been notified that it would be unwise to attempt to send forward any troops unless under escort of British warships, as purely a precautionary measure. The troops were placed on the Megantic at Montreal, as the authorities expected that a cable would be received by the time the steamer reached Quebec that a British convoy was ready, but the message did not come. "The regiment may be leaving for the front any time," said the Minister of Militia. "We are waiting for advice."

COL. THE HON. SAM HUGHES.

Col. Hughes, Denis Murphy, of Ottawa; H. H. Stevens, M.P. for Vancouver, and a squad of newspaper men from the House of Commons, arrived in camp yesterday. They were toured over the grounds. The Minister also inspected the Toronto Kilties on their arrival. From Saturday noon until two o'clock Sunday morning battery after battery reach the camp, and last night most of the Canadian artillery, commanded by Col. Morrison, had arrived here and will begin training at once.

Austrian Troops Transferred.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 31.—Information has been received here that the Austrian troops are being transferred from Alsace to the Italian frontier. This movement is in line with despatches from Geneva, Switzerland, which state that some 800,000 Italian troops are massed near the Austrian front, and that the Government could not restrain the public if once the war spirit gets full control of the people.

Kiaochau May Last Three Months.

TOKIO, Aug. 31.—Military experts here are said not to expect the fall of Kiaochau before the end of November, except by the voluntary capitulation of the Germans. The defences are reported to be most formidable and virtually impregnable from the sea. The land fortifications do not follow the usual German methods, but resemble those at Port Arthur. There are three lines of the defences.

The food supply in Kiaochau is said to be ample for three months.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 29.—Winnipeg wheat opened ⅝c lower to ¼c higher. Oats and flax were unchanged. Trading was fairly active during the first hour of business and prices strengthened in sympathy with American markets. It was stated that Morgan & Co., New York bankers, had agreed to pay exporters for wheat sold to certain European countries, and this was a factor in stiffening values, being aided by short covering over the week-end. Closing prices were ½c to ⅝c higher.

The cash demand was quieter for wheat and prices were steady. The movement of wheat is gradually increasing, and the market generally is showing the effect of hedging.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 29.—Owing to the limited supply of oats available on spot and for shipment from the west a strong feeling prevails in the market and prices have scored a further advance of 2c per bushel. The demand for car lots is fair, and sales of No. 2 C.W. were made at 64c to 65c per bushel ex-store. There was some enquiry over the cable, but as bids were lower than of late no business was done. In flour the feeling is firm under a good demand and an active trade is doing. Millfeed is scarce and strong with a good demand. Rolled oats fairly active. Baled hay in good demand and prices are tending toward a higher level. The butter market is strong and prices in the country scored a further advance of ½c to ¾c per pound, compared with last week. Sales of finest creamery butter were made at Cowansville at 29¾c, and St. Hyacinthe at 29c. Receipts for the week were 14,068 packages, against 10,224 a year ago. The cheese market is strong, but at the higher prices the demand from English buyers has eased. Receipts for the week were 58,640 boxes, compared with 28,232 the same week last year. Eggs active and firm. Receipts for the week were 6617 cases, against 4201 a year ago. Stocks: Wheat 3,608,563, corn 94,918, oats 309,573, barley 90,894, rye 22,604, flax 97,125, flour 36,043 sacks.

PRESS BUREAU TELLS ALL.

Stories of Correspondents Must Be Taken With a Grain of Salt.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—The official bureau correspondence accompanying the publication of Lord Kitchener's statement concerning the British army at the front took a rap at the correspondents whose stories purport to be made up of personal experiences on the battle line. The bureau says:

"The bureau has issued an official statement describing the fortunes of the expeditionary force during the past few days. This statement, the terms of which have been carefully considered, accurately and fully describes the present position. The bureau has not found it necessary to forbid the publication of messages dealing with recent operations, provided such messages neither gave away military information nor disclosed the organization or position of the troops.

"These messages, however, should be received with extreme caution. No correspondents are at the front, and the information, however honestly sent, is, therefore, derived at second or third hand, from persons who are in no condition to tell coherent stories, and who are certain to be without the perspective which is necessary to construct or understand the general situation.

"It is hoped that the statement issued to-night will dissipate any apprehension caused by such reports, and restore the necessary perspective to the recent operations."

An Ugly Looking Lizard.

Among the lizards of Australia the "thorny devil" (Moloch horridus) is unrivaled in its ugliness. From the tip of its nose to the end of its tail this lizard is covered with tubercles and spines, but in spite of its dangerous appearance it is quite harmless. It measures about seven inches in length. It has a flat body, a small head and a cylindrical tail. It frequents sandy places, feeds largely on ants and is more or less diurnal in habits. Its powerful limbs are furnished with strong claws, which it uses in digging the sand, in which it often lies wholly or partially buried.

whatever is Miller, and he's hardly good enough to work in any faster company.

It is not improbable that the Canadian League schedule next season will be divided into two series, the first to end about the middle of July, and the team leading at that time playing off with the winner of the series which begins where the other leaves off, and runs until the end of the season. This method has been adopted with more or less success in many minor leagues this season. The main feature about it is that it tends to make the race more interesting, and also gives those teams who got away to a bad start a chance to figure in the running after strengthening up. This would increase the interest in the cities where the team was apparently out of the running early in the season. It would also prevent any other team making a runaway of the race for the pennant.

Another advantage is the possibility of a post-season series between the team leading in July and the team leading at the end of the season, providing they were two different clubs. This series would attract much interest in both cities, and would also provide a sort of world series. Such a post-season series between London and Ottawa would be a big money maker for the two clubs. In fact, it would be a money maker for any clubs in the league who were fortunate enough to figure in it. The pennant would be the hardest fought of the season.

The present schedule of the league has been unsatisfactory, objections to it being made by every club in the circuit. The league has not enjoyed the good season this year that it did last, although it has provided better ball, and is a higher class organization. Only the London and Ottawa clubs will come out ahead, while the others will lose various amounts, some of the clubs being in pretty steep.—London Advertiser.

ERIE FANS WANT TO PLAY IN THEIR OWN BACK YARD

Canuck Company Not Satisfactory and There's No Class to the League

The Erie correspondent of the St. Louis Sporting News says: With the baseball season nearing its end, Erie fans are beginning to talk of what will happen in the future and the talk turns to the subject of Erie's chances of getting out of the Canadian league and back into a circuit where it knows and likes the company better. The Canadian league has been a failure as far as Erie is concerned. From a financial standpoint the league never had a look-in as far as Erie was concerned and this is mainly due to the fact that the article of ball played in this circuit is far inferor to the brand that Erie has been used to. The team that represented Erie in the Interstate circuit last year would have broken up the Canadian league, it being doubtful if there is a team in the league that could have won a single game from it in the entire season.

This is borne out by the way some of the former Interstate players are going in the Canadian. None of the best in the Interstaters are in this circuit, but a look at Schettler, who was not by and means the best in the Interstate, tells the story. It is said over the Canadian circuit that all the former pitcher has to do is to put on his glove and Peterboro has another game chalked up on the win side.

Opinion now is that it would have been better for Erie had this city remained out of league ball this year. By now the fans would be hungry to get into a league, and if in 1915 Erie got into a league on the American side of the great lakes the team would be supported as never before.

The general opinion seems to be that another year in the Canadian will kill Erie for years to come as far as baseball is concerned. Of course George O'Neill, majority owner of the Erie franchise, can hold this territory for the Canadian if he so desires, but with the disastrous year of 1914 to look back upon, it is not likely that O'Neil, being as he is a good business man, will insist upon Erie remaining with the Canadian outfit if there is an opportunity to get the kind of baseball that the local fans want.

Erie is not interested very much in the other seven towns in the Canadian league. There is no rivalry between Erie and London, Erie and Peterboro, Erie and Ottawa, or any of the other towns in the league, and this alone is enough to put a damper on the sport.

The fans, or at least a great majority of them, are strong in favor of a circuit that would include such towns as Youngstown, Akron, Grand Rapids and the like, and with the Central cut to a five-club circuit and the weaker sisters weeded out of this league, it seems as if the time were ripe for the formation of a league that will include the strongest of the old Interstate and the present Central.

With a league of this kind Erie would again take her proper place in the baseball world.

COMMENT

As You Like It

When rain prevented the ball game on Saturday between the locals and the Londoners from being played, an anticipated record was smashed. Up till Saturday not a game had been postponed on the local field, and it was expected that the old boss, J. Pluv, would favor us till the end of the season. Other years the Petes have suffered considerably from wet weather, but this year they "got the breaks."

Doc Reisling says that he intends to give up pitching and start and play some other position. The big manager of the Cockneys claims that he hasn't the right stuff on the ball and gets by more through luck than good pitching. Referring to his batting ability, Reisling states that his absence from the game for three years affected him greatly, but he expects to be up around the .300 mark next season.

Cy Reidy, the veteran catcher, rightfielder and expert coacher of the London team, sprung a yarn on a Cub in his home town about looking for a job on the umpirical staff of some league. Well, Cy, the Cub is the only one you're fooling.

Outfielder Rooney appears to be one of the most reliable men on the staff of Messrs. Blount & Co. 'Tis true the big rightfielder is a little slow on the paths, but he wields the willow with a vengeance and covers the outer garden well. Rooney is one of the few miners who is built after the plan of Eddie Collins, the famous keystone king of the Athletics.

There are teams in the major leagues that are pulling new stuff, unexpected plays and getting away with them; in fact there is more real baseball generalship and brain work being shown this season than for a long time.

One of the prettiest plays evolved by the Athletics this year is the squeeze with runners on second and third, with both runners attempting to score. In one game at Chicago both tallied. The play is a variation of Mike Kelley's famous play of olden times, when he used to score from behind the man who was thrown out at the plate.

The Athletics have worked this play quite often. With runners on second and third, the batter pushes a bunt down the line, if possible, with both runners advancing at top speed when the ball is pitched. The runner from second naturally has a great lead, and turns third, gaining on the man ahead. If the ball is fielded to the plate there is a chance to catch the first runner, but while the catcher is tagging him the one behind slides safe on the other side of the plate. If the opposing fielders are caught napping or hesitate as to which shall field the ball, both runners will score, as they did at Chicago.

Herzog, with the Reds, is preventing mixups on balls thrown to the plate when a runner is trying to score. Herzog knows that not one pitcher in ten knows whether to let the ball go on to the plate or try to catch the runner or catch the ball and shoot back to second to catch the batter who will attempt to take an extra base on the throw to home. Therefore, he makes all his pitchers go back of the catcher when a hit is made.

Maranville and Evers are playing a lot of stuff around second. The chief improvement in Maranville's change of style of passing balls in force-outs and in starting double plays — he used to snap the ball to second, which is risky when the baseman is running at top speed toward him. Now he scoops it, getting a fraction of a second more speed and taking infinitely less risk of causing a muff.

To-morrow will be ladies' day of this week and, incidentally the last ladies' day of the season, as on Wednesday the curtain will be rung down on the Canadian league as far as Peterboro playing at home is concerned.

In referring to the prospects for recruits this year, a writer on the Buffalo Courier states as follows:

"I had the opportunity to go over the situation with two veteran scouts who happened to land in Chicago in one day. We looked over the leagues, one by one. Here is what they say of the major league caliber of players in the minors, giving the number of men they think good enough to stick if they come up either by purchase or draft:

"International, six; Association, five; South Michigan, five; South Atlantic, three; Southern, seven; Pacific Coast, nine; Northwestern, five; Western, four; Central, three; Eastern, six; Three I, three; Texas, six; Tri State, two; Appalachian, two; Ohio State, three; Canadian, four."

In our opinion, the four with the brightest chances of going up are Kelly Harris, of Ottawa; Bobby Heck and Louie Bierbauer, of London, and Trout, of Toronto.

The general belief around the circuit is that there are more than four capable of going up. Among other bright prospects are Kelly, of the Petes, and Mitchell, the shortfielder for the Senators. Louie Schettler has been going well all year, but his age is against him. If Chase, of Brantford, or Lefty Rogers, of Ottawa, had a curve ball, they might get by, but without it they are stamped miners forever. Brown, the Erie heaver, looked like the pick of the circuit heavers a few months ago, but he has been in a bad slump of late, while Bobby Auld's chances are not as bright as they were earlier in the season. There is a possibility of Joe Byrne taking a little jump this fall, as at present he is considered one of the most consistent third base guardians in the league.

If any big league scout is sent out

THE KING OF THEM ALL ON THE FIRING LINE

The Master Mind of the Giants May Yet Bring the Flag to New York

While you fans are busy figuring out which team is going to win the National League pennant, stop a moment from the task of debating Boston's, Chicago's and St. Louis' chances in this pennant race. Yes, just a moment—there is one man, one collection of 190 pounds, a right arm that may be weakening a trifle, but a head that is the smartest that has even been placed upon a pitcher, that must be considered ahead of anything else.

This important person is Christopher Mathewson, "dear old Matty" as he is called from one end of Greater New York to the other. Rated by real critics and judges of baseball as the king of them all, he is the one who is going to decide this 1914 National League race.

It isn't the Giants, nor is it going to be McGraw or any other person or thing, but Matty—game, smart, marvelous Matty, who never shows his real speed until the test is before him. Matty stepped in between St. Louis and probably the National League pennant at St. Louis on last Wednesday in the second game of a double-header. He stepped in between third place and first, and if the Cardinals had won that game they would have gone to the top and the Giants to third place.

The St. Louis team, after beating Rube Marquard in the first contest, walked out on the field confident in their ability to beat Matty and go to the top of the heap. Manager Miller Huggins called on Salee to oppose Matty, and this same slim fellow has been a menace to the Giants all season. He has taken three straight from McGraw's triple champions.

Previous to this game the Cardinals had routed Mathewson, pounded him to all corners of the field, and Matty had been beaten. Yes, he had been beaten early in the season, but at times when the Giants were not in danger of losing the lead. Christy has lost nine games this year and fault for six of them can be laid at the door of his team mates. On Wednesday, when the game meant so much, Mathewson shouldered the burden. The Cards had beaten him before, why couldn't they do it this time? Because this was the spot where Matty is supreme. It is pitching such as Christy exhibited on Wednesday that caused his name to be enrolled in baseball's hall of fame.

St. Louis didn't win; the Giants didn't lose the league lead—because according to all reports, McGraw's right bower pitched one of the most brilliant games ever witnessed on a baseball diamond.

Two stingy singles was all Huggins' crew could garner off him. Huggins and Wingo were the Cardinals to reach first base, the former bounding a single over third in the sixth, while Wingo put a scratch hit in right in the sixth inning. Mathewson's control was perfect. He didn't issue a walk. Control looks like Matty's middle name. The Cardinals never had a chance to win. Matty was master.

Matty Outguessed Them.

It is said that it was a treat to watch Mathewson working Wednesday, and one had to be there to appreciate his pitching. Not once through the nine innings did he show signs of weakening. Every move in the direction of the plate was timed perfectly.

Matty plugged along. He would heave his fadeaway, then shoot a fast one across the plate when the batter was set for a hook. He just outguessed them all, which is 100 per cent. on the pitching mound. Mathewson knew the Giants had to win to hold first place, and he knew it was up to him, and he delivered, pitching such a game that will not be duplicated until the pennant race settles down to the last game of the season, with the Giants entered. Then Matty, dear old Matty, will pitch that last game and he will win if he has to pitch a no-hit game and prevent a runner from getting to first base.

On Saturday when Marquard was beaten in the first game of the very crucial double-header against Chicago by a score of 1-0 after both teams playing errorless ball and having each four hits. Then the same old Matty was sent in again to still keep the Giants at the top of the heap. Again did he display the ability to come through in a pinch and won his game by 7-5 holding Hank O'Day's Cubs to eight scattered bingles.

Mathewson has been in the pinches before and lost; but can anyone recall that through any fault of his the game was lost? What lost his game in the world's series? Nothing but errors by his team mates. Mathewson has now won 21 games and lost 9. Matty is king of them all.

Y.M.C.A. BOYS WILL VISIT SICK AND DISTRIBUTE FLOWERS NEXT SATURDAY

On Saturday, Sept. 5th, the Boys' Department of the Y.M.C.A. will conduct a Flower Day, the object of which is to distribute a bouquet of flowers to as many of the sick as it is possible in the city. This of course will include the sick in the hospitals, homes for the aged, and other institutions. The boys would like the citizens to co-operate with them in this good work by sending in the names of any who are sick, also a bouquet of flowers. Last year the boys distributed one hundred and ten bouquets to the sick of the city.

Those sending in flowers will kindly send them to the Y.M.C.A. not later than 10 a.m., Saturday morning, Sept. 5th. The boys will leave the building at 2 p.m. to distribute the flowers.

RELIGION IN GERMANY

So far as the German empire as a whole is concerned, there is no state religion, each state being left free to maintain its own establishment. Thus, while the emperor, as King of Prussia, is head of the Prussian Evangelical Church, as German emperor he enjoys no such ecclesiastical headship. In the several states the relations of church and state differ fundamentally according as these states are Protestant or Catholic. According to the religious census of 1890 there were in Germany 35,231,104 Evangelical Protestants; 20,327,913 Roman Catholics; 6,472 Greek Orthodox; 203,678 Christians belonging to other confessions; 586,948 Jews; 11,597 members of other sects; and 5,938 unclassified. Almost two-thirds of the population belong to the Evangelical Church and rather more than a third to the Roman Catholic Church. The adherents of Protestantism are divided by their confessions into Reformed and Lutheran.

GUARD SHOT AT THREE TIMES

men living near by hastened over and found Moran lying on the track. He is understood to have told them that when he saw the man he called to him to halt, and the man replied that if he did not hold his tongue he would shoot his head off.

Moran insisted on knowing what he was doing there, and then the man shot at him three times. One of the bullets pierced his right lung. He was taken to St. Francis' hospital, but was found to be fatally injured, and steadily sank until death came at 5.30 o'clock.

Two Arrests Made.

He is said to have described his assailant as a tall, dark man, wearing a long overcoat. Moran was about 30 years old and a native of Ireland. He was unmarried and has no relatives in this country. The chief of police and members of the local volunteer company searched the surrounding country from 3 o'clock and two arrests were made. Mayor Marsh communicated with Ottawa, and Col. Sherwood sent Inspector Foster here, but it is likely the provincial authorities will be asked to take the matter up at once.

"THE TEA SITUATION"

The "Canadian Grocer" says:

"TEA — The reported lifting of the Old Country embargo on tea is the chief feature in this market. While this has created an easier feeling here, yet it should be remembered that this tea in London, England, will not arrive for four or five weeks, at least. From a week ago the situation in package teas remains same generally as week ago, except that the Salada Tea Co. have dropped prices five cents per pound.

"Tea men state that no auctions are being held in Colombo or Calcutta, and no tea is going forward to London. It is stated that there are only seventy million pounds of tea in England, which is only enough to last six weeks. If no new tea comes forward in the meantime the embargo might be replaced at any time, it is thought."

HERE'S SOME VERY GOOD ADVICE

For One Thing Don't Argue About the War

New York, Aug. 31.—"Don't argue about the war," says a health bulletin issued for members by Dr. Louis R. Welzmiller, physical director, of the West Side. The health bulletin says:

"'The terrible conflict in Europe is bound to have its effect on the people of this country, and it is being felt with particular keenness by residents of New York because there are so many of us of so many different feelings all crowded into the one city.

"For your own health's sake and your own peace of mind—

"Don't argue about the war. Every man has a right to his own thoughts on the subject, and it will only make you nervous and fretful to get into an argument. It's foolish to lost your temper and become irritable, and besides it spoils your efficiency.

"'Don't fret about the increased cost of living. It won't help any to worry. A little thinking will show ways of economy that won't hurt you any and will help you to overcome the rising prices.

"Don't neglect your health. Good health—steady nerves, penty of pure blood coursing through your veins, perfect digestion, hardened muscles—means a clear thinking brain and a spirit of cheerfulness. The healthy man is an optimistic man. Be optimistic by all means, and to this end take regular exercise, eat healthy food, breathe plenty of fresh air, get out into the sun as much as possible.

"Don't forget to pray. Pray that the war may soon end; pray that this country may in no way become involved, and thank God for the fact that you live in a land that has not gone war mad."

The work an unknown good man has done is like a vein of water flowing hidden underground, secretly making the ground green.—Carlyle.

THE PRESS ON THE WAR

The U. S. Must Stand Clear.
(Philadelphia Ledger.)

One point not to be forgotten is that eventually the United States must be the mediator. Through this nation the terms of peace will be made. Civilization for the time being is in our keeping. This, even more than our material interests, should impel us to keep a true neutrality and under no conditions become involved in the great conflict.

Enemies of Civilization.
(London Public Opinion.)

We shall just have to begin all over again and rebuild all that has been thrown down in the last terrible days. Less than fifty men have lain Europe in moral ruin. The Austrian emperor made the first move; the German emperor has swept the board; upon these two men lies the burden of the greatest crime ow modern Europe. They are enemies of civilization.

Strides Used by Soldiers.
(London Chronicle.)

Soldiers are marching across Europe, but they do not keep step. They vary both in the lengtht of the step and rapidity of their pace. The British infantry step 31½ inches, the longest of all steps. Germany keeps step with Switzerland; they each do 31 inches; while 29 inches is the pace in the armies of Italy, France and Austria. The Russians take the shortest step, 27½ inches, and only do 112 in a minute. The German infantrymen do 114, the Austrian 115, and the French and Italian each manage 120. Consequently to march a mile takes the Russian 20 minutes, the Austrian 18 2-3 minutes, the French and Italian 18 minutes, while the German could beat this by 10 or 11 seconds.

From the Unnamed Ship.
(London Chronicle.)

Letters are coming in from our fleet at sea to friends on land. But it is no ordinary postal service. No address is given, not even the name of the ship or the slightest indication of its whereabouts. The letters are addressed to the admiralty, and Whitehall distributes them duly. It will also deliver the replies under strictest censorship. To one of my friends—the mother of a young naval officer—came the cheerful letter from an unnamed ship in an unmentiontd place. He was quite happy, but for one thing. Would she send him a copy of Omar Khayyam?

A Real Emergency.
(Winnipeg Telegram.)

A New York woman who required seven trunks to carry what she considered necessary for a trip to Europe, has arrived home with a handkerchief and a bottle of smelling salts. Her idea of what is "necessary" has undergone some revision.

Wreck of Civilization.
Lloyd's, London.)

Europe has embarked upon a struggle so terrible that the imagination reels in the effort to think of the horrors it must bring in its train. It is a war that may well involve the wreck of modern civilization and the collapse of the very foundations of ordered society as we know it to-day.

Whom the Gods Would Destroy.
(New York Independent.)

Ancient history closed at midnight of July 31, 1914. The monstrous war with which modern history begins will end, as the big and little wars of the old days did. This is hard to realize now, but the sooner those men upon whom will fall the duty of shaping a new order of things begin to think about their problem, the better it will be for all concerned.

There will be some accounts to be settled after peace is declared, and the biggest one will be that which Enlightenment has against Mediaevalism.

Whatever causes of strife may have been lurking in the minds of the peoples of Europe, they would not have massed and exploded in this demoniac war without the agency of the Head Devils. Race differences there are. Conflicting national interests there are. The growth of populations already dense, and looking for new opportunities for enterprise and livelihood, has been disturbing economic equilibrium. Religous antagonisms have fostered hatred. But none of these things by itself, nor all of them in combination, would have made war if the consuming vanity, the monstrous egotism, and the mediaeval-mindedness of the absolute monarchs had not been thrown into the scale.

Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad. Mad with the lust of power, drunk with their own egotism, the Head Devils have signed their own doom.

CORRESPONDENT SAYS FAMILIES ARE IN WANT

The Bread Winner Has Gone to the Front

ACTION IS NEEDED

Editor Review:

Sir,—The ladies of this city have undertaken to administer the funds contributed for the support of the wives and children of the volunteers. When they left our city, these men were assured that their wives and little ones would be provided for. Funds were raised for that purpose. The point I am getting at is that some of these women and children are not being looked after. They are in want. I was spoken to this morning by the wife of one of our volunteers. She is a respectable Englishwoman. Her case, as she explained it to me, is just this: She and her three children have nothing in the house to eat, no money to get anything to eat. She had no idea who to go and see, did not know who was administering the funds, and her three children and herself had nothing to eat. Now, promising the men to look after their wives and children is a good thing, and no doubt that promise is being kept as far as they know of suitable cases. But right here is a woman and three children, the husband away with the volunteers, and they in need of food and not knowing where to get it or whom to apply to for help. In the same house as this woman is another, also the wife of a volunteer. She also has three children, and they, too, are in need, urgent need, of food. This should not be. Cannot some plan be devised so that those in need and those who wish to supply that need can know each other? Every wife of our volunteers should know who to apply to in order to make her need known and be relieved. These women and children need food. How are they to know how to get it?

INCREASES IN TOBACCO PRICES IN-EFFECT TODAY

The first increase in the price of tobacco came into effect to-day. McDonald's, Briar, Prince of Wales and Napoleon now sells for two plugs for 25 cents instead of 10 cents per plug. All tinned goods have gone up five cents per tin. Ten cent domestic cigars sell for 3 for 25 cents, while staple five cent cigars sell for five cents straght. All cut tobacco remains the same, but the size of the package will be cut down. The retail dealers have to stand the increase in the wholesale price of cigarettes, as the increase in the wholesale price has not been enough to warrant raising the retail price.

HERE AND THERE

PATRIOTIC FUND UNDERWAY CITIZENS MAKE DONATIONS

Not Known Yet How Much the Council Can Spare

A Patriotic Fund for the relief of those dependent upon the soldiers of Peterboro, who have gone to fight the cause of the British is now a reality. Two or three weeks have been given to discussing the idea and at last night's meeting of the Council, His Worship the Mayor was authorized to form a committee whose duty it would be to continue this fund.

Mayor Buller in introducing the idea stated that many prominent citizent had approached him about the matter and in fact Mr. Meyers of the Peterboro Cereal has already offered to donate 300 bags of flour while Mr. B. F. Ackerman has donated $100. This Patriotic Fund has met with great success throughout the Dominion and it was more or less the duty of Peterboro to do something along the same lines. When he spoke to the men the morning of their departure he had assured them that should they be called upon to die for the Empire's cause the city would look after their dependents. He was sure that a good Christian city like Peterborough would not allow these families to suffer.

$3,000 Took Their Breath.

Alderman Stratton brought out the suggestion of allowing the ladies, who had been in charge of the hospital ship fund and had over $800 for the purpose of assisting the families of those at the front, to supply the clothing and the city take it upon itself to supply provisions, fuel and rent. Ald. Stratton paid tribute to the brave men who left this city and made a motion to the effect that each one of them receive $5.00 from the city and that the Council start the Patriotic Fund by donating $3,000 which would be supplemented by the grant from the government and the donations of citizens. Ald. Stratton's motion died a violent death when he couldn't obtain a seconder.

Not in Need of $5.

The Aldermen thought that the men at the front had no need of $5 and as for donating the $3,000 to the Patriotic Fund it was the general opinion that that matter had best be left in the hands of finance committee. Ald. Anderson suggested a grant of $500 for the present but it was decided that the finance committee discuss the matter and report later on how much could be given to that fund.

Lengthy discussion was given the advisability of having two funds, during which Adjutant McElhiney who was in the gallery, was requested to give his opinions. He informed the members of the council that the families of the soldiers did not like to take charity. His suggestion was to have a Patriotic Fund for the relief of these families and allow the other charity to be handled in the usual way, viz., the Charity Board. The meeting finally decided to act in accordance with the suggestion.

All donations to the Patriotic Fund will, until further notice be received by Mayor Buller.

Any family or dependents of volunteers wishing assistance will for the present apply to Mrs. E. B. Clegg.

A letter was read from Mayor Hocken of Toronto inviting His Worship and other representatives of the city to the provincial meeting in the City Hall of the Queen City today when ways and means of overcoming the present industrial depression in Ontario will be discussed and probably acted upon. Mayor Buller and Ald. Stratton were the men appointed to represent the city.

57th REGIMENT

Headquarters, Peterborough,
September 1st, 1914.

Orders by the Officer commanding 57th Regiment, Peterborough Rangers,

1. The Regiment will parade in drill order at the Armouries at 8.00 p.m. on Thursday, September 3rd, 1914, and until further orders at the same place and hour on each subsequent Tuesday and Thursday.
2. Every Officer, N.C.O., and man must parade with his respective company and officers will see that every man is duly warned to turn out.
3. Recruiting will be carried on at the Armouries every week day at 8.00 p.m. until the Regiment is recruited to its full strength.
4. All members of the regiment who have not yet completed their rifle practice must do so at the earliest moment in order that the pay sheets may be completed and forwarded to headquarters.

D. WALKER,
Major Adjt.

APPLICATIONS WERE RECEIVED

Last night several applications were received at the armouries from motor car drivers, artificers and cleaners for the army service corps overseas service. To-night the medical officers will continue the examinations of additional applicants for this service.

THE LADIES AND THE WAR FUND

Much has been said regarding the situation in which the wives and families of the volunteers find themselves. Frequently letters have appeared in the press, and it would appear that certain persons are under the impression that those left behind by the volunteers have received little or no consideration.

But such, The Review is informed, is not the case. In the first place, those who were dependent on the men who volunteered for active service have been visited by a committee of ladies and gentlemen. The situation is shown and each case is receiving attention. In the second place, the Relief Officer has been instructed by the Mayor to give aid where needed, and altogether every effort has been made to do what was possible to be done.

Other questions have come up, and it would appear that the solution rests with the City Council. But in the meantime, the ladies who inaugurated the war fund, have been doing excellent missionary work, and we venture to say that if, as a correspondent stated in yesterday's issue of The Review, there are families of volunteers who are without food, it is not because of lack of action on the part of those who are in charge of the war fund.

FOUR BATTALIONS TO BE ADDED TO CANADIAN FORCE

Col. Hughes at Valcartier Addressing Officers Says Strength Will be Raised to Sixteen Battalions Instead of Twelve—Only 22,000 of Them Will be Sent to Europe Just Now.

Part of Force Will be Used to Garrison Bermuda and Other Points.

VALCARTIER CAMP, Que., Sept. 1. — From his charger, Col. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, addressed about 1,000 officers of the mobilization camp yesterday afternoon. The officers formed three sides of a hollow square northwest of the headquarters, and from an elevated position the Minister told them of some of the plans of the Government in connection with the first contingent and other contingents that may be formed. He said that there were now over 29,000 soldiers encamped, and only about 22,000 would comprise the first division. If they could not go at once they must not be altogether disappointed. There would be use for them, and they would all have their chance some time.

He stated that a part of the Canadian force would be used to garrison Bermuda and other places, and other regiments would be used in Canada as line of communication or to act as protective force here. Col. Williams, camp commandant, had been authorised to raise sixteen battalions instead of twelve, because of the great number of volunteers. He said that the present 29,000 men in camp were the best ever gathered in Canada. They had to get down to serious business and learn to shoot straight.

"I can excuse a man for almost anything if he can pick his man," said the colonel.

"Incompetent officers are worse than baggage, because they must be fed," he concluded.

The arrivals in camp yesterday were as follows: 6th Regt., Vancouver, 252; 6th Field Company Engineers, Vancouver, 124; 19th Company, C. A. S. C., 105; 103rd Regt., Calgary, 512; other Calgary men, 10.

Five hundred Edmonton men arrived late last night and remained in the cars until the morning.

An official statement was given out by Col. Williams, camp commandant, last night, that the entire camp was being organized into four brigades, instead of three. Up to the present there have been twelve battalions; but, as Col. Hughes announced in his speech to the officers in the afternoon, four additional battalions are to be formed. This means the appointment of four battalion commanders and another brigadier, the present brigadier commanders being Col. Turner, V.C., D.S.O., and Lt.-Col. Mercer and Lt.-Col. Ruttan.

Two men entered camp last evening without permits. They turned out to be whisky runners and were promptly placed under arrest and will be dealt with by the authorities today.

Militia Will Be Mobilized.

OTTAWA, Sept. 1. — Probably all of the Canadian militia, but certainly the greater portion of it will shortly be mobilized. This was the statement made at the Militia Department yesterday.

The object of the Department is twofold—to drill the militia and to increase the efficiency of the force in case it is required, also to stimulate recruiting.

There are many more officers at Valcartier than are required, but it is probable that many of the officers will go as privates. Many officers did so when the Canadian contingent went to South Africa.

HAS CENSORSHIP BEEN LIGHTENED

New York Reports Say Action Has Been Taken

Canadian Press Despatch.

New York, Sept. 1.—The Wall Street Journal publishes the following on its news tickers :—

London. — The censorship was suddenly lightened at noon without warning. Numerous despatches relating to the operations in France and Belgium were held up by the Government's orders. The foregoing despatch is highly significant. Operations in Belgium may relate to a rear attack on the Germans by British troops reported to have landed at Ostend.

AUSTRIANS DEFEATED

Russians Said to Have Inflicted Loss of 20,000

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Sept. 1.—A despatch to the Daily News from Rome declares that news has been received there from Bucharest, Roumania, setting forth that the Russians have inflicted a crushing defeat on the Austrians in Galicia.

They inflicted a loss on 20,000 on their enemy, who sought to cross the Vistula.

LONDON, Sept. 1. — A despatch from Rome says:

The Messagero publishes a telegram from Sofia, Bulgaria, which says the Austrians have suffered an irreparable defeat a Zamose, in Russian Poland, fifty miles southeast of Lublin.

The London News has the following from St. Petersburg: The Russian advance in all the theatres of operation continues successfully. Encounters are reported in several places, but the heaviest fighting occurred in southern East Prussia and eastern Galicia.

In East Prussia the German troops, after the defeat at Gumbinnen, joined the troops opposing the Russian army advancing from the south on the line of Neidenburg, Ortelsburg, Johannesburg, and were driven back The Germans attempted to defend the line of Soldau-Allenstein-Bischofsburg, but after very fierce fighting on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, were forced to abandon their positions, the Russians occupying the garrison town of Allenstein.

The German losses were very heavy, particularly in the village of Muhlen, between Neidenburg and Osterode.

There was panic in Danzig, large numbers of the population fleeing to Berlin, the remainder assisting in strengthening the fortifications. Part of the Russian army occupied crossings of the River Alle, driving the advanced detachments of the garrison back on Koenigsburg, a very strong fortress consisting of twelve large and eight smaller forts, connected by an excellent protected causeway. The siege of such a strong fortress, which has uninterrupted sea communications, which be a long and arduous task, necessitating the use of a very large number of troops.

FRENCH AND GERMANS SEEK TO CELEBRATE SEDAN ANNIVERSARY

French Hopes to Avenge Defeat of Forty Years Ago — Germans Have Gained Ground on French Left Wing But Anglo-French Line is Unbroken After Three Days Fighting

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Sept. 1.—To-day, on the eve of the anniversary of the capitulation of Sedan, three million troops are battling on the French frontier—the Germans in a headlong effort to celebrate the day with dramatic success; the French, backed by their British allies, to avenge their defeat of 44 years ago. That the Germans have gained ground in their encircling movement on the French left wing is admitted by the French foreign office, but it also is asserted that after three days' battle in this region the Anglo-French line, although pushed back, still remains unbroken.

This is described as a "wearing down" policy on the part of the allied armies, and it is claimed the losses of the attacking forces have been enormously greater than have those of the defenders.

French reports alone thus far are available, and nothing is reaching the public in London to enable even admitted experts to form opinions of their real value. The heaviest fighting appears to be taking place along the line from Peronne, in the department of Somme, to Tovervins, in the department of Aisne, and there the flower of Emperor William's army is trying to pierce the British defence. Further to the east, forces of the German crown prince still are attacking the French in the region about Mezieres, the capital of the department of Ardennes. The only points where the French claim to have gained positive successes are in the Vosges mountains and in Lorraine, where the Germans are said to be in retreat.

The statement that Emperor William has gone to the Russian front cannot be confirmed. Independent views of the fierce fighting now going on in East Prussia and Galicia are entirely lacking, so it is a case of one taking his choice between German, Austrian and Russian versions of the battles.

GREAT ALARM FELT IN BERLIN AT APPROACH OF RUSSIAN FORCES

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Sept. 1.—A correspondent of the Express, telegraphing from The Hague, says: "There is the greatest alarm in Berlin over the advance of the Russian troops. The news that the emperor has left his western headquarters and moved to the Russian front, has shown residents of the capital where the immediate peril to their safety lies.

"A story has been circulated that the Russians are preparing to avenge Louvain by treating the city of Berlin in the same way as the Germans treated that city. Many of the populace who can get away are going to Norway, Denmark and Switzerland."

London, Sept. 1.—A despatch to the Reuter Telegram Co. from Antwerp gives the latest official communication issued there. It says: "The situation throughout the country is stationary. The Germans have evacuated Aerschot and railway communication has been restored over the greater part of the Campine country. Malines was bombarded for an hour, although the town was not occupied by Belgian troops. This was a fresh crime against a civil population."

London, Sept. 1.—"The Anglo-French army corps have had to give ground, but nowhere have they been broken through," is the statement given ou at the French embassy in London to-day. This announcement is a summary of that part of the official communication of the French war office referring to the German attack on the French left wing, made public in Paris last night.

London, Sept. 1.—A despatch to the Times from St. Petersburg says: "According to Russko Slovo, the losses suffered by the Austrians in their desperate attempt to strike at the vitals of the Russian position in Poland aggregate tens of thousands of men, including the sixth Austrian corps, which on its retreat was almost annihilated."

Paris, Sept. 1.—Military experts say the position of the allied armies is good. The Germans are attempting a movement which, if it fails, will leave them in a dangerous position, with the troops exhausted. They say the British army, fresh and rested, is about to attack the extreme German right and to support the French, who have been slowly retiring for several days.

Washington, Sept. 1.—Despatches received in Rome from Berlin announce the mobilization of the Turkish army, which, under the advice of the German officers, will be composed of 200,000 men, all Mohammedans. Seventy-two German officers, forming the German military mission at Constantinople, have been incorporated in the Turkish army, which is interpreted to mean that Turkey will side with Germany. The Turkish ambassador here, however, doubts this information.

Paris, Sept. 1.—Official announcement was made this afternoon to the effect that the minister of war has decided to call out all reservists in the country who have not been previously summoned to the colors.

MANY AEROPLANES ARE TO BE SEEN

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Sept. 1.—A Times despatch from Paris speaking of the fighting in the north says, "Throughout the fighting of the last few days, swarms of aeroplanes have circled in the sky.

NEARLY $300 USED BY CHARITY BOARD IN LAST MONTH

The charity board in regular session last evening reported having used $287.98 during the past month, and the total amount thus far for 1914 reaches $3,350.90.

The only other item of business was the adoption of a motion to transfer the account from the Bank of Toronto to the Bank of Montreal.

THE RED CROSS

The Red Cross committee desire to acknowledge the following donations: Flannelette and cheese cloth, Mrs. Ryerson Ritchie; flannelette, Mrs. A. J. Grant; pillows, Mrs. John McPherson; blankets, Misses Dickson; cheque for $15, A. W. Cressman; cash collected by Mrs. F. L. Roy, $4.50.

The committee desire to send the box of hospital supplies not later than September 8. Contributions of money will be received by Mrs. F. L. Roy, treasurer, and supplies may be sent to the Y.W.C.A.

The following articles are most desired: Sheets, cotton or flannelette, pillows, 16 in. by 24 in.; pillow cases and cheese cloth, Baldwin fingering wool.

Further information may be had from the following committee officers: Mrs. J. C. Davidson, convener, Mrs. F. L. Roy, treasurer, and Miss Laura J. Davidson, secretary.

BATTLE BETWEEN MEUSE AND RETHEL IN BALANCE

French War Office Says German Advance is Being Stubbornly Resisted Between Verdun and Mezieres—Progress of German Right Wing Forces Allies to Drop Back—Victory at River Oise.

PARIS, Sept. 1.—The following official statement was issued by the War Office last evening:

"The situation, in general, is actually as follows:

"First, in Vosges and in Lorraine, it must be remembered, our forces, which had taken the offensive at the beginning of the operations and driven the enemy outside of our frontiers, afterwards underwent serious checks. Before Sarreburg and in the region of Morhagne, where they encountered very solid defensive works, our forces were obliged to fall back, and to reform, one on Courenne de Nancy and the other on the French Vosges.

"The Germans then assumed the offensive, but our troops, after having thrown them back upon their positions, resumed the offensive two days ago. This attack continues to make progress, although slowly. It is a veritable war of sieges, as each position occupied is immediately fortified.

"This explains the slowness of our advance, which is, nevertheless, characterized each day by fresh local successes.

"Second, in the region of Nancy and southern Woevre, since the beginning of the campaign this section between Metz on the German side and Toul and Verdun on the French side has not been the theatre of important operations.

"Third — In the direction of the Meuse between Verdun and Mezieres, it will be remembered that the French forces took the offensive in the beginning towards Longwy, Neufchateau and Paliseul. The troops operating in the region of Spincourt and Longuyon have been able to check the enemy's army under the command of the German Crown Prince.

"In the regions of Neufchateau and Paliseul, on the other band, certain of our troops have received partial checks, which obliged them to retire upon the Meuse without having their organization broken up. This retiring movement has compelled the forces operating in the neighborhood of Spincourt to withdraw also towards the Meuse.

"During the last few days the enemy has endeavored to spread out from the Meuse with considerable forces, but by a vigorous counter-offensive they were repelled with very great losses. In the meantime fresh forces of Germans advanced to the district of Rocroy, in the Ardennes, marching in the direction of Rethel. Now a general action is taking place between the Meuse and Rethel, and it is still impossible to see definitely the issue of this.

"Fourth—Operations in the north: The French and British forces originally took up positions in the Dinant and Charleroi country and at Mons. They endured several repulses, and the forcing of the Meuse by the Germans near Givet, upon our flank, compelled our troops to retire.

"The Germans seek continually to move toward the west. It was under these conditions that our British allies, attacked by the enemy in greatly superior numbers in the region of Lecateau and Cambrai, have withdrawn toward the south at the moment that our forces were operating in the district of Avesnes and Chimay. The retiring movement was prolonged during several days.

"In the meantime a general battle took place in the region of St. Quentin and Vervins, and at the same time in the Hams-Peronnes district. This battle was marked by an important success by our right, where we have thrown back the Prussian guard and the Tenth Army Corps into the Oise.

"Owing to the progress of the German right wing, where our adversaries have united their best corps, we have had to make a new retirement.

"On our right, after partial checks, we have taken the offensive and the enemy is retiring before us.

"In the centre we have had alternative checks and successes, but a general action is now being fought.

"On our left, by a series of circumstances which turned in favor of the Germans, and despite plucky counter-attacks, the Anglo-French forces were obliged to give way. As yet our armies, notwithstanding a few incontestable checks, remain intact. The morale of our troops is excellent, in spite of considerable losses, which also are being rapidly filled from regimental depots."

TROOPS LANDED AT OSTEND AND ARE MARCHED SOUTH

Large Force, Probably British, Has Been Put Ashore and More Are Expected—Intention Believed to be to Attack Germans Through Belgium.

ANTWERP, Sept. 1.—The allies it is reported here, are about to attack the Germans in the rear through Belgium. It is said troops in large numbers, most probably British, were landed at Ostend throughout the night. On forming in regiments, they marched through Ostend in a southerly direction.

The last of the troops, it is added, were ashore at four o'clock yesterday morning. A number of British transports were reported off Ostend yesterday and this may mean that more troops came ashore last night. The landing places and vicinity are closely guarded.

It is reported here that Gen. Pau has won a brilliant victory over 50,000 Germans near Peronnes, in the department of Somme.

The enemy has abandoned the region of Merchmontem and Vilvourden, also the Huydenburg, Tremelon and Haecht provinces.

At Aerschot the Germans are constructing entrenchments, which appear to represent a position for falling back upon.

Yesterday afternoon violent cannonading was heard nine miles south of Antwerp.

Aerschot is twenty-four miles to the northeast of Brussels. Merchmontem, Vilvourden and Haecht lie between Antwerp and Brussels.

"Dead" Bomb Dropped at Paris.

PARIS, Sept. 1. — A German biplane passed over Paris at 4.30 p.m. yesterday and dropped a projectile, which, however, did not explode.

A RECKLESS MARKSMAN NEAR C.P.R. BRIDGE

Bullet Struck Girder Near Where Guard Stood

Edward Keating, one of the guards on the C.P.R. bridge, finds himself in a very awkward position today. about 10 o'clock this morning the report of a rifle was heard in the vicinity of "Chip" Island. Simultaneously there was a dull thud against the iron girder and a splash in the water as though it was the lead from the cartridge. Now right above where the supposed lead hit, stood the guard and O. Huhel, bridge inspector for the C.P.R. There were four or five other men around who distinctly heard the shot. Two of the men in the group rushed up along the bank by Engleburn but failed to find any trace of the man with the gun. This little incident has caused quite a stir of excitement amongst the guards. And the fact that there were three guards killed last week doing similar duty, makes the local boy a trifle uneasy.

WHAT THE GOVERNMENT HAS DONE.

THE GLOBE of Monday, August 31st, in a very judicious and timely editorial on the duty of optimism, points out that the Dominion Government has done its share. The Goverment has put the money market in such shape by means of bold and confident financing, as to give the banks and industry no cause for holding back. The City Council is also adopting this policy, and will do public work now that would not be needed, to give employment to the unemployed when there is work for everybody at other vocations. The holders of money and municipal employers of labour should strain a point to the end that the revival of business shall find them well-prepared, working overtime in the prosperous times which are due to come immediately the war ends. The supply of waste will give work for years—ought now to be discounted by utilising the slackness of today.

ENCOURAGEMENT FROM VON JAGOW.

THE VERY FRANK STATEMENT of Herr Von Jagow, German Secretary of State, to Sir William Goschen, British Ambassador at Berlin, at the outbreak of war, says the Montreal Star, touching the purpose which induced Germany to violate the neutrality of Belgium, even at the heavy cost of bringing Britain into the fray, makes most interesting reading today, in the light of the events of the first weeks of the campaign; and shows how fatally far behind their plans the Germans are at this moment.

Herr Von Jagow said that the German Government was obliged to take this step—violate Belgian neutrality—because "they had to advance into France by the quickest and easiest way, so as to get well ahead with their operations and endeavour to strike some decisive blow as early as possible. It was a matter of life or death for them; as, if they had gone by the more southern route, they could not have hoped, in view of the paucity of roads and the strength of the fortresses, to have got through without formidable opposition, entailing great loss of time. The loss of time would mean time gained by the Russians for the bringing up of their troops to the German frontier. Rapidity of action was the great German asset, while that of Russia was the inexhaustible supply of troops."

That was very frank and very true. It was precisely in harmony with the tactics outlined in advance by General von Bernhardi in his amazing book, "Germany and the Next War."

Well, how has it come out? First, the Belgian route into France has been found to be neither quick nor easy. Liege took its place with the hero-cities of history. "In the annals of history, the Belgians," as Mr. Asquith said, "have won for themselves the immortal glory which belongs to a people who prefer freedom to ease and security, even to life itself." Consequently, in the second place, the Germans have not got "well ahead with their operations," and have not been able to "strike some decisive blow" at an early date. They have not been able to strike it yet.

If this is really "a matter of life or death for them," death must be on its way!

The "loss of time" has already been taken advantage of by the Russians, who have not only brought up their troops to the German frontier, but who have actually crossed that frontier, penetrated German territory and occupied German cities and fortifications and lines of communication. "Rapidity of action" which was to be "the great German asset," has been lost; but the great asset of Russia, which was to be "the inexhaustible supply of troops," still remains.

On the Jagow program, we are thus well ahead of the game.

BOOSTING FOOD STUFFS PRICES.

THE CLAIM of justification for boosting the prices of food stuffs in Canada, because Europe is at war, does not hold water. The fact that there are millions of men under arms and fighting today does not mean that there are more people to feed—on the contrary, if all reports of the awful results of the battles to date are authentic, there will be fewer mouths by many hundreds of thousands to fill in the near future. There is today, in the European countries engaged in war, as much wheat, meat, live stock, and other necessaries as a year ago. There are, as a matter of fact, fewer people to eat them.

Next year, no doubt, crops will suffer, and so will the production of food stuffs to a certain degree, in general, unless peace is declared before then. But to raise prices now is simply a hold-up of the people and a matter that deserves the strictest enquiry and a drastic method of preventing.

In the meantime, so far as Canada is concerned, it is our duty to prepare for the scarcity that may hit the country a year hence, and to this end every possible means of intelligent conservation should be employed. The farmers and producers, by acting now, can make certain that no matter what happens in the future, prices can be maintained at the normal.

Reaping What She Sowed.

London Daily Mail.

"The hour has arrived when, in the words of one of the noblest patriots, "we must make ourselves familiar with the thought of every kind of sacrifice and of death." A prolonged and bitter struggle is before us. But our cause is just; we are fighting for the smaller States of Europe as well as for the liberty of our own homes and to protect them against the lawless violence of that single Power which has in four days without cause attacked in succession five separate people.

A Prolonged and Bitter Struggle.

Springfield Republican.

The main opportunity for the delivery of foodstuffs to Germany will apparently lie through Holland, and for this reason, if for no other, the Germans may carefully refrain from violating Dutch neutrality as they did that of Belgium. To interfere with the delivery of foodstuffs consigned to merchants in Rotterdam, for example, would be more or less awkward, even though it might be assumed, with entire correctness, that such provisions would ultimately find their way across the Dutch border into Germany."

The Woman in Business.

National Monthly.

A blonde young woman walked into the bank in a most business-like fashion and presented a cheque payable to Annette H. Bennett to the cashier, who was a most polite young German. Upon examining the endorsement he noticed that it read Annette Bennett, and he handed it back to her very courteously, saying:

"You haf forgotten the 'H.'"

A single glance would tell the observer that she was unaccustomed to doing any banking business. She blushed furiously and in a confused way took the pen, murmuring: "Oh, pardon me," and wrote below the endorsement:

"Age, 24."

To a Bitter Finish.

(New York Evening Post.)

Those who at the beginning of hostilities believed that the war would be short—meaning thereby four or six months—had in mind what was supposed to be the German theory of it. This was a very rapid movement against France. If this succeeded, then terms of peace might soon be dictated in Paris. If it failed, then the cause of Germany would be hopeless; and in that event, too, the war would ere long be brought to a close. But, at present, it is pretty clear that this reasoning was faulty in both its branches. Granting that the German blows at France prove to be as staggering as they were in 1870, it is impossible to imagine the French throwing up the sponge. They might suffer terribly. Their military plight might become most cruel. Paris might be captured and all their northern territory overrun. Yet they would surely hold out, fighting desperately in retreat, and look to their English and Russian allies finally to turn the scale. We know what the French did in 1870, even without the hope of outside succor.

Actualities of Warfare.

(People's Journal.)

War is brutal. It is a butcher business. Every battle means a shamble, every death a shiver of pain and tear-sodden sorrow. The imaginative can picture the scene, the more simple have no idea of what battle means. War means death, disaster, privation, cruelty and grief. It is a bloodthirsty trade, but it is a necessary trade so long as nations remain as selfish as they are. The fool cries for war; the veteran never prays to unsheath his sword. He knows the terrible cost.

I am not theorising, for I have seen the horrors of it all. I have heard the plunk of the shell, the whistle of the bullet, and the after yell of death as a man tumbled to earth. I have seen the flower of an army slaughtered. I have wandered over a field of maimed and blood-covered heroes. This was in the American war, when I was but a simple and impressionable lad of fifteen. Till then I imagined war to be glory, chivalry and honor; now I realize that it is more ghastly than chivalrous.

In the final assault the veneer of civilization departs, and men are revealed as mad, as savage and as cruel as the pagan Goths who swallowed up Rome.

1870 AND 1914

(Boston Evening Transcript.)

The difference between the French of 1870 and the French of 1914 is evidenced by the precautions the Government is taking to have Paris victualled against the worst extremity. Paris in 1870 prepared for victory only, and when the news of Sedan came the Paris storehouses held only their normal supplies. Today apparently Paris is gathering in food and putting it in storage. If the French armies are victorious, the Paris stores may be safely depleted to replenish the field commissariat. On the other hand, if worst comes to worst, Paris can face a siege with little apprehension of being starved out. An investment of Paris today would be very different from that of forty years ago. Then the Paris defences ran so close to the city that German shells flew over them, to burst in the streets. Now the Paris defences sweep in a ring throughout its circumference is miles distant from the centre of population. They are strong at Versailles and St. Denis. At the former they are twelve miles from the Louvre. Paris is an immensely strong "fortified position," and it is estimated that a besieging army would have to be 390,000 strong even to complete a thin circle about the defences.

WISDOM OF FATHER

Brown, who lived in the suburbs, returned home late one evening with a package which he deposited on the dining room table. His wife, naturally curious, lost no time in starting to investigate.

"What have you been buying, Jimmy?" she asked, taking up the package and untying the string.

"A cornet," answered Jimmy. "I have been thinking for some time"—

"A cornet?" was the wondering interjection of the wife. "I thought you knew better than to buy a cornet! You know very well that the man next door worries you almost to death with his."

"Yes, I know," was the smiling response. "That is the one I bought."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Origin of Life.

The scientific world is not in possession of even one fact as to the origin of life nor of the origin of anything whatever. All animals now start from very minute bodies called cells. Each kind of animal has its own fixed kind of cell. One kind of cell never changes into another. But the origin of the cell for each kind of animal is totally unknown.—New York American.

STOREKEEPER DROWNED

CHATHAM, Sept. 1. — Samuel Brown, 26, a storekeeper of Mitchell's Bay, was drowned in Lake St. Clair while returning home from the Log Cabin Inn. A heavy sea was running and Brown was engaged in bailing out the launch. He lost his balance and fell into the water.

Cruiser Niobe Ready.

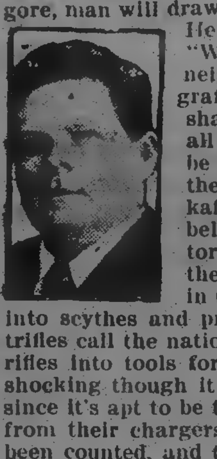
OTTAWA, Sept. 1.—The Canadian cruiser Niobe will leave the Halifax navy yards to-day. She is being placed under the control of the British Admiralty and will be used in the patrol service on the North Atlantic along with the other British cruisers.

Headlight Scared Wolves.

Mr. William Marshall, who has just returned to Sault Ste. Marie from a motor tour on Manitoulin Island, had a rather exciting experience with wolves in the course of his trip. He was going from Gore Bay to Little Current when four wolves suddenly appeared on the road. The strong headlight apparently dazzled them and the car ran over one wolf killing it while the others took to the bush. Wolves are not common on the island and these apparently came over on the ice from the north shore last winter.

THE BETTER DAY

By Walt Mason



When the world is sick of killing and the nations tired of gore, man will draw his daily shilling, as a butcher, never more. He'll get down to useful labor, softly saying, "Why the deuce should I shoot my next door neighbor, with no reason or excuse?" When this graft of wholesale murder, relic of dark days, shall cease, man will use his strength to further all the gentle arts of peace. Then disarmed will be the legions and the sun will smile at morn on the quiet, fertile regions where we'll raise our kaffir corn. Then the gun, which, like a crater, belches fire and fury now, will become a cultivator, or, perhaps, a three-horse plow. Captains then, who "give no quarter," kings with terror in their looks, shall convert the gun and mortar into scythes and pruning hooks. Then no more shall foolish trifles call the nations into fray, and we'll turn our quick-firing rifles into tools for pitching hay. So this present cataclysm, shocking though it be, and vast, we may view with optimism, since it's apt to be the last. When the soldiers have dismounted from their chargers, scarred and thin, when the corpses have been counted, and the blood has measured been, drums of war will throb no longer, flags of battle will be furled, and the weaker and the stronger hand in hand will walk the world.

Where the Beer Was Kept.

Some very funny hiding places have been found by the provincial police in Northern Ontario for the "booze caches" of "blind piggers," but Provincial Constable R. J. Stallwood of Gowganda, has just had one of the cleverest concealment revealed to him.

When Superintendent Rogers of the provincial police was in Gowganda a little while ago, he issued orders that a man who was suspected must be apprehended. As it was useless to try the "spotter" method, Stallwood learned that the man always went out the back door for the liquor. On a recent Wednesday night the constable concealed himself in the rear of the shanty and waited for him to come out. The night passed off, and one after another of the early hours came and went, leaving the officer shivering, but still determined to finish his work. At a late hour in the morning the "blind pigger" issued from the back door, and going to the rain barrel lifted out a bottle.

Stallwood sprang out of the thicket in which he had been hiding and arrested the man. The next day in court he was fined $200 and costs.

Ninepin Oratory.

Dr. Michael Clark, M.P., the famous free-trade orator from Red Deer, Alta., is naturally a bit of a critic when it comes to speeches. Not a harsh critic, but a pithy one.

Last session of Parliament one of the Cabinet Ministers made a speech on the C. N. R. which caused some discussion in the lobbies. The general verdict was that it began and ended lamely, but that it contained a lot of good material. Dr. Clark was pacing the corridor, thumbs in arm-holes, a characteristic pose, when an Ottawa correspondent approached him on the subject of the Hon. Mr. ——— philippic.

"My opinion of it?" said the doctor. "Why, ninepins."

"Ninepins?" said the bewildered journalist.

"Why, yes," said the Doctor. "Thin at both ends and fat in the middle."

ON THE OVERLAND

He Changed His Mind

By WILLIAM MACLEOD RAINE

At Pasadena Ralston boarded the California Overland. He passed through the train to the Pullman and dropped into the seat which had been reserved for him by wire. A woman in half mourning occupied the section opposite. He could not see her face, but he divined from the outline of her figure that she was young and good looking.

Ralston, following her example, fell to an inattentive inspection of the scenery. They were being whirled through orange groves lined with ragged eucalyptus or graceful pepper trees.

But Ralston was restless, and the scenery failed to interest him, nor did the magazine into which he plunged prove of much more avail. At last he tossed it aside.

"YOU MUST NOT DO IT!"

"What rot the magazines sometimes print!" he said, unconsciously speaking aloud.

"I beg pardon. Did you speak?"

Even as he turned his head Ralston felt the thrill of vivid life rush through him. He had not heard that voice for five years, but he would have known it among ten thousand. The gray eyes met the brown ones.

"Kitty!"

"Robert!"

Then both together, "What are you doing away out here?"

He explained that he was on his way back from the Philippines, where he had been the correspondent of an illustrated weekly. She, it appeared, was returning to the east from a visit to an aunt in Los Angeles. For an hour they talked of the people and the places they had known. He studied her covertly.

"Let me see—it must be four years since I saw you last."

"Five. Have I changed much?"

"No. I can't say that you have. People don't change much, as a rule; they merely develop. You were only a girl when I left. Of course it was open to you to develop in any one of several ways, but I can look back and see that you are what one might have logically expected you to become."

"Dear me, is it as bad as that?" she said lightly.

"As good, I should call it," he answered gravely. She shot a quick sidelong glance at him. "Often out in the Philippines when I was lying in the night, looking up at the stars in the sky and trying to find the softest spot of a cavalry saddle for a pillow, I have wondered what you would be like when I met you again. Marriage often changes a woman so completely."

"I thought you said that people don't change; that they only develop."

"I'll modify it, then. Marriage sometimes changes a woman completely, for better or worse."

There is no place like an overland train for quick friendships, unless it may be an ocean liner. Casual acquaintances of many years' standing become intimate in a day. Long before the train had reached Albuquerque Ralston was wondering whether his boyhood's love was to devour him again. Kate was free; her husband had been dead three years, and her old charm appealed to him as subtly as ever. He wished the journey would never end.

Kate noticed that he began to grow nervous; his eyes were shining with a steady glow that frightened her. Once he took out his watch, and she heard him say softly under his breath, "Twelve hours more!" She knew that at La Junta he would change for Denver, and she felt an impending crisis approaching. But her feeling was all of joy—a joy so fierce and poignant that it was scarce akin to happiness.

She had married a man who had not loved her and whom she had not loved. They had been friends and nothing more. Now this young man's wild passion found ready echo in her love starved heart. Always she had loved him, though never till this day had she admitted it to herself.

The porter came round to make up the berths. They moved to an adjoining section and forgot the passing hours—forgot everything except each other's presence. More than one passenger watched them curiously and wondered what fascinating topic held them in such rapt interest. The last lingerer from the smoking section had long since retired before they took any cognizance of time. At last he looked at his watch absently. He was startled to see that it was past 1 o'clock.

"It must be late," she said, noting for the first time that the lights were low and that they were alone.

"No; it's early," he replied unblushingly. "Don't go yet. You'll have plenty of time to sleep after I leave you."

She stayed, against her judgment. She told herself that she would leave him in a few minutes. He had not mentioned love, but she felt the strong undertow of it through all his turbid speech. When at last she broke away from him it was to lie the night through in vivid wakefulness.

For Ralston the night was filled with the stress of emotion. The one woman in the world for him was in the section across the aisle, and he had to face the fact that he was bound to another. Two years before, in that utter loneliness of soul that comes to men in exile, he had met Major Remington's daughter and had asked her to marry him. She had neither accepted nor rejected him, but when she left for the States three months later there had been an understanding between them that he was to seek her out and renew his suit when he came back to America. He had been detained in the Philippines longer than he had expected, but he was now on his way to her.

They were both up early from a sleepless night, and they drifted together again inevitably.

Presently they were climbing the mountain side, with two engines in front and another behind to push. The woman could see the burning misery in the man's eyes, and from him to her there passed the subtle sense of some alien force which divided them.

"You are not married?" she asked him suddenly.

"No, I am not—married."

"You mean that"—

A reckless bitterness welled up in him. "You may congratulate me. I am probably on my way to be married."

Her level eyes fixed him. They were both very white.

"Probably, you say. Don't you know?"

"There was a provisional engagement. It was understood that I was to offer myself again when I returned."

"And you do not love her? So much your tone implies."

"I never loved but the one woman. I have played at love with others."

She shivered. "It is horrible. You must not do that. You have no right!"

"Sometimes a man has signed away his right to do right," he answered steadily. "I thought it all out last night, and I shall live up to the letter of my agreement."

A brakeman passed through the car calling: "Next stop La Junta! Change cars for Pueblo, Denver, Colorado Springs and all points north of there!"

The train slackened speed, jarred down to a halt. He rose and looked down on her with dumb, anguished eyes. He did not kiss her; he did not even touch her hand.

"Whatever happens, I want you to remember that I never loved but the one woman."

She answered, "I shall remember, Robert."

Ralston swung from the car into a collision with Lieutenant Hasbrough of the Seventh infantry.

"I say, my man, be a little careful—well, where did you drop from, Ralston?

"Wasn't it at Samar I saw you last, or was it Talaco? You were doing a picture of a burning Gugu village. Hang it, but I'm glad to see you! Where you bound for—Denver? I just came down from there—been attending Nan Remington's wedding—'member her?—second daughter of Major Remington of Bell's brigade."

Ralston's pulse hammered. He gripped the lieutenant's arm with a clutch like steel. "Whose wedding did you say?" he demanded.

Hasbrough eyed him curiously, but charitably laid his excitement to a lingering touch of the island fever. Quietly he extricated his arm. "Miss Nan Remington—I say, Ralston, you needn't grow so enthusiastic. I'm not the groom."

"You're sure?"

"Sure I'm not the groom?" laughed the lad.

"No; sure of the wedding. There's no possibility of any mistake, is there?"

The lieutenant roared: "Mistake? I guess not! Why, hang it, I stood up with the man—Jenkins of the artillery. You must remember him."

Ralston climbed up the steps down which he had just come. The car conductor barred his way.

"This isn't the Denver train, sir. It's on the other track."

Ralston laughed happily. "Let it stay there. I'm not looking for it."

"Oh, I thought you said"— began the perplexed official.

"Said! Great streaks of thunder, a man's liable to say anything! There's no tariff on changing your mind since I left the country, is there? I'm going to Chicago."

And Ralston smilingly spun the conductor out of the way and re-entered Eden.

THE MARKETS

Latest Quotations in Grain, Dairy Products, Live Stock, etc.

CHICAGO, Aug. 31.—Wheat jumped rapidly higher today, influenced by signs that European need for supplies from this side of the Atlantic was becoming more acute. After a bulge that in some cases amounted to 5c a bushel, the market closed firm at a gain of 3⅜c to 4⅛c net. Corn finished ⅛c off to ⅛c up, oats with an advance of ⅜c to ⅞c, and provisions varying from 5c decline to a rise of 25c.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 31.—Wheat advanced sharply again today, the opening gain for October being 3⅛c; December 3⅛c, and May 3⅜c. There was no business in May, however. The bulk of pit trading was elevator company's hedging and some light speculative trade. Exporters were doing nothing. The advance was caused by higher American markets. Following the opening the range of prices was only ¼c to ⅜c on both months up to mid-day.

Oats opened ½c to ⅝c higher, flax 1⅛c higher, both becoming steady later at the advance. Flax, at the close, advanced substantially.

Wheat closed 3c to 3½c higher for the three months.

The cash demand was good for all grades of wheat and oats, but offerings were light. Farmers appear disposed to hold all for any advance that may come along. The advances of the morning were well maintained at closing.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 31.—A strong feeling still prevails in the local market for oats owing to the limited supply available on spot and prices have scored a further advance of 1c per bushel, but business has been done in new crop oats for shipment from Fort William at 7c to 8c per bushel less than spot prices. There was an increased demand for oats over the cable today and sales of No. 2 C.W. were made to London at 28s 3d to 29s per quarter. The flour market is active and firm. Demand for millfeed is good. The tone of the butter market is strong, but demand is rather quiet. Cheese was quiet today. Demand for eggs good at firm prices.

MINNEAPOLIS GRAIN MARKET.

MINNEAPOLIS, Aug. 31.—Wheat—Sept., $1.15; Dec., $1.17; No. 1 hard, $1.26; No. 1 northern, $1.17 to $1.23; No. 2 do., $1.13 to $1.21.

Corn—No. 3 yellow, 75c to 76c.

Oats—No. 3 white, 47¼c to 47⅝c.

Flour—Fancy patents, $6.40; first clears, $4.85; second clears, $3.40.

Bran—Unchanged.

DULUTH GRAIN MARKET.

DULUTH, Aug. 31.—Wheat—No. 1 hard, $1.21⅞; No. 1 northern, $1.20⅞; No. 2 do., $1.18⅞; Sept., $1.17⅞; Dec., $1.18.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, Aug. 31.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 176 cars, comprising 3247 cattle, 1813 hogs, 1550 sheep and lambs and 318 calves.

Butchers' Cattle.

Choice steers sold at $8.60 to $8.85; choice heifers, $8.25 to $8.45; loads of good, $8.25 to $8.50; medium, $7.50 to $7.75; common to medium, $7.25 to $7.50; inferior heifers, $6.50 to $7; choice cows, $6.75 to $7; good cows, $6.25 to $6.50; medium cows, $5.75 to $6; common cows, $3 to $4.50; choice bulls, $6.75 to $7.50; common bulls, $5 to $6.25.

Stockers and Feeders.

A very few lots were offered and sold at steady values. Choice steers, $7.20 to $7.50; medium steers at $6.75 to $7.25; stockers, $5.50 to $6.75.

Milkers and Springers.

Only a small number of milkers and springers were offered, and prices were practically unchanged, ranging from $50 to $90 each, and one extra quality cow at $100.

Veal Calves.

Receipts moderate and values practically unchanged. Choice veal calves $10 to $10.50; good, $8.50 to $9.50; medium, $7.50 to $8.50; common, $6.50 to $7.50; inferior at $5.50 to $6.50.

Sheep and Lambs.

The market for sheep held steady; ewes, $5.50 to $6.50; yearlings, $6.50 to $7; heavy ewes and rams, $4 to $5; lambs, $8 to $8.75, the bulk being reported at $8.50 to $8.60.

Hogs.

Selects fed and watered sold at $10.00 and $10.35 weighed off cars.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Aug. 31.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, west end market, the receipts of live stock for the week ended Aug. 29 were 2350 cattle, 2700 sheep and lambs, 1800 hogs and 1000 calves. The supply on the market for sale this morning consisted of 2000 cattle, 2200 sheep and lambs, 1300 hogs and 800 calves.

There was no actual change in the condition of the market for butchers' cattle today owing to the fact that the supply was ample to fill all requirements. A feature of the trade is the continued scarcity of well finished steers, for which there is always a good demand from the leading butchers. Demand for the best grades of cattle, however, was good, and an active trade was done at firm prices. A feature of the market continues to be the active demand from local packers and American buyers for canning stock.

The strong feeling that has characterized the hog market for the few weeks past still continues.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $8.75 to $9; do. medium, $7 to $8; do. common, $5.50 to $6.50; canners, $4 to $5.75; butchers' cattle, choice cows, $7.50 to $7.75; do. medium, $6.50 to $7; do. bulls, $6 to $7.75; milkers, choice, each, $80 to $85; do. common and medium, each, $70 to $75; springers, $55 to $65; sheep, ewes, $4.75 to $5; bucks and culls, $4.25 to $4.50; lambs, $8.50 to $9; hogs, off cars, $10.40; calves, $5 to $20.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

CHICAGO, Aug. 31.—Cattle—Receipts, 20,000; market, steady; beeves, $6.70 to $10.90; Texas steers, $6.35 to $9.35; stockers and feeders, $5.50 to $8.15; cows and heifers, $3.90 to $9.40; calves, $7.50 to $11.25.

Hogs—Receipts, 30,000; market, strong; light, $9 to $9.55; mixed, $8.80 to $9.52½; heavy, $8.65 to $9.45; rough, $8.65 to $8.80; pigs, $5.50 to $8.50; bulk of sales, $8.95 to $9.35.

Sheep—Receipts, 40,000; market, steady; native, $4.70 to $5.50; yearlings, $5.40 to $6.25; lambs, native, $5.75 to $7.75.

Notable South African Held.

LONDON, Sept. 1. — Sir James Sivewright, who has been prominent in the administration of the Cape Colony, has been arrested by the Germans at Nuremberg, where he was "taking the cure," and is now held a prisoner of war. The High Commissioner of the Union of South Africa in London has appealed to American Ambassador Gerard, in Berlin, to secure the release of Sir James.

NEWS NOTES FROM OMEMEE

Special Correspondence.

Omemee, Sept. 1.—Miss L. Laidley of Chicago is spending her holidays with her mother here.

T. W. McLean, former principal of the Public School here, and family left for Port Perry last Tuesday. Mr. McLean is to be congratulated on securing the principalship of such a fine school. He will be greatly missed in Omemee as a citizen actively interested in public enterprises. We wish him every success.

A quiet and pretty wedding ceremony was performed last Wednesday morning in the Methodist Church when Miss Winnifrid Beatty was joined in the holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. T. Earnest MacPherson, Rev. J. W. Dean officiating. The popular young couple evaded their friends by leaving at the junction. They are to spend their honeymoon in the United States going by way of Toronto.

Mr. Wesley Maunder of Lindsay was a visitor at Dr. Thompson's last week.

Mrs. Cronk of Regina is holidaying at her father's, Thos. Henderson's.

The Ladies' Aid of the Methodist Church held a picnic in Stephenson's grove last Thursday. A large number of the ladies were present and report a good time.

Wm. Thompson and family are holidaying with his parents here.

Mr. S. P. Mills has taken the contract for a new barn for Mr. Thos. Pogue. The barn is to be built after Mr. Mills' own plans and is known as a frameless barn. This will be the third barn of this pattern that Mr. Mills has built.

The town learned with regret on Friday morning of the death of Mrs. A. Grandy, widow of the late Ed. Grandy. Mrs. Grandy had a paralytic stroke on Thursday afternoon and passed away early Friday morning. The funeral took place on Saturday afternoon to St. James' cemetery, Cavan.

Rev. Rollins, of Peterborough, conducted service in the Presbyterian church here on Sunday last, in the morning and evening, and in Mount Pleasant in the afternoon.

Monday last saw the exodus of a large number of Sunday school teachers, who have been spending the summer holidays at their homes in and around Omemee. Among those who left were Mae Fee, Wm. J. O'Neill, Annie M. Shield, Lulu Bushnell, Nora Nichols and her sister, Jessie Nichols, Eveline Sandy and Victoria Wilson.

A large number of our local sports went down the river Monday afternoon, as well as quite a number of visitors from Toronto and Brampton. The visitors were, from Toronto, Chas. Kitt and W. Brether, and from Brampton W. J. Packham, G. W. Packham and C. J. Packham.

Several of the graduates of the high school here left Monday for Peterborough to attend Normal school. Among these were Jennie M. Smyth, who passed Normal entrance and matriculation with honors; Orman Poast and his sister, Carrie Poast, Miss Mary O'Connell, and Miss Eva Fee.

The teachers for the public school here arrived on Monday morning, Miss Smyth from North Bay and Mr. Cook from Burk's Falls.

Mr. Elgin Thompson, who got his second part of Normal entrance last year, has returned to take the first part. His many friends were glad to see him again.

Miss Morden and Miss Davidson returned Monday night to take up their duties in our high school for the ensuing year.

DEAD SOLDIER'S COMRADE ARRESTED

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 1.—Following the accidental fatal shooting of Pte. William Sergeant, 19th Regiment, on guard duty on Welland Canal Saturday night, an arrest has been made of the soldier in whose hand the revolver rested when discharged.

The prisoner is Pte. Shaw, Elm street, St. Catharines, Sergeant's closest friend, according to their tent comrades.

The two young soldiers had been fooling with two revolvers left in the tent and that held by Shaw is said to have been the one in which the empty chamber was found. Shaw is heart broken; the mother of the victim is seriously ill in the General and Marine Hospital.

HE TALKED TOO MUCH

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1. — The War Department will ask Dr. Louis L. Seaman, first lieutenant of the United States army, on the inactive list, to explain whether he made the adverse criticism of German army operations credited to him in press despatches. He cannot be court-martialled, but he can be dropped from the inactive list.

LOUVAIN'S RUIN IS CONFIRMED

LONDON, Sept. 1.—Arno Dosch, a magazine writer, arrived here yesterday and confirmed stories that Louvain, Belgium, set on fire by the Germans is now in a mass of ruins.

"Louvain is a pitiful ruin," he said, "I came through that city on my way out from Belgium and saw the smoking ruins. Only the big cathedral was visible above the smoke, and that may have gone later. The loss of the city is universally mourned in Belgium.

"I have no personal knowledge of the horrible atrocities reported from Belgium, and I am inclined to discredit most of the stories."

MONEY ORDERS TO RESUME.

Business With Britain Begins in a Few Days.

OTTAWA, Sept. 1. — The money order business between Canada and Great Britain will be resumed in a few days. It had been suspended because the rates of exchange went so high that the Postoffice Department was losing money on this business.

The old rate for a pound sterling was $4.87. A premium of 4 cents per pound or fraction of a pound will now be charged, and this premium will vary according as the rates of exchange are changed. The first change, therefore, for a one pound money order will be $4.91. No one person will be permitted to purchase money orders exceeding $100 on any one day. This is to prevent speculation in the exchange.

ATTACKED WOMAN IN HER ROOM

CHATHAM, Ont., Sept. 1. — Mrs. Arthur Smythe, Violet street, was attacked in her bed by a ruffian and was very badly bruised. She awoke early in the morning to find a man bending over her. When she tried to get up the intruder choked her and struck her several times and afterwards disappeared. She was taken to the hospital. Edwin Papke was arrested for the assault and was arraigned in the police court yesterday. None of the contents of the house was touched.

Good News For Von Tirpitz.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1.—Winston Churchill, First Lord of the British Admiralty, through the United States Embassy at London, yesterday requested the State Department to transmit the following message to Grand Admiral Von Tirpitz, of the German navy, through the American Ambassador at Berlin:

"Your son has been saved and has not been wounded."

Keep Your Temper.

Which of all the domestic virtues is most essential to a happy married life? The ability to keep one's temper, beyond all question.

There is nothing which lends more to misery, not only for its possessor, but also for those about him, than an ungovernable and unreasonable temper. No one is worse to live with than an ill tempered man, except perhaps an ill tempered woman.

Bad tempered people completely spoil the lives of those who associate with them. The feeling of strain is ever present. One never knows just when the storm will break, although apparently the weather, metaphorically, is "set fair." Life in these circumstances is a burden almost beyond bearing.

Ironical.

"Don't knock on the glass with your hand—you might hurt it. Use a sledgehammer." That's the ironic notice to be read on the window of a Bronx vermin exterminator's shop. Inside the window are three or four ferrets, trained to hunt rats. Before the shop owner put the sign on the window tapping on the glass to arouse the ferrets was one of the favorite sports of the neighborhood.

Overzealous.

If you have ever been annoyed by a too enterprising barber you will appreciate the little incident that left one of them rueful and crestfallen the other day.

Having shaved the customer, he ran his hand over the man's head and said insinuatingly:

"Have a hair trim to-day, sir?"

"Do you think I need it?"

"Yes; it looks pretty long."

"Well, how is the boss barber on hair trimming? Is he pretty good?"

"Yes; he's pretty good, all right. But why?"

"Well, he trimmed my hair yesterday."

TURKEY IS NOT WARLIKE

So Says Ambassador, But the Powers Are Dubious

LONDON, Sept. 1. — European statesmen are awaiting with the keenest anxiety the possible Turkish action. There are renewed indications that the Porte is preparing for action and taking sides with Germany. Foremost amongst the evidence cited is the report of great numbers of German officers and men passing to Turkey. If Turkey becomes engaged in the war it is wholly probable that Greece, too, will participate, as there is no doubt that Turkey's warlike operations will quickly turn against Greece, particularly in an effort to recover again the islands formerly Turkish but now Greek. At the Ottoman Embassy yesterday it was declared that Turkey has no intention whatever of going to war. The Embassy has already denied the reports that German officers are entering Turkey, as well as making the general statement that the Porte had no intention of participating, assurances of which, it is stated, have been given to Great Britain.

Waiting For Turkey.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1. — It became known here last night that Italy is holding back her assistance against Austria and Germany awaiting only the action of Turkey. As soon as the Ottoman Empire is precipitated into the trouble, not only Italy, but Greece will seize this opportunity to attack their ancient enemy as well as the remaining two of the triple alliance.

GERMAN TRAWLER SUNK.

British Cruiser Ordered Mine Layers Off Boat Then Rammed It.

LONDON, Sept. 1.—In confirmation of the story that mines have been laid in the North Sea by vessels disguised as neutral fishing boats, a woman who arrived at London from Bergen tells of the sinking of such a mine-layer by a British cruiser.

The ship upon which she was traveling found itself one morning close to a number of British cruisers, one of which had caught a German trawler flying the Norwegian flag and engaged in laying mines.

According to this woman the British commander gave the crew of the trawler three minutes in which to leave their vessel, and they came tumbling over the side of the passenger ship. Then first backing up a bit the cruiser rammed the offending trawler, and at the second attempt cut her in two and she went to the bottom.

Garrisoning Paris.

PARIS, Sept. 1. — All night long troops from the south and west of France have been arriving at the capital and proceeding by rail around the city to the locations in the encircling fortifications to which they have been assigned. There is great activity on the part of the municipal military administration in completing the details of the plans for the defence of Paris.

TORONTO "EX." OPENS.

Opening Day at Canadian National Draws a Good Crowd.

TORONTO, Sept. 1.—Shortly after two o'clock yesterday afternoon Sir John Gibson, Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, declared the Canadian National Exhibition open to the public, after a stirring, patriotic speech which frequently brought forth applause. He spoke of the manner in which the young men of Canada had responded to the call of the Empire in the hour of need.

Opening Day usually brings a crowd of invited guests, the number being in direct ratio with the importance of the guest of the occasion. This was not so yesterday, and there were several thousands making their way through the grounds and buildings before noon, and at 3 o'clock the numbers were rapidly increasing. Unfortunately, the shower, without which no Opening Day would be complete, kept some away, but even at that the attendance was encouraging.

Jap Destroyer Ashore.

TSINGTAU, Sept. 1.—A Japanese torpedo boat destroyer went ashore on Lientau Island during a fog on Sunday night. Yesterday the Tsingtau batteries attempted to shell the destroyer, but it was beyond their range. The German gunboat Jaguar steamed out of the harbor and fired eight shots into the stranded warship, and returned unmolested by other Japanese vessels that are blockading the port. The Jaguar reported that the crew had abandoned the destroyer.

Four Japanese destroyers and one cruiser now form the blockading squadron.

Aged Civil Servant Retires.

OTTAWA, Sept. 1.—William Fitzgerald, superintendent of insurance for nearly thirty years, has resigned, and his successor is Mr. George D. Finlayson, B.A., who has been acting superintendent for several months. He is an associate of the Institute of Actuaries of Great Britain and is highly qualified for his new position.

Mr. Fitzgerald is in his 76th year and his health has failed of late. He has been of great assistance to the Government in the framing of insurance legislation, as well as legislation affecting trust and loan companies.

Leipsig Capture Denied.

SEATTLE, Wash., Sept. 1. — The British cruiser Newcastle arrived at the British naval station at Esquimalt yesterday and entered the drydock. She was undamaged. The cruiser Rainbow, at sea, was reported yesterday as unmarked. The report of a naval fight in which the German cruiser Leipsig suffered is denied.

HARVEY COUNCIL

The Harvey Council met in the True Blue Hall, Buckhorn, on Saturday, Aug. 22nd, with all the members present and the reeve in the chair.

On motion of Wilson and Flynn the clerk was instructed to notify Chas. Kuger that complaints had been received by the council that he was keeping a gate locked on the road through Mr. Young's property, for which the council was paying the rent, and also that he had built a fence too close to the road at the jog on the 13th concession that he be therefore required to remove the said locks forthwith and also to remove his fence at the jog to the proper place.

Council also instructed the clerk to notify Chas. Kuger, that they were quite willing for him to clear up the con. line between cons. 13 and 14 opposite lots 20 so that he can build his fence and they also suggest that if he builds a wire fence in the proper place on the jog at con. 13 they will pay a bonus of 25c. a rod for the same.

A communication was received from the trustees of S.S. No. 1 asking the council to pay the moneys due above section from the township directly into the Bank at Bobcaygeon to the credit of the said section.

The clerk was instructed to write Thos. R. Hill and find out all particulars re lot 8, con. 2, and report at next meeting, also to write L. G. Tobert and state that as the Court of Revision was closed for this year they were unable to make any changes this year.

A by-law was introduced and passed levying rates and taxes for 1914. red Bennett and Albert Allen addressed the council re roads into their places. On motion of Graham and Allen the reeve and Mr. Flynn were appointed a committee to look up roads for Messrs. Bennett and Allen. Orders were drawn on the treasurer as follows:

John McIlmoyle, 17 rods wire fence	$ 4.25
A. G. Shearer, 28 loads gravel	1.40
Hugh Givens, com'r	100.00

RENTING ROOMS
The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

GERMAN SOLDIER FORESAW NEAR DEFEAT AHEAD FOR HIS COUNTRY IN GENERAL EUROPEAN CONFLICT

Von Bernhardi in Book Written in 1911 Saw England's Fleet Striking With Overwhelming Strength—And Also Army of Germany With Only Moderate Help From Austria Outnumbered by Armies of France and Russia—"World Power or Downfall" Must be the Cry.

Three years ago a book published in Germany predicted what has just taken place in Europe. Even then the author regarded the general European war as a certainty o' the near future. What makes the book the more remarkable is that it was the work, not of a romancise, but of a serious-minded patriotic soldier, who foresaw a dreadful but inevitable task confronting the country. It may be taken as reflecting the views of the rulers of Germany, and thus casting a flood of light on the hidden causes of the present conflict.

The book is entitled "Germany and the Next War." The author is Gen. Friedrich von Bernhardi. It was written in 1911. An English translation by Allen H. Powles has been published by Edward Arnold, of London.

His Gloomy View.

A striking feature of the book, of extraordinary interest at the moment, is the impression that Gen. von Bernhardi takes a rather gloomy view of the outcome. He sees Italy detached from the Triple Alliance. He sees England's fleet striking with overwhelming strength at Germany's fleet. He sees the armies of Germany, with only moderate help from Austria, outnumbered by the armies of France on the west, and Russia on the east. He sees the possibility of an invasion of the empire by England and her allies through Belgium and Holland. He sees Germany's commerce suffering severely if not ruined.

"Our next war will be fought for the highest interests of our country and of mankind. This will invest it with importance in the world's history. 'World power or downfall!' will be our rallying cry."

Built for War.

Gen. von Bernhardi believes the English have long been preparing to attack Germany by sea. "These preparations are like a strategic march and the natural extension of their naval bases leaves no doubt as to their meaning. The great military harbor of Rosyth is admittedly built for the eventuality of a war with Germany and can mean nothing else. Harwich has also been recently made into an especially strong naval base and, further, the roadstead of Scapa Flow in the Orkney Islands has been enlarged into a cruiser station. These are measures so directly and obviously directed against us that they demand an inquiry into the military position thus created."

He does not believe that Germany could effect much by a sudden attack on the English fleet or by attempt to war on British policy. Under the circumstances her fleet would have to retire under the guns of coast fortifications and wait for a favorable oportunity to attack.

Probable Dangers.

Gen. von Bernhardi does not profess to be an authority on naval matters, and in giving his views as to the probable naval strategy of Germany, he seeks simply to point out the probable dangers and how they can be met. This extract indicates the fate of any trans-Atlantic liners which may be captured by German cruisers.

"The prizes which fall into our hands must be remorselessly destroyed, since it will usually be impossible, owing to the great English superiority and the few bases we have abroad, to bring them back in safety without exposing our vessels to great risks. The shaprest measures must be taken against neutral ships laden with contraband."

Two kinds of blockade are available to England against Germany. "England can blockade closely our North Sea coast, and at the same time bar the Danish straits, so as to cut off communication with our Baltic ports; or she can seal up on the one side the Channel between England and the Continent, on the otherer side the open sea between the north of Scotland and Norway, on the Peterhead-Ekersund line, and thus cripple our oversea commerce and also control the Belgo-Dutch, Danish and Swedish shipping."

Liable to Blockade.

Owing to the length of the coast line to be covered, the distance from naval bases and the liability of English blockading ships to attack by German torpedo boats and submarines, the close blockade is deemed impracticable, Gen von Bernhardi thinks that England plans the second kind of blockade and regards the Flow as having been undertaken with such an end in view. It would entail on the north the barring of a line about three hundred nautical miles long, a scheme quite feasible from the military aspect. Only a small force is required to seal up the Channel. The great objection to this kind of blockade is that it requires England to break up her fleet into two or three divisions and thus gives Germany a chance of attacking some detached portions with success.

But it is improbable, Gen. von Bernhardi thinks, that England would have recourse to a mere blockade. Many reasons impel the English to secure a rapid decision of the war, and the direction in which they are likely to move is thus indicated:

Decisive Results.

"They could not obtain a decisive result unless they attempted to capture our naval bases—Wilhelmshaven, Heligoland, the mouth of the Elbe and Kiel—and to annihilate our fleet in its attempt to protect these places, and thus render it impossible for use to continue the war by sea. . . Our whole future history may turn upon the impregnability of the fortifications which, in combination with the fleet, are intended to guard our coasts and naval bases.

"If the French fleet, as we may expect, combines with the English and takes part in the war," Gen Von Bernhardi continues, "it will be much more difficult for us to wage than a war with England alone. France's blue water fleet would hold our allies in the Mediterranean in check, and England could bring all her forces to bear upon us. It would be possible that the combined fleets of the two powers might appear both in the Mediterranean and in the North sea, since England could hardly leave the protection of her Mediterranean interests to France alone. The prospect of any ultimately successful issue would thus shrink into the background.

Need Not Despair.

"But we need not even then despair. On the contrary, we must fight the French fleet, so to speak, on land, namely, we must defeat France so decisively that she would be compelled to renounce her alliance with England and withdraw her fleet to save herself from total destruction. Just as in 1870-71 we marched to the shores of the Atlantic, so this time again we must resolve on an absolute conquest, in order to capture the French naval ports and destroy the French naval depots.

War to the Knife.

"It would be war to the knife with France, one which would, if victorious, annihilate once for all the French position as a great power. If France, with her falling birthrate, determines on such a war, it is at the risk of losing her place in the first rank of European nations and sinking into permanent political subservience. Those are the stakes.

"The participation of Russia in the naval war must also be contemplated. That is the less dangerous, since the Russian Baltic fleet is at present still weak and cannot combine so easily as the English with the French. We could operate against it on the inner line, i.e., we could use the opportunity of uniting rapidly our vessels in the Baltic by means of the Kaiser Wilhelm canal; we could attack the Russian ships in vastly superior force, and, having struck our blow, we could return to the North sea. For these operations it is of the first importance that the Danish straits should not be occupied by the enemy.

"If the enemy succeeds in destroying our fleet and landing with strong detachments on the North sea coast, large forces of the land army would be required to repel them, a circumstance widely affecting the progress of the war on the land frontiers. It is therefore vitally necessary to prepare the defence of our own coasts so well that every attack, even by superior numbers, may be victoriously repelled.

Broad Lines of Policy.

"The consideration of the broad lines of the world policy and of the political aspirations of the individual states showed that the position of affairs everywhere is critical for us, that we live at an epoch which will decide our place as a world power or our downfall. The internal disruption of the Triple Alliance, as shown clearly by the action of Italy toward Turkey, threatens to bring the crisis quickly to a head. The period which destiny has allotted us for concentrating our forces and preparing ourselves for the deadly struggle, may soon be passed. We must use it, if we wish to be mindful of the warning of the Great Elector, that we are Germans."

The first essential to Germany's security is to make the total fighting strength of the nation available for war. But numbers in themselves are not the decisive facts. History teaches that "in most cases it was a special advantage possessed by the one party—better equipment, greater efficiency of troops, brilliant leadership or more able strategy—which led to victory over the numerically superior. Rome conquered the world with inferior forces; Frederick the Great with inferior forces withstood the allied armies of Europe. Recent history shows us the victory of the numerically weaker Japanese army over a crushingly superior opponent.

No Great Commander.

"We cannot count on seeing a great commander at our head; a second Frederick the Great will hardly appear. Nor can we know beforehand whether our troops will prove superior to the hostile forces. But we can try to learn what will be the decisive factors in the future war which will turn the scale in favor of victory or defeat.

"In a future European war 'masses' will be employed to an extent unprecedented in any previous one. Weapons will be used whose deadliness will exceed all previous experience. More effective and varied means of communication will be available than were known in earlier wars. These three momentous factors will mark the war of the future.

"The direct conclusion to be drawn from these reflections is that a great superiority must rest with the troops whose fighting capabilities and tactical efficiency are greater than those of their antagonists."

Looks for Victory.

It is to such factors that Gen. Von Bernhardi looks for German victory. Rapidity of action, striking at the enemy with superior forces at a selected spot, a victory in the decisive direction are the things likely to be conclusive for the whole course of the war. It is therefore necessary above all things to develop the attacking powers of the German army. "The larger the armies by which one state tries to outbid another the smaller will be the efficiency and tactical worth of the troops; and not merely the average worth, but the worth of each separate detachment as such. Huge armies are even a danger to their own cause. They will be suffocated by their own fat, said Gen. von Brandenstein, the great organiser of the advance of 1870, when speaking of the mass formations of the French."

The decision depends on the trained regular troops, not on the masses which are placed at their side on mobilization. The army which contains the greatest number of self-reliant and independent personalities must have a distinct advantage. It is useless for Germany to attempt to oppose masses to masses. Safety for her lies in overthrowing, if possible, one antagonist before the other can actively interfere, and Germany must not in any case wait until her opponents have completed their arming and decided that the hour of attack has come. Says General von Bernhardi in conclusion;

"If people and government stand together, resolved to guard the honor of Germany and make every sacrifice of blood and treasure to insure the future of our country and our state, we can face approaching events with confidence in our rights and in our strength; then we need not fear to fight for our position in the world, but we may, with Ernst Moritz, raise our hands to heaven and cry to God:

"From the height of the starry sky
May thy ringing sword flash bright;
Let every craven cry
Be silenced by thy might."

TOY MANUFACTURING.

Toy manufacturing in Canada and the United States will receive an impetus as the result of the war in Europe since Germany, the chief source of supply in the past is cut off from all overseas trade. Canada has been a large purchaser of German toys, as $579,547 of the total of $1,037,137 worth of dolls and toys imported during the year ending March, 1914, came from Germany. Next to Germany the chief source of supply was the United States.

BONES OF NAPOLEON'S SACRIFICED SOLDIERS ARE FOUND IN EGYPT

A few weeks ago an interesting ceremony took place at Mustapha, a suburb of Alexandria, Egypt.

During some excavations in the neighborhood the bones had been discovered of some soldiers of the French republic who, over a hundred years ago, had formed part of that band that had set out to conquer Egypt under Napoleon Bonaparte.

The long-dead Frenchmen had been identified by the buttons of their uniforms, which bore the device, "Republique Francaise," and the number 32, that being the sign of the 32nd half brigade, called the "Infernal Brigade." These men had probably fallen in the battle of Sidi Gabes, known also as the battle of Canope.

These remains were handed over to the French consular authorities with all due ceremony.

Colonel Pritchard, commanding the Northamptonshire Regiment, declared the remains of the French soldiers to have passed out of his hands into those of the official representatives of the French nation. The British consul, Mr. Cameron, in a speech to the assembled English and French communities, remarked that, as Milton tells us, "Peace hath her victories as well as war," and that on that spot near to which so many gallant English and French soldiers lay buried, the dead spoke of friendship.

Only Relic of French Occupation.

A dismantled fort on the Mokattam Hills, overlooking the Helouan railway, is almost the only sign left in Egypt of that vast expedition of Bonaparte's that left France in 1798 to conquer Egypt for France. England was not for the moment much in evidence in the Mediterranean, and Napoleon discredited her claim to the Empire of the Seas. France controlled Corfu, Ancona, Genoa and Corsica, whilst England was forced to employ all her naval force in blockading the western harbours from Cadiz to the Texel.

But, on the other hand, England had seized the Cape of Good Hope, and as France had already lost ground in India, she must occupy Egypt in order to secure what remained. Bonaparte, therefore, "General Commanding the Army in Egypt," established a station in Alexandria, the great seaport in North Egypt, and marched on to Cairo.

His successes in Italy had given the conquering hero absolute confidence that his path must lead straight to success; and by success Bonaparte meant the conquest of the world.

He intended to colonize Egypt, and so set about his expedition in much the same manner as if he had bought a plot of land and was contracting for building materials, save that he omitted both the purchasing and the contracting.

Scientific as Well as Military Affair.

"How long are you going to stay in Egypt, General?" asked his secretary before they left France. "Six months or six years," replied the young General with a shrug. So the French vessels had on board not only the officers and troops, but a wonderful staff that included mathematicians, astronomers, naturalists, engineers (civil and military), architects, sculptors, secretaries, musicians, and doctors, and amongst them were some of the most distinguished men of that brilliant era in the history of France.

The East fascinated Bonaparte's imagination. His favorite hero was Alexander the Great. "Europe is a molehill," he said. "There have never been great empires and revolutions except in the East, where there are six hundred million men."

His military experiences up to the present had led to conquest. When the ships containing some 12,000 men arrived in the glorious harbor of Alexandria each soldier was given provisions for four days, but in the fierce heat of Egypt's summer the men wouldn't carry the burden. They were so sure of conquest that they had no fear of a scarcity of provisions, and the miserable appearance of native houses made them sure that they would have little trouble with the enemy.

They did not realize that outside the dirty town that covered the remains of one of the finest cities of the ancient world there were weary miles of sandy desert. The troops were harassed in their march by wandering Bedouins, the men soon became parched for lack of water, and many fell by the wayside.

Whenever possible the wounded were carried along on the strong backs of the fellhin (peasantry).

Naval Defeats Destroyed Him.

Egypt was then under the rule of the Mamelukes, a glittering array of warriors, but who in private life might have been compared to robber chieftains, and the country was greviously oppressed. The French defeated them at the thrilling battle of the Pyramids, but the English under Nelson defeated the French fleet at th battle of Aboukir, and Bonaparte began after all to realize the truth of the saying that the English had command of the sea.

The Frenchmen had terrible troubles to get provisions at first, as the Arabs feared them, and hid all they had. But later the fellahin were willing to sell their pigeons, sheep and goats, and when they would not the soldiers pillaged frankly, in spite of Bonaparte's express orders to the contrary. So it often happened that the men were better off than their officers.

The Arabs admired the French soldiers' buttons immensely, and would pay well for them—those very buttons by which the remains of some of them have recently been identified!

The Frenchmen spent freely on donkey rides (as do the tourists of today), and in the wine shops with their abundance of delicious Greek and Syrian wines.

"The French lose their money in Egypt between donkeys and taverns," remarked an old Arab, shaking his beard. "Soon they will find death awaiting them in Syria and their lives will be lost."

Military Disliked Scientists.

Bonaparte's men hated the stifling Eastern town, where no comfort was to be had, and where the climate disagreed with them, and hundreds caught fever or dysentery and died. They took it into their heads that the expedition had been arranged to please the scientific men of the party, especially the antiquarians, who came forward so eagerly whenever any ancient stones or remains were to be seen. They disliked the unfortunte scientists heartily, and to mark their contempt made a point of calling the donkeys "savants."

History does not say what the savants thought of the insult or what they called the soldiers. Probably the soldiers felt better at anyrate for being able to grumble at someone.

One day Bonaparte suggested that a professor of chemistry should perform some experiments before a certain sheikh (reader of the Khoran), whom he expected would be much impressed by these marvels and regard them as sorcery. The sheikh watched the transformations calmly and then asked: "Can he make me be in Morocco and here at one and the same moment?" He was told no. "Then he is not a real sorcerer," objected the crafty old sheikh.

It was not only the men who were discontented, but some of the officers thought the huge sums that were being devoted to the expedition might have been better employed, and they prophecied the ultimate failure since recorded in history.

Bonaparte's great friend, General Dumas, father of the novelist, lost courage and left Egypt, a wounded, broken man. He died not long after, and Bonaparte, who could not forgive a slight, would never extend the smallest assistance to the widthe smallest assistance to the jv ow, Madame Dumas, and her children.

"He should have believed in my star," was the sullen reproach of the mighty conqueror to the memory of his friend. for Bonaparte was a firm believer in astrology.

A woman would rather be wearied with a man's views than bored by his lack of ideas.—E. F. Parr.

German Motives Explained

Even nations in the death grips upon the battlefield appear to understand the value of the sympathy of onlookers, and in the present struggle Germany seeks to show that the war was thrust upon her. It being impossible to prove that some one struck her first, she fall back upon the cry that this is the irrepressible conflict, the battle between Teuton civilizaton and Slav barbarism. She tries to prove to the onlooking world, and especially to the United States that she is the veritable champion of civilization, stemming the tide that flows upon her and upon cizilization from Russia. Her loyal sons in the United States have been arguing upon this theme since the outbreak of war, and they are ably answered by M. I. Pupin, a professor in Columbia University, who was born in Hungary and proclaims himself a Slav, but who uses the King's English as though it were his mother tongue. In the course of an article in the New York Sun, Professor Pupin gives some interesting information regarding the situation in Germany as revealed to him by brother scientists long before the war broke out.

Militarist Intellectuals

He challenges German culture at the outset, and says that Professor Munsterberg is right when he says that among the intellectual classes in Germany there was practically no response to the movement for universal peace. Even among the best thinkers in the empire it was realized that if German ideals were to be established they could be established by war alone. Therefore, the only enemies to war in Germany were those who did not take it for granted that these ideals should be established. Militarism, as a result of the Franco-Prussian war, which laid the foundations for the modern German Empire, became the ruling passion, and beside it grew that other product of mediaevalism, the doctrine of the Divine right of kings. The Kaiser's pious utterances were not without their effect. He asserted that he ruled Germany as a sort of vice-regent of God, and the people appear to have believed him. The difference between Germany and England and France is that while the Kaiser was re-establishing the fetich about the Divine right of kings the other countries were beginnng to lay down the doctrine about the Divine right of the people.

Military Inventors Honored.

Prof. Pupin continues: "The Kaiser became not only the war lord, but also the central figure of all activities of the empire. Inventions, discoveries and all products of scientific research which could increase the efficiency of the German army and navy were quickly noticed by the Kaiser and heartily applauded by him. For instance, scientific men in Germany who otherwise would have remained obscure enjoyed his imperial favor and became prominent because they dabbled in wrieless telegraphy, which to the Kaiser always appeared as especially designed by heaven to become a great adjunct to his army and navy. Count Zeppelin, in the opinion of the Kaiser, is a great German and the greatest inventive genius of the age, just because he has been adapting the old French invention for German military service. The really great scientific men of Germany felt lonesome; they looked on from a respectful distance and smiled ironically and told each other amusing stories about the Kaiser's standard of scientific acumen. The wise men of Germany knew the Kaiser's shortcomings; they never took him very seriously, and yet they followed him meekly, carried on by the irresistible current of German militarism."

Debt to British Genius.

It was some years after the war with France that Germany really beban to become the great industrial nation she was before the present catastrophe occurred. Until 1885 she had no iron industry to speak of, and as a wit remarked, "the Iron Chancellor represents the only fine iron that Germany has." Her metal contained too much phosphorus; but suddenly England through Bessemer and Gilchrist-Thomas developed a process [illegible] made this iron extremely valuable. Immediately the iron and steel industries of Germany started with a bound, and grew until they are today second only to those of the United States. Other subsidiary industries developed, and this, in brief, is the history of German industrial development in the past twenty years. Side by side with this prosperity developed the problem of finding markets for products and feeding the industrial population. Germany's prosperity brought about a great increase in her population, particularly in the industrial districts. Industrial employment at home reduced German immigration to practically nothing. The agricultural population did not increase so rapidly, because Germany does not possess enough arable land. The inevitable result approached. Germany saw the time approaching when she could not supply more than one-third of the foodthat the country consumed. As one distinguished German told Prof. Pupin some years ago, it was necessary for Germany to find a method by which one acre could produce what three then produced or to multiply the number of her acres by three.

Germany's Need Is Farm Land.

This was more than a hint at aggression upon the great fields of Russia. The writer points out, however, that the greatest iron [illegible] of Europe are in Luxemburg, Lorraine and Belgium. Could Germany come into possession of these resources, she could lead the world in her industries, providing that she could also grow sufficient food for her people. Long ago it became plain that neither these iron fields nor the agricultural land could be secured except by conquest, and it was for this reason that the great German army and navy have been brought into existence. That she was not threatened, but acted on the offensive, is proved, says Prof. Pupin, by the fact that in Russia half the population of Russia does not know of her existence, and that the other half is indifferent to it. Russia and Germany are not industrial rivals. The trouble is that both Russia and France have what Germany wants, namely agricultural resources. [illegible] and Empire.

MAKE EFFORT TO GET DAIRYMEN'S CONVENTION HERE

In an effort to have the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Convention, to be held the first week in January, take place here G. A. Gillespie, M.L.A., waited on the city fathers last evening and urged them to have a representative at the meeting of their executive next Tuesday in Toronto and invite them to this city. It was decided that the Mayor and one other representative attend the meeting.

Sidewalk Needed.

Dean McColl asked the city to construct a piece of sidewalk in front of St. Mary's School. The cost would be about $20.00 and if the city could not see their way clear to do the work the Separate School Board would do it if they were given permission and the proper grades. The matter was left in the hands of the City Engineer and Chairman of the Board of Works.

Well, Rather.

A cigar company was refused permission to place a streamer across the street. Ald. Green thought it improper to allow an outside company to be permitted to advertise in that manner while the local dealers are not.

CITY WILL DO BUSINESS WITH BANK OF MONTREAL

Ald. Anderson and Mayor Buller Explain the Situation, and the Reason for the Change --- Ald. Stratton Gives His Opinions and is "Sat on"

When his worship the mayor called for the reading of by-laws at last night's meeting of the council, three very important by-laws were ready to be passed thrice and thereby become law. By-law No. 1846, authorizing the execution of securities for temporary advances to the city; by-law No. 1845, authorizing the city to borrow $30,523.88 from the Bank of Montreal, and by-law No. 1844, authorizing the city to borrow $60,000 for current, ordinary expenditure of the city, were all passed, or, in other words, the city has transferred its account from the Bank of Toronto to the Bank of Montreal.

An Explanation.

Alderman McIntyre asked for some information as to why this step had been taken, and Ald. Anderson, chairman of the finance committe, in his reply stated that the city has been doing their business with the Bank of Toronto, which charged five per cent. interest. When the sum of $100,000, for which debentures had been sold, was required, so as to execute an order of expropriating the property of the Peterborough Light and Power company, the city naturally applied to the Bank of Toronto, but they utterly refused to forward the money. After waiting for two or three weeks and calling several meetings of the council, Mayor Buller and he went to the general manager of the Bank of Montreal and made arrangements whereby the city could get money from that bank by transferring the city's account and paying six per cent. Ald. Anderson was of the opinion that the city was exceptionally fortunate in obtaining money during the present crisis from a bank with which they had not been dealing. As to the one per cent. more than the Bank of Toronto charged, the general manager had assured them that as soon as normal conditions resumed, the rate would be reduced.

Mayor Buller spoke along the same lines as Ald. Anderson and pointed out clearly that the Bank of Toronto had been given every chance, but failed to come to the city's rescue. His worship was of the idea that the Bank of Toronto should have forwarded two or three hundred thousand dollars to enable this city to supply work for the men and not have them traversing the city streets in idleness. These remarks brought "hear, hear" from men in the gallery.

Ald. Stratton Objects.

Alderman Stratton wished to know if at the end of the present year, 1914, the city would advertise for banking tenders as it had in the past, but Ald. Anderson thought that, as the Bank of Montreal had helped the city in an hour of distress, it was up to the 1915 council to see that the Bank of Montreal was given the business.

Ald. Stratton aroused the ire of the mayor and other aldermen when he stated that the mayor and Ald. Anderson did not go around in a business-like way, or they could have had the money at five per cent. He claimed he had been speaking to a bank manager of the city who stated that he was willing to forward money to the city if he thought the account would be transferred.

"There's no use in you swinging that bluff," cried the mayor. "If you knew that we could get the money without going to all the trouble we did, it was up to you, as an alderman of the city, to acquaint us with the fact. You told us the other night that you thought we made a good bargain."

"That's a falsehood," exclaimed the Centre ward representative, but Ald. Johnston, who was in the chair for the last by-law, called for "Order for God's sake."

By-law Authorizes Sewer Construction

According to by-law No. 1843, passed last evening by the city council, sewers will be constructed on Bethune street from Dalhousie street to Sherbrooke street; on Cambridge from Elm street to Cedar street; on Chamberlain from Park street to Alfred street; on Hunter street from Stewart street to Rubidge street; on Lake street from Aylmer street to the Grand Trunk railway; and on Monaghan road from Homewood avenue to Walkerfield avenue.

Recommendations Adopted by Council

The Council in session last evening adopted the following recommendation from the Board of Works:

That the matter of changing the grade of the sidewalk on Elias avenue be left in the hands of the Chairman of the Board of Works and the City Engineer with authority to make a recommendation concerning it.

The Committee of the whole made the following recommendations:

1. That Barrie's Limited be allowed to place Luxfer Prisms in the sidewalk opposite their new building not greater in extent that 4 feet wide, according to plan supplied by them and attached to this report.

2. That the laying of sewers and sidewalks and the carrying on of street work which has been outlined for this year be curtailed to such an extent as the Board of Works may decide.

3. That Foley & Gleason's cheque deposited with their tender for street paving be returned to them if they furnish a maintenance bond for like amount satisfactory to the City Solicitor.

4. That a committee be appointed to make financial arrangements to carry out the public undertakings of the city and to sell debentures which the city has and will have to sell, the committee to consist of the Mayor and Ald. Anderson, Chairman of the Finance Committee.

5. That the Mayor and Clerk be a committee to obtain information regarding the volunteers who have gone to Europe to take part with the British Army in the war.

6. That a request from the Board of Education for the use of the city's road roller to roll the grounds back of the old Collegiate Institute building be granted, the Board to have the use of the roller when it is brought back from the East Ward and to pay $5.00 a day and expenses for it.

7. That the City Solicitor ask to have the date in the proposed guarantee bond offered by Foley & Gleason, at which the paving work must begin, extended to July 1st, 1915.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

ALD. SAUNDERS,
Chairman.

Ald. Duncan stated in reference to clause six that the Board of Education desired the use of the road roller so as to enable them to prepare a place for a skating rink and he thought they should be given the use of it gratis. The meeting passed a resolution to that effect.

Communications Before the Council

The following communications were received last night by the city council:

From David Diamond, Toronto, asking for sewer facilities and water connections for 30 acres of land which he has purchased on the east side of the Trent canal and south of the lift locks. Referred to board of works.

From Canada Carriage Co. re sanitary garbage wagon.—Property committee.

From James McFall, secretary of Association of Fire Engineers, re fire chiefs' convention at New Orleans on October 20, 21, 22 and 23. —Chairman of fire, water and light.

From G. S. Wilson, assistant secretary of Union of Canadian Municipalities, re resolution at recent convention.—Received.

From secretary Provincial Association of Fire Chiefs of Ontario, re convention at Stratford on October 14, 15 and 16.—Fire, water and light committee.

From Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., re Canadian Patriotic Fund.—Received.

Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., re relief for unemployed.—Received.

From Ruddy and Burnham, re case of Chase v. city.—Legal committee.

From Canadian General Electric Co., re condition of Park street in front of their property.—Board of works.

From W. H. Munro, manager of Peterborough Light and Power Co., re poles for trolley into C. P. R. depot.—Board of works.

EXCHANGE OF MONEY ORDERS WITH UNITED KINGDOM RESUMED

Postmaster Dobbar has been notified that the exchange of money orders with the United Kingdom has been resumed under the following conditions:

No person is to be allowed to purchase money orders in one day exceeding $100.

In the conversion of Canadian amounts into sterling money, the present table is to be used.

Additional commission of four cents for each pound or fraction of a pound must be paid by the remitter and brought to account with the usual commission collected.

SHORT TIME DEBENTURES

Money Will be Raised by Selling to Citizens

By-law No. 1846, authorizing the city to issue short time securities on amount over $100, passed its third reading last night at the council meeting and became law. His Worship Mayor Buller, in speaking of the by-law, stated that J. H. Burnham, M.P., was willing to take $2,000 worth and Mr. Lynch $1,000 worth. It is anticipated that a large amount can be raised through this plan. The city intends paying six per cent interest, so in all probability numerous citizens will take their money out of the banks of the city, which are paying three per cent., and deposit it with the city.

Duty is a dignity and oportunity, man's chance of being good. — Professor H. Jones.

COURT COLLECTED RAILWAY FARE

Two Strangers Paid $10 for Trip From Winnipeg

Robert Brown and Edward Stephenson were up in today's police court on a charge of stealing a ride on a C.P.R. freight train. Brown and Stephenson were in Winnipeg and unable to get work they started out and rode the bumpers from there to Eastern Canada. Local police heard a rumor that they might be connected with the shooting case at Smith's Falls, but this was unfounded. As a reminder to pay their way when travelling each was obliged to hand over $15.

Mrs. Kate Douglas was found under the influence of liquor on Monday. Her case was remanded one week.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

THE PYRAMIDIC PREDICTIONS OF THE PRESENT WAR.

Editor Review,

Sir,—Respecting Mr. G. G. Publow's recent statement that the late Rev. Dr. Wild based his prediction of a 1914 war, upon "certain markings of inscriptions found on the walls in the passages of apartments within the great Pyramid of Gizeh," I venture to suggest that the lapse —28 years, has misled Mr. Publow's memory.

Colonel Garnier, R.E., in his work, "The Great Pyramid: its Builder and its Prophecy," (published by Banks & Son, London, Eng.) says nothing whatever of these "markings" or "inscriptions" in the Great Pyramid, nor does he, nor any one else that I ever heard of, so much as mention those records found in the Pyramid," alluded to in the current number of the Toronto Sentinel. If they exist in anything beyond fancy I shall be thankful for the evidence.

With Col. Garnier's book in front of me (my edition is the latest—that of 1912), I can say the Colonel bases his conclusions upon the mysterious and probably divinely appointed and cosmical measurements of the Pyramid's passages, its chambers, its granite coffer and its relation to the "Ark of the Covenant" and upon many prophetical passages of the Bible and their bearings on subsequent outstanding events in the World's History. Seeing that this eminent Egyptologist had long ago marked 1914 for the German war against England, it is natural that English papers are having their attention drawn to his remarkable writings at once so solemn, and now so topical. Your readers will be interested in Garnier's plain statement of the sure event. It occurs at page 371 under the heading "Summary of Events," thus—

"About 1914.
German invasion of Britain is defeated after much suffering and is followed by a great development of the military and naval power of Britain."

On quite other grounds the year 1912 was prognosticated for a German-British war in "Revolution and War" by M. E. Susack (published by Sounenschein & Co., London, Eng.) at page 177. Here is the passage:

"An Italian Count, but of British nationality, well known in all the best circles of continental society, lately remarked: 'The common topic of conversation in France, Italy, Austria, Russia and Germany is the coming invasion of England in 1912, which is believed will result in her downfall.'" "In Germany there is not a shadow of a doubt as to the result."

In conclusion let me say that if any one doubts Germany's long prepared plans for a conflict with great Britain he will have them ruthlessly blasted by reading the works, I have mentioned, especially if supplemented by reading "Rome and Germany," (published by Drane, London, Eng.); "Recent Events," (by the late Lord Robt. Montague), and by consulting a never-answered pamphlet of much evidential value, written by the patriotic socialist, Robert Blatchford, and entitled "Germany and England."

Yours faithfully,
ART. GREENHOW.

Walkerville, Aug. 29, 1914.

THE WAR FUND.

Editor Review,

Sir,—There has been a good deal in the papers during the past few days on the subject of the care of the families of the men who have gone to serve their country. In regard to the women's war fund, after consulting the Mayor it was decided that the problem was too large a one to be undertaken by the women and could only be dealt with by the city council, that is the food, fuel and rent, and that the women's fund was to be used at their discretion for clothing, nourishment in cases of sickness, and any emergencies. All the families have been visited by either Mr. Miller who is acting for the town, or by some member of the commttee, it has been arranged that each family will be visted regularly.

It would be better if instead of writing anonymous letters to the papers people who are interested in this work would either enquire of Mr. Miller or any of the relief committeee of the women's war fund for correct information.

Yours truly,

THE COUNTY COUNCIL.

Editor Review:

Sir,—I see that the York county council has contributed $20,000 to the war fund. I would ask that, in all decency, our county council should follow that worthy example. We must live up to the proprieties of life or bring reproach upon ourselves. The occasion demands it, and who shall refuse it? The reasons are obvious and need no comment. Self preservation is the first law of Nature. Let us therefore make the necessary sacrifices and at the same time live up to our professed loyalty.

INVADERS TOOK FIRST ENGAGEMENT

While dark, heavy clouds covered Old Sol and threatened to dispense a little moisture o'er this vicinity, the Erie Yanks took the first campaign of the three-day war by 3-2. The heavy rains of the past few days left the diamond in bad condition, and it was the same old occurrence over again. No one was prepared to take chances and the result was no "pep." Once or twice during the game one or two of the fifty-three fans present ventured a little cheer, and it sounded like a gunshot in church.

One lanky individual bearing the name of Close was so decidedly "close" that the Petes accumulated but five scattered singles off his delivery and only one received transportation to first. Ken Tracey made his final home appearance this season, and although he allowed but seven hits, three of them, one a double, came in one frame.

In the seventh innings it grew very dark and looked as though the game would be called, but the clouds broke again and the rain held off till the last batter was up. In the course of a few seconds the rain fell rather heavily, and the large multitude (?) of fans became a trifle damp before they hit the main stem.

Our old friend, Umpire Miller, is back with us again, and handled the game in his customary perfect manner.

First Inning.

ERIE — Dawson flied to Rooney. Scott grounded to King. Colligan went out, Tracey to Dolan. — No runs, hits nor errors.

PETERBORO — Blount fouled to McNeal. Welsh grounded to Patten. Dolan popped to Gygli. — No runs, hits nor errors.

Second Inning.

ERIE — Gygli beat out a grounder to Dolan. Harris walked. Patten hit to Tracey, who got Gygli at third. Behan flied to Fox, and McNeal popped to the same player. — No runs, one hit, no errors.

PETERBORO — Rooney fanned. Byrne went out, Scott to Gygli. King flied to Behan. — No runs, hits nor errors.

Third Inning.

ERIE — Close grounded to Fox. Dawson flied to Byrne. Scott went out, Fox to Dolan. — No runs, hits nor errors.

PETERBORO —Fox fanned. Kelly got a scratch hit over first. Tracey missed three. Blount hit over short. Kelly stole third, but Welsh forced Blount at second. — No runs, two hits, no errors.

Fourth Inning.

ERIE — Colligan went safe on Fox's error. Gygli got an infield hit, when Kelly slipped in fielding his bunt. Harris advanced the runners over second, and they scored on Patten's double. Behan hit to Fox, who got Patten on the line. McNeal flied to the short fielder and Close forced Behan at second, Fox to King.—Two runs, three hits, one error.

PETERBORO — Dolan fanned. Rooney dropped a hit over short. Byrne singled to centre. King flied to Patten. Rooney came home on a wild heave by Close, but Byrne was caught stealing home. — One run, two hits, no errors.

Fifth Inning.

ERIE — Dawson walked. Scott sacrifice. Colligan singled to right, scoring Dawson. Gygli raised to Rooney, and Colligan was caught stealing, Kelly to King. — One run, one hit, no errors.

PETERBORO — Fox flied to Behan. Kelly went out, Close to Gygli. Tracey walked, but Blount flied to Dawson. — No runs, hits nor errors.

Sixth Inning.

ERIE — Harris singled to left. Patten fouled to Kelly. Behan lined to Welsh. Harris stole second. McNeal walked, but Close forced him at second on a grounder to King.—No runs, one hit, no errors.

PETERBORO — Welsh went out, Behan to Gygli. Dolan grounded to Patten. Rooney flied to Dawson.—No runs, hits nor errors.

Seventh Inning.

ERIE — Dawson flied to Blount, as did Scott. Colligan beat out a bunt. Gygli flied to Roney. — No runs, one hit, no errors.

PETERBORO—Byrne hit through second, went to second on a passed ball, and took third on King's death at first. Fox raised a sacrifice fly to Dawson and Byrne scored. Kelly went out, third to first. — One run, one hit, no errors.

Eighth Inning.

ERIE — Harris went out, King to Dolan. Patten grounded to Fox, and Behan fouled to Byrne. — No runs, no hits, no errors.

COMMENT

As You Like It

Yesterday's game was played in one hour and twenty minutes.

Old Peter Behan still possesses that old strong arm. He heaved the muddy spheriod across the diamond yesterday with a velocity of a shell from a cannon.

Umpire Miller will join the International League squad of arbitrators at the close of the Canadian League season.

There has been a decided falling off in the attendance at the games during the past week. Funny what the Kaiser can do and him so far away.

Tomorrow sees the closing of the Canadian League in this city. One fan has suggested that the closing hymn be, "It may be for years and it may be forever."

If President Fitz gets a team in Peterborough next year he'll have to rope some stranger in. The majority of baseball fans are a little tired of dropping a little more kall each succeeding year.

New York and Pittsburg played an eleven inning tie yesterday. The score was 1-1. Boston was idle.

TWO GAMES FOR WEDNESDAY

Double Bill Will Close Ball Season Here

Owing to the bad weather of today the game with Erie was called off. A double header will be played tomorrow the first game commencing int at 2.30. This will be the last prof. baseball attraction in this city this season and it is expected that a large number of fans will turn out for the finale. Schettler and Creswell will in all probability do the heaving for the Petes while Lefty Dorbeck and Morse will form the artillery for the Yankees.

THE RING

With the exception of Johnny Kilbane, featherweight champion, there isn't a fighter with a strain of Celtic blood in his veins who can be called a champion.

With the passing of Johnny Coulon, who was partly Irish and French, the bantamweight division is minus a son of Erin among the little fellows. In the 122-pound class, now headed by Kilbane, there isn't an Irish lad in sight who can take the place of the present king of a division that for years produced some great Irish pugilists.

Among the lightweights there are no men of Irish extraction who have a chance of winning the crown from Freddy Welsh.

With the exception of Jack McAuliffe, who retired in 1896 the undefeated lightweight champion of the world, there has never been a champion in that class who was of Irish origin.

Of course, Terry McGovern was Irish. But McGovern won the title from Joe Gans in one of the rawest fakes that was ever pulled off in Chicago. Gans wasn't a lightweight at the time, for McGovern's manager, in order to make the "frame-up" doubly sure, insisted that Gans make 128 pounds. Gans had a terrible time to get to the figure, but could have stopped "Terrible Terry."

From the lightweigth class to the welterweight limit is a good long step. Mike Gibbons claims the title, but insists that the weight be at 140 pounds. The official welterweight limit is 142 pounds. Mike is Irish and as good a fighter as ever pulled on a pair of gloves. The welterweight has always been a poor class. There is nothing of the glamour in this division that there is in the two classes below it. Mike stands so far above all the rest of the men who can make 145 pounds that there are no comparisons.

Coming up to the middleweights, there are only two Irishmen who stand out in any bright and particular light. They are Jimmy Clabby and Eddie McGoorty. Outside of these two Irish-Americans there is not a fighter among all the 158-pounders whose ancestors were natives of the auld sod. George Chip is a Lithuanian; Billy Murray is a Portuguese; Jack Dillon is a German.

The heavyweight class of fighters is bereft of men of Gaelic fighting blood. Gunboat Smith is about as formidable a man among the Irish (he says he's Irish) as there is fighting. The "Gun" has about as much chance of getting away with the black fellow as an Orangeman would have leading an A.O.H. parade.

Edmonton a Model City.

Edmonton is giving an example of good government at a low price to the citizen. Edmonton is now a city of 72,000 inhabitants. Eight years ago the population was only 4,000. In its vicinity are coal mines of unlimited supply, and it is the centre of a mixed farming province.

Edmonton is in the business of owning and operating every public utility at its disposal and some other things. It owns street railways, electric light and power plants, sewers, water system, hospitals and the agricultural grounds and buildings, where fairs of all sorts are held. In addition to that, the city owns public baths and public golf courses, where any one can go and enjoy a game for nothing. The telephone system is owned by the city, and one gets unlimited local service there for $28 a year. For electric lighting the citizens pay from 2 to 5 cents per kilowatt. The mayor says that by next year the city hopes to dispense water free to everybody for all purposes.

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

Some people would rather eat the bread of dependence if it has a little jam on it than to take it without the jam.

There are persons who are ill natured because they were born so and are glad of it.

The Duelist's Disease.

Dr. Pean, a Paris physician, was called as a physician to attend a duel. One of the adversaries was so cowardly that he ran away after the first shot, unhurt. The four seconds, the remaining combatant and the doctor stood looking at each other with embarrassment and discomfiture when Dr. Pean broke the silence by saying gravely, "I know the disease that has suddenly attacked this gentleman." And, taking out his pencil and paper, he drew up a report as follows: "At the first shot Mr. X. was taken with a sudden attack of tachypodia that would not yield to treatment. The seconds therefore, on consultation with the physician, stopped the duel." Thus "honor" was saved.

Thoroughly Base.

An old forger who has served five terms in various penitentiaries and who is now refraining from fancy penmanship in order to enjoy an uninterrupted vacation for a week or twain accords us the following epigram from the depth of his experience:

"I never realized the complete baseness of my nature until one day I found myself unconsciously raising my own check!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Lonesome Donkey.

One summer Mr. Oakes, an eminent lawyer, sent his wife and young daughter to a farmhouse in the White mountains for a vacation. Shortly after he received an urgent request from the little girl to send her a pet donkey to use while there. She had read about donkeys and heard about them, but was not at all familiar with their peculiar vocalism.

The donkey arrived, and the child had many rides around the vicinity. She enjoyed it all hugely, except the animal's strange noises, which inspired her with the profoundest pity for his evident distress.

One day after vainly trying to subdue his vocalism she wrote a letter to her father, in which she said:

"Dear Father—I do wish you would come up here soon, my donkey is so very lonesome."—National Monthly.

Wolsey's Great Invention.

By far the greatest achievement of Cardinal Wolsey was combining strawberries and cream. A world benefactor, his failings may well be forgotten and forgiven!

How long have Britishers been at least partial fruitarians? Apples, pears, gooseberries and plums appear to have been grown in England for a very long time, but cultivated raspberries did not arrive until the sixteenth century.

Rhubarb was introduced from Russia in 1573, but did not become popular until the nineteenth century. It is recorded that a Deptford gardener in 1810 sent a few sticks to the London market, but was unable to find a customer.

Cherries were brought over by the Romans, but ceased to be cultivated until one of Henry VIII.'s gardeners reintroduced them.

BURRITT—CLEVELAND.

Montreal Star.

The marriage of Miss Kathleen Cleveland, youngest daughter of Mrs. G. F. Cleveland, "Edgewood," Danville, to Mr. Walter H. Burritt, of the Bank of Montreal, son of Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Burritt, Peterborough, Ont., was celebrated on Wednesday evening last, at St. Augustine's church, the rector, Rev. J. H. Murray, performing the ceremony. The church was decorated with a profusion of flowers and ferns, the color scheme being green and gold. The bride, who was given away by her cousin, Mr. Chester H. Cleveland, wore a gown of Duchesse satin with overdress of shadow lace with pearl trimmings. Her tulle veil was fastened to a cap of carrick-ma-cross lace in Dutch effect, with wreath of orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of bridal roses, lilies-of-the-valley and maiden hair fern, and wore the bridegroom's gift, a sapphire and diamond ring. The maid of honor was Miss Miriam McKee, cousin of the bride, who wore a gown of pale yellow satin with overdress of Dresden ninon and carried yellow roses. The bridesmaids, Miss Muriel Burritt, sister of the bridegroom, and Miss Jane Cotton, of Cowansville, Que., were gowned in pale blue and pink satin with overdresses of Dresden silk crepe de chene and carried pink asters, tied with illusion ribbon. The three attendants wore "castle caps" of shadow lace with wreaths of rose buds and forget-me-nots. The bride's gifts to the maid of honer and bridesmaids were cameo rings, set with pearls. The best man was Mr. Hugh Burritt, brother of the bridesgroom, and Mr. W. H. Murray and Major Ralph Stockwell acted as ushers. The bridesgroom gave the best man a silver cigarette case and to the ushers gold cuff links. The wedding march was played by Mr. James Stockwell. After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's mother. The bride and bridegroom received under an arch and bell of flowers and ferns, assisted by Mrs. Cleveland, who was wearing a mauve satin gown with tunic of crepe de chene, trimmed with real lace and carrying a bouquet of orchids and sweet peas, and by the bride's sister, Mrs. J. C. Brown, of Granby, gowned in white satin with Russian tunic of maize ninon. Among the out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Brown, of Granby; Mrs. E. A. Wright and Miss Goodhue, of Montreal; Miss Edith Pitt, of Portland, Me.; Messrs. L. McKee, A. Norcross and B. Frevin, of Sherbrooke. After the reception Mr. and Mrs. Burritt motored to Sherbrooke, later leaving for Toronto, and a trip on the Great Lakes. The bride travelled in a navy blue suit and moire hat to match.

Dr. and Mrs. Webster of Norval, are registered at the Snowden House.

Police Sergt. Brown and Mrs. Brown, accompanied by a young lady who will shortly become the bride of P. C. Patterson, are expected to arrive in the city today. Police Sergt. Brown has been holidaying at his home in Scotland.

Mr. R. Gliddon is expecting word every day from two of the Conservatory teachers, Miss Killmaster and Miss Adamson, who left during the summer to visit in Europe. At the last writing Miss Adamson was in Scotland and Miss Killmaster was in Dresden, where Mrs. Seward and Miss Gladys Seward are supposed to be. Some anxiety is felt for their safety. Several days ago a despatch was received stating that Mr. Killmaster, a brother of Miss Killmaster, had been arrested as a spy but this was later denied.

The following is from today's Globe:

London, Ont., Aug. 31.—The parents of Miss Florence Egglestone, a London violinist staying abroad, received a letter today, dated Berlin, August 12, in which the young lady said she was perfectly safe, but did not know when she would be home, as she had tried in vain to get out, as had also Miss Killmaster, sister of Mr. Fred Killmaster, organist of St. Paul's Cathedral. There were 125,000 Americans in Berlin on the day Miss Egglestone wrote. Her letter was posted by an American refugee at London, England.

Mrs. E. D. Storey has returned to Ottawa.

Dr. Greer has returned to the city after spending a vacation at Gore's Landing, and has resumed practice.

HERE AND THERE

The sinking of the Kaiser Wilhelm Der Grosse was a big stroke in favor of England's supremacy of the sea.

* * *

The Bank of Montreal is using the city right in a needy time, when money is at a premium.

* * *

The arrangement with the Bank of Montreal enables the city to take over the power plant for Hydro-Electric purposes this month.

* * *

Paris will have lost all her style if besieged by one of those German mobs.

* * *

Many citizens have been leaving Paris before the supposed attack begins, and this is a wise policy. In the event of the city being hemmed in by Germans, the less people who are not in the fighting lines, the better. As is always the case, food will never hold out and the besieged must surrender or fight their way to success.

* * *

In all probability many workmen have their bank account, but if thrown out of work for any lengthy period this winter it will be sorrowly depleted.

Little Johnnie and Susie were up early this morning. What for? Why this is the opening day for the halls of learning, and once more they must labor over the trials and intricacies of gaining knowledge to fit them for their place in this old world.

* * *

Many little boys and girls did some quaking in their shoes this morning—they were making their first start on the rocky road of learning.

Undoubtedly this war means better times for the farmers. All that he markets will soon be worth its weight in gold.

* * *

Watch your stray nickels — you may need them to help fight Germany.

* * *

Men's headgear is taking a rise, according to fall styles—the low set Derby and soft hat will soon be a thing of the past. Crowns are assuming great heighth, while the brims are rather narrow.

* * *

Jellicoe is a terror for 'is size, but hurrah for Beatty. Nothing like delivering the goods.

It's about the truth that the world will know where the Kaiser's mob passed—even the grass will not come to life again.

The flight to their winter quarters in the south has begun by many of our fair little chirpers. It's a mystery to many naturalists why they are making such an early departure when the land is still full of good dinners, and the sun is shining. Is it an early fall, or are they afraid of the Germans attacking Canada?

The drowning casualties will continue until ice sears over the water—and then some adventurous person will be walking on the ice before he should.

Indications on Monday at the Toronto Union Station were that the influx of Exhibition visitors was as large as last year.

There's a piece of meat on exhibition in England that has been kept on cold storage for 18 years. Why not feed it to the Germans?

CHANGES ON THE TEACHING STAFFS

Pupils to Commence Their Studies Tomorrow Morning

The public schols re-opened this morning, with a good attendance of pupils, and the staffs of teachers all on hand.

There have been a number of changes on the public school staffs.

Miss E. Brown has been transferred from the King Edward to the Queen Mary, to take the place of Miss Seymour, who resigned.

Mr. Munro has been added to the South Central staff, and Miss Voaden has taken the place of Miss Florence Jackson on the same staff.

A number of changes have taken place in the King Edward staff. Miss C. Adams, Miss M. Thompson and Miss L. G. Wilson replace Misses Totton, Brown and E. Thompson, who resigned in June, and Miss B. Read takes Miss E. Brown's place on the same staff.

No changes have taken place in the Central, Queen Alexandra and King George staffs.

After making promotions, the schools were dismissed, to begin work to-morrow morning.

PARTY RETURN FROM TRIP TO OLD COUNTRY

Mrs. Breadman, London Street, Mrs. Simpson, Lake Street, and Mrs. Moynes of Sherbrooke Street, have recently returned from England. They left on the 30th of May for England and were on the next sailing ship for England to the ill-fated Empress, having sailed on the Alunia. They passed over the spot where the Empress sank and many were the heavy hearts on the big liner, several having relatives on the Empress. Their experiences in England during the latter part of ther visit were many. Mrs. Breadman was in Aldershot when the water was poisoned by Germans, and just by a lucky discovery was the lives of many people saved. England was in a martial state of law, to travel any distance one was obliged to have a passport, and then a traveller's movements were closely watched.

Many of the citizens have soldiers billeted with them for which they receive the handsome payment of 9 pence a day—although the soldiers furinsh their own food but citizens must provide a bed and look after cooking their food in many cases.

Anything the army saw fit to confiscate for the rest of the militia was promptly done. One did not know—at any minute their motor car might be taken or several of their horses. The army pays for these things which they confiscate, but the loss of a favorite horse or a good car is decidedly disconcerting.

The three ladies had much difficulty in leaving England, all large ships were taken into the naval service, but finally they booked on the Ascania and amidst shrouded port holes and lights they stole out of the port of Newport and up the English channel, not having any armored cruiser to escort them. They came safely across the Atlantic, without any mishaps, although rumors of German vessels skulking about in the distance were rife on board ship.

The three ladies were glad to get back to their homes in Canada, where the military manoeuvres are not being executed in quite so earnest a manner as in England.

FRENCH TURCOS DATE FROM CRIMEAN WAR

The French Turcos now guring in upper Alsace, are native Algerian troops, with a record for dash and courage that dates back to the Crimea.

They are an offshoot from the famous Zouave corps organized in Algeria by France 85 years ago.

There are four regiments of Turcos and every man in them is a native Algerian. Three of these regiments are stationed in Algeria, but the fourth, known as the Turco Zouaves of the Imperial Guard, always has been kept in France.

It doubtless is this Turco imperial guard that is now facing the soldiers of the Kaiser in Alsace. In the Crimea the Turco regiments distinguished themselves by their fearlessness, perfect discipline, and marvelous endurance. They added greatly to their fame in the Franco-Prussian war, especially at the battle of Fraschwiller, in a charge of conspicuous gallantry against the Germans.

In the great review of the French army on the Longchamp race course last summer the Turco regiment was accorded an enthusiastic demonstration by the vast crowd that numbered half a million persons.

Following is the text of H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught's personal appeal to the people of Canada in behalf of the Patriotic Fund:

APPEAL.

In response to urgent appeals from many parts of the Dominion, I inaugurated the Canadian Patriotic Fund, the object of which is to provide for the needs of the wives, families and dependent relatives of those who go to the front to fight the battles of Great Britain and her Allies. Unless generous-minded citizens come to their aid, there will be, during the coming winter, much hardship in many families, owing to the absence of the bread-winner. I have the greatest confidence that those who are in a position to give, need but the opportunity of doing so, and that the response will be widespread and generous.

During the past few days the Canadian Patriotic Fund has been duly organized; a strong executive, representing the whole Dominion, has been appointed, and a central bureau established at Ottawa.

I sincerely hope that in each city and town throughout the Dominion, branches of this organization may be formed, full particulars of which can be had by addressing the Honorary Secretary, H. B. Ames, M.P., Ottawa.

By co-operating and harmonizing benevolent efforts in this way, the danger of overlapping on the one hand, or neglecting deserving communities, on the other hand, may be met and overcome. I am convinced that all Canadian hearts will go out to their brave fellow-citizens who have gone to the front.

A prompt and hearty response to this appeal will put all anxiety at rest about those near and dear to them, and will also afford to those who cannot go an opportunity of doing their duty to Canada and the Empire.

(Signed) ARTHUR,
President Canadian Patriotic Fund.

The government of Canada will supplement this fund by a large amount. It would be well for Peterborough to handle its fund in connection with the above. Under these auspices the people of every municipality will be sure that efficient superintendence will prevent confusion and delay. The mayor of Peterborough will represent the fund here.

Funds subscribed in any locality will go wholly to that locality if desired, and part of the government contribution as well.

Why Armies Can't go Around Forts

Why not go around the fort instead oftrying to storm it? Why not circle the ramparts and proceed swiftly onward with the army intact, leaving the soldiers in the fort, after a manner of speaking, holding the sack as well as the fort?

An officer in the cavalry of the United States army explained to the Kansas City Star why such veranda strategy isn't used, and why it cannot be used. The officer, mindful of certain sections of the army code, speaks anonymously.

"If it is a mountainous country, the fort would be placed in the pass, the only road through which an invading army could travel," he explained. "There would be no fortification either side, but it would be impossible to move an army with its guns and supplies over the mountains. A single man would have a hard time making the trip.

"Suppose the country were level and the forts were 40 or 50 miles apart. In that case it apparently would be easy for the army to pass between the strongholds. The army tries it. The defenders of the country throw up field fortifications between the forts. Behind every rock and roll in the ground a man with a gun is hidden. Rifle pits are dug hastily. The invaders encounter opposition, but, perhaps, they sweep on.

"Then, this would happen: the forces from the forts would sweep out across the rear and cut off the base of supplies. The invaders would be without food and the men would have no time for sleep.

"In two days the organization would be destroyed and the enemy's cavalry approaching from the rear would cut the invaders to bits. Soldiers without food and denied sleep can't fight. Men remember their discipline best on full stomachs. An army cut off from its base of supplies would fall apart and be an easy prey for a much smaller force.

"It is better to take the fort, if possible. The communication with the rear, where the supplies are is thus interrupted and most of the opposing force is driven ahead. It's good war policy to take a fort, but it is the epitome of folly to attack as the Germans did at Liege.

Siege guns were made to reduce fortifications, yet the Germans tried it with infantry and cavalry sweeping across an open space in the face of a terrific fire. The German artillery was unable to cover the advance of the other forces because the Belgians hold the field mapped like a checker board and smashed the opposing guns. The Germans, on the other hand, were trying to find the range with shells dropping in their midst.

"Lances and sabres were matched against artillery with disastrous results. The field in front of the forts was covered with barbed entanglement that delayed the Germans as effectively as gun fire."

NOTES OF THE DAY

(The Westminster Gazette.)

The proceedings in the Canadian Parliament yesterday furnish conclusive evidence—though none was necessary—of the whole-hearted way in which Canada supports the Mother Country in the present crisis. In the House of Commons both Sir Robert Borden and Sir Wilfrid Laurier made eloquent speeches on one and the same note. The choice this country had to make was between war and a dishonourable peace. "Today throughout the universe," said Sir Wilfrid Laurier, "there is not a British subject who is not prouder of his British citizenship than before." "We are British subjects, and we are face to face with the consequences that are involved in that proud title." Sir Robert Borden declared that after reading the White Paper he was convinced that no Government ever made a more whole-hearted attempt to keep the peace. These speeches in Parliament merely reflect a feeling which is being made clear in a thousand practical ways. Nothing is so helpful and encouraging as the way in which the whole Empire has rallied to the flag. We are not in the least surprised that it should be so, but we are not the less proudly appreciative.

In the very remarkable aid which all parts of the Empire are rendering in the war nothing is more interesting that the gifts in kind which are being offered and gratefully accepted. At present this list of gifts in kind stands as follows:

Canada—1 million bags (98 lb.) of Canadian wheat.

India—1 million bags of jute.

Alberta—Half a million bushels of Canadian oats.

Quebec—4 million pounds of Canadian cheese.

It all reminds us of the days when tithes were paid in kind. Certainly these Imperial war times are voluntary in origin.

An order has been issued by the King in council restricting the circulation of certain newspapers amongst aliens. The article reads:

(1) The circulation among alien enemies of any newspaper, wholly or mainly in the language of a state, or any part of a state, at war with his Majesty is prohibited, unless the permission in writing of a Secretary of State has been first obtained, and such conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State are complied with.

(2) Any person publishing any newspaper for circulation in contravention of this Order shall be deemed to have acted in contravention of this Order, and where a Secretary of State is satisfied that any newspaper has been, or is about to be, published for circulation in contravention of this Order, he may authorize such persons as he thinks fit to enter, if needs be by force, any premises, and to seize any copies of the newspaper found theron, and also any type or other plant used or capable of being used for the printing or production of the newspaper, and to deal with any articles so seized in such manner as the Secretary of State may direct.

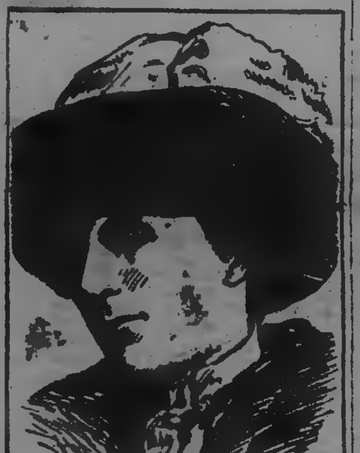
A CANADIAN POETESS OF RARE LYRIC GENIUS

Miss Marjorie Pickhall at an Early Age Won a Competition For the Best Poem.

It is true that as a nation Canadians are greatly concerned with material things. But, although the world outside may not be aware of it, in company with our absorption in wheat, railways, and industrialism, we have in Canada almost a romantic hope and longing for the birth of genius. Thirteen years ago, at the Christmas season, a company of people started out from Toronto to travel a number of miles by railway to a wedding. The last guest to come on board the train was a newspaper editor, and he brought with him a paper containing the announcement of a competition for a prize poem which had been conducted by the newspaper with which he was associated. The poem which had received the prize was printed in the young people's department of the paper. It was quite an uncommon poem and had been written by a very young girl. Her name was Marjorie Pickthall. Such competitions are common enough affairs, but as the editor said, it really seemed this time as if the newspaper had discovered a genius. Should this come true, it was perfectly plain that the people who listened to the poem were happier in the prospect than citizens of an older country than Canada could possibly be in the advent of a new genius in poetry.

In the autumn of 1913 there appeared under the auspices of the University Magazine, which is the foremost Canadian review, a volume of poems by Miss Pickthall, the quality of which is held to justify all that has been hoped from this young poet. The title of the volume is "The Drift of Pinions."

Miss Marjorie Lowrie Christie Pickthall was born in London, Eng. When she was seven years old she came to Canada, and from that time on lived in Toronto with her father and mother. Her father, Mr. Arthur C. Pickthall, is the son of a Church of England clergyman. His half-brother, Mr. Marmaduke Pickthall, is a well-known writer and author of fiction, remarkable for their vivid Eastern coloring. Of these the best known is his first success, Said the Fisherman. But Mr. Marmaduke Pickthall lived for several years in the Near East, and has studied all his local color close at hond. Miss Marjorie Pickthall produces the same fascination of Eastern coloring, although she has never lived except in England and Canada. It seems as if there must be some strain of descent which explains this remarkable sympathy and understanding.



MISS MARJORIE PICKTHALL.

The young poet is an only child. A very extraordinary bond of affection and sympathy existed between her and her mother. Mrs. Pickthall, before her marriage, was a Miss Helen Mallard, and came from a family closely connected with the English naval service. Many of the Mrs. Pickthall's ancestors had been sea-faring men.

Miss Pickthall was educated at home by her mother, and at Bishop Strachan's school in Toronto. When her school days were over she continued to write poetry which found its way into print almost from the beginning. Her first volume of poetry is made up of poems contributed to publication like The University Magazine, Century, Harpers', Scribners', and The Atlantic. A few years ago Mrs. Pickthall died. This blow overwhelmed the young poet. For a time at least she felt that an occupation different from anything she had yet tried would be of service in helping her to regain her hold on life. For about a year, she acted as one of the librarians in Victorian College Library in Toronto, meanwhile keeping house for her father. She also wrote regularly for The Canadian Courier, her work appearing in a department called The Shadow on the Dial. These contributions are in beautiful prose, imaginative, remote, sensitive, dreams out of which poetry is made. The brief preface to 'The Drift of Pinions' is dated from Victoria College. Before the book was published Miss Pickthall had gone to visit relatives in England, where she still is, sometimes living in London, and in the summer sharing with a cousin, a cottage near Rye in Sussex, close by Salisbury Plains.

Tagging Chauffers

Ottawa Government's System is Elaborate and Thorough.

Of the hundreds of serious automobile accidents which happen in Ontario in a year, only 40 per cent. occur when paid chauffeurs are at the wheel and 60 per cent. when private owners are driving. The fact that there are very few professional chauffeurs in comparison to the number of private persons running cars is said to be responsible for this state of affairs, though the chauffeurs individually drive much more than a private owner.

In order to qualify for driving an intending chauffeur must pass an examination under the Act that "no person shall for hire, pay or gain drive a motor vehicle on a highway unless he is licensed to do so.

An owner also must obtain a permit for his car, but in his case no questions are asked as to ability to run the car. He need not even go personally to the office to get it registered, and he may loan his car to a friend or have anyone else operate it without a particle of formality so long as it is not for pay or hire.

The professional chauffeur's examination takes about an hour. An oral test of 12 or 15 questions is the first section dealing with the Highway Travel Act and the Ontario Motor Vehicles Act. It consists of queries like the following:

For what may a man's license be taken away from him?

What would you do if you met a funeral on a country road?

What is the speed limit in and out of Toronto?

The questions are followed by a drive in the automobile, taxi or truck as the case may be. The official examiner goes along, and the candidate cranks, changes gears, goes down a hill backwards sometimes, cuts several sharp turns and sudden stops, after which, if successfuly performed, he is granted a license.

In making application the candidate must get two photographs of himself, circular in form, one and a half inches in diameter, giving a view of the applicant's face only. The candidate must also answer sixteen questions on the application form such as whether he has ever been convicted of crime accompanied by full particulars. He must also state "whether you have any mental or physical incapacity or infirmity of which you are aware, which would in any way interfere with the proper management and control by you of a motor vehicle? Do you use intoxicant liquors?"

The candidate's character and personal appearance, including color, sex, age, height, color hair, color eyes are also specified. The applicant must state how long he has been operating vehicles and the distance covered, all of which is evidenced by affidavit and accompanied by $1 fee for examination and $2 for the license.

The officials state that the usual length of experience which a chauffeur has somehow obtained before applying, is one month. There is no law regulating this point. If a man can drive the car and pass the test, the license cannot be denied.

This year already 1,800 licenses have been issued for chauffeurs in Toronto and the immediate vicinity. About 50 candidates have been rejected owing to inability to carry out the test.

The contrast of these rules and regulations in regard to chauffeurs as compared to private owners is very distinct. The private owner, when he first buys a car, is assisted by a driver sent out from the firm for one week. In many cases an owner considers himself qualified to drive in much less than a week, and instances have been noted where an owner has run a car alone after a single lesson.

THE FAMOUS BLOND ESKIMOS

London Lancet Discusses Link With Lost Norsemen.

The London Lancet in an unusual editorial raises some picturesque questions concerning the now famous blond Eskimos discovered by Stefansson in the far Arctic. It is believed that these blond Eskimos are the last remnants of the vigorous Icelandic colony of Norsemen who disappeared in the sixteenth century. The writer in The Lancet says:

To medical men the death or decay of white races in hot or distant climates is not less interesting than the degeneration of a family or of individuals. The "Poor Whites" of the West Indies who are the decadent descendants of Cavaliers sent into slavery by Oliver Cromwell, survive lugubriously, pathetic representatives of a once high-hearted class; but other white races have completely disappeared, leaving, behind them only a ruin or two, a few graves, a tradition vaguely repeated by savages, an occasional racial cast-back among yellow or dark-skinned supplanters.

We are thinking more particularly of the Norsemen of southernmost Greenland, who flourished for some 300 years, then fell into decadence, and utterly disappeared toward the close of the fifteenth century. History records that in about the year 985 A.D. Eric Raudi, the Red or Ruddy, an Icelandic outlaw, founded two colonies, Wester and Oestre Bygd, to the west of the southern cape of Greenland, a name of hopeful sound adopted by him to attract colonists.

Eric the Red was a pioneer among European explorer. Though a pagan, he seemed to have been a singularly good man, and he was a careful explorer. It was his son Leif who is credibly supposed to have discovered "Vine-land the Good," or America, with which his people afterward traded. They constituted, in fact, a flourishing trading republic, keeping up their connection with Bergen and with Iceland for centuries.

In 1448 a fleet of "heathen," supposed to be English, attacked them. Then in successive waves they were invaded from the north by the Eskimos, at that time ferocious, and by the Black Death from overseas. Their connection with Europe ceased, and though in 1492 an effort was made to reopen communications with them nothing came of it. In 1496 a bishop, appointed to the Greenland see, sailed, but could not reach it. The last of their bishops died in Europe in 1540. He had never visited them. Their civilization probably flickered out after 1450.

"Darkness falls," says Mr. William H. Babcock, their latest historian, "but the uncertainty and the marked pathos of this chapter of old history makes any item (of information) very welcome."

One such item is a mysterious story of voices, for the colonists were perhaps heard, though not seen, by an Icelandic bishop, Amund of Skalpelt, in the sixteenth century, who was driven by stress of weather so close in shore than his ears caught, or he believed so, from the deck of his ship voices of Norsemen on some track near by, and the passage of cattle and sheep. This was at Heriulfaness, now an Eskimo settlement, with an Eskimo name. The voices from the shadow were the last sign of life given by perhaps the earliest European colonists, forerunners of Columbus.

A man may split his infinitives and still be able to collect his interest.

THE BIRTH OF A RIVER ITS BED MADE TO ORDER

How the St. Lawrence River, the Oldest in the World, Was Formed.

What is the oldest river in the world? The St. Lawrence. It is also one of the few rivers that did not have to make its own bed and has remained unchanged since the very beginning of the American continent.

Try to think of a time when the earth was covered by a mass of water, hot, steaming and often tremendously disturbed by the throes of a globe beneath it that was shrinking because it was becoming cooler. As the globe shrank every particle of the outside was naturally pulled in toward the center, and the hardening crust, which could not be packed any more solidly than it was, had to wrinkle, sinking down here and bulging up somewhere else.

After a time certain of these rising wrinkles, or folds, the thicker or firmer parts of the earth's crust, stood the strain and became permanent ridges. The oldest of them that geologists know and apparently the first that bulged up above the universal ocean and remained high and dry was the broad mass on which Canada now rests. It is a part of the original crust of the earth, and we can see it today wherever it is not covered by newer rocks or soil just as it crystallized and cooled out of the primeval molten material.

This mass formed a broad V from Labrador down to Lake Huron and thence northwestward to Alaska. On account of its shape geologists call it the Canadian shield. It is the oldest land known and apparently the strongest, for there are no signs of any extensive changes in it (except the wearing away of the surface) since it first rolled the ocean off its shoulders.

Off the eastern coast of this primitive continent lay a chain of lofty islands about on the line of the Blue Ridge, the White mountains, the Maine coast and Nova Scotia. Between these islands and the mainland was a troughlike space that ran from eastern Quebec southwestward to Ohio. It was two or three hundred miles wide and filled with a shallow sea, and just outside the island chain was the great hollow that held the Atlantic ocean.

Time went on. For ages the straining and cracking of the shrinking globe, earthquakes, sun and frost, pounding surf, running water, blowing gales, ice—all labored to tear down the mountains and carry the wreckage of rocks and dust away into the valleys and seas. In this way vast masses of rock in layers of shales, sandstones, and what not, were laid down in that narrow, troughlike sea between the chain of islands and the continent.

All these "sedimentary" rocks were soft and weak as compared with the solid old granites deeply rooted on either side of them, and the trough itself, a sagging fold, was a line of weakness in the crust. As the load of deposits became heavier and heavier the floor of this trough slowly yielded, and as it sank toward the heated region below the underside melted and grew thinner and thinner.

That could not go on forever, and soon the continual shrinking of the globe and the enormous pressure of the weight of the ocean became irresistible. The Canadian shield was immovable, so the rock in the trough began to bulge or crumple all along its length. Gradually, not all at once, but by slow and varying movements, those folds were squeezed up, which in their broken and worn down form we know as the Appalachian mountains.

Toward the south there was room for this action to be rather gentle and regular, but in the far northeast the trough was narrow, and the soft rocks were set on edge, overturned and splintered against the solid continent.

Very early in the struggle a great fracture of the earth's crust occurred here along a curving northeast and southwest line. It left a deep and broad trench between the crushed and displaced rocks of the trough and the granite shore of the Canadian shield. Into this trench rushed all the interior waters of the continent, draining away to the sea, and the St. Lawrence river was born! There, no doubt, it will remain as long as the earth keeps its present form.

At that time there was no gulf of St. Lawrence. The land extended out to a coast line that stretched unbroken from Nova Scotia to Labrador. The present gulf is the result of a sinking of the coast region. Most of it is very shallow, but a chart of soundings shows the ancient river bed as a channel winding out between Newfoundland and Cape Breton to the deep ocean.—Youth's Companion.

"Fussy" About His News.

Another sample of "the meanest man" was seen on King street, Toronto, the other day before Britain declared war on Germany, just opposite the Confederation Life Building. He drove along the street in an automobile and heard the newsboys shouting "Extra Special" when the first editions of the papers were published. He pulled a cent out of his pocket, held it out and as the boy was handing him a paper he asked "Has war been declared?" The boy said it had not been declared, and the motorist thereupon put the cent back in his pocket and drove on.

Sure Death To Touch It.

At a little dinner in the Garrison Club, Quebec, the talk had turned for a while on the vicissitudes of Canadian newspapers, but had drifted away to other matters. Major O'Meara told a story of four Russians who were shocked to death by the same live wire. Major O'Meara told it very graphically, describing in detail how one man after another had grasped the wire thinking that the previous victim was only stunned.

"Great heavens!" said Maurice Joy, of The Montreal Star. "What a horrible story! It reminds me of the history of The Montreal Herald."

McCARTHY IS A JUDGE

Ex-M.P. Raised to Supreme Court of Alberta.

Maitland S. McCarthy, formerly member of Parliament for Calgary was during the week appointed by the Borden Government to one of the judgeships of the Supreme Court of Alberta. The new judge is one of the most brilliant of the young lawyers of the western provinces, industrious and honest. While in the House of Commons at Ottawa he was an exceptionally useful and hard-working member and one who when he addressed the House spoke wisely and with marked effect.

The new Supreme Court judge of Alberta is of Irish descent and is a son of his honor Judge Thomas A McCarthy and a nephew of the late Dalton McCarthy, one of the most brilliant lawyers Canada ever produced. He was born at Orangeville, Ont., in 1872 and was educated at Trinity College School, Port Hope and at Trinity University, Toronto. He took his B.A. in 1893 and his M.A. in 1895. He subsequently studied law and has practiced his profession with marked success for some years at Calgary. He has for some time been generally recognized as one of the leaders of the Bar in that district. He is a governor of Trinity College School and of the Western University. He was returned in the Conservative interests for Calgary for the House of Commons in 1904 and sat until 1911. He declined the leadership of the local Conservative party in Alberta in 1909. While in the House of Commons he took a very prominent part in the discussion of leading public issues and he displayed a thorough knowledge of all public questions. He is chairman of the Amateur Athletic Association of Alberta and he was a member of the Canadian Olympic Committee of 1908.

IN JUJU LAND

Building a Railroad With Fifty Thousand Cannibals

A new railroad is being constructed by the British through the territory of Nigeria, in West Africa.

It will penetrate the regions known as "Juju-land," so-called because the inhabitants were long enthralled by a horrible idol known as "Long Juju."

It will be built by cannibal natives who have shown themselves the most intelligent and industrious workmen it will open up the last region of Africa where white men have not yet settled.

The new line into Nigeria will be 530 miles in length and will take four or five years to build. It will cost about $15,000,000. It is being built by the Colonial Government, of which the head is Sir Frederick Lugard. The country which is to be opened up is rich in palm oil and coal, which the British expect to yield a handsome revenue on the money invested in the road.

Fifty thousand natives have been hired for the work of building the road. They will work under the direction of British engineers and foremen.

These natives of Nigeria are noted for their obstinate cannibalism. Although the practice has been suppressed wherever possible by the British officials, the Nigerians in the depths of this wild country frequently find an opportunity to indulge in their peculiar taste. They attack an isolated village, destroy the houses and feast upon the inhabitants.

Sometimes they take their victims to a lonely part of the forest, keep them in a corral and fatten them up for a great banquet. Several times the white men have accidentally stumbled upon the hiding place of these destined victims of the cannibals.

The white engineers and workmen will have to guard themselves carefully, for the cannibals believe that white flesh is the greatest kind of meat. By eating it they imagine that they will acquire the cleverness and other qualities of the deceased person. Very few natives are daring enough now to attack white men, but there is no knowing what they might do in a moment of excitement. Half a dozen white men in a jungle 500 miles from help may be in a delicate situation.

Danger from lions and other wild animals will be very great. During the building of the Uganda railway hundreds of laborers were carried off by lions, and in recent months the beasts have walked into railroad cars and snatched off defensive travelers.

In Nigeria lions are even more numerous than in Uganda. Their numbers depend largely on the amount of food they can find. Elands, antelopes and other game of various sizes are so abundant in Nigeria that the lions find inexhaustible food. Sometimes as many as 50 or 60 lions lurk in a patch of jungle a few acres in extent, near a drinking place where the food animals gather.

The new railroad will run along the river banks and will cross the favorite hunting places of the lions. There will be a tremendous disturbance among the animals.

Eskimo Customs.

The word marriage is absolutely unknown among the Eskimos; the same with the words "child" and "family." M. Vanasse writes that he managed to make himself understood by asking first if they had an iglo, a koney, a pik-ki-nini. Now the head of the iglo is Osky; koney is his wife, and the pick-ki-nini the children. Each child has his name and constitutes by himself a separate unit.

Here is an example: the Osky Nassou has three sons, namely Ik-ton-ta, Kak-ton and Pre-mik-ton. We do not say Ik-ton-ta Nassou, etc., as we say in the Christian world John Smith, etc. In twenty years from this, when a new generation will have grown up, who will know that Ik-ton-ta and his brothers are the sons of old Nassou? With such a system it is difficult to preserve family traditions. As to the month of their birth, it is a mystery to themselves, they do not know this subdivision of the year. In reality there are only two seasons for the Eskimo: "summer" and the ice season "winter." As the winter lasts nine or ten months of the year the great number of births is in winter. The same difficulty exists as to the number of animals slaughtered or captured by the hunter during the year.

Taking a Rise Out of Amery.

They were in the throes of the army incident in the British House of Commons, and young Mr. Amery, M.P., was daily adding to his reputation as the chief heckler of Premier Asquith.

One afternoon when Mr. Amery had distinguished himself by the unusual number and cogency of his questions, a tall figure arose on the Liberal side, and in polished accents, even more polished than Mr. Amery's, made the following remarks:

"Arising out of that question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Right Hon. the Premier what is the status of the disappearing officer, the new class of officer we have in Ulster?"

The tall figure was Hamar Greenwood, M.P., and he was taking a rise, a good-natured all-in-the-family rise, out of Mr. Amery, whose brother-in-law he happens to be.

BREAKING THE LIMIT

An Engineer's Ride For Life and Lives

By JARED L. FULLER

Pug Donaldson, who had been the roundhouse foreman so long that he thought he owned the entire system, gave out his opinion of Lannigan at the end of the latter's first week on the M. and S. P. And this was it:

"That Grandfather Longlegs never 'll get to hold down a passenger lever on this road, whatever he's done back east. It ain't in him."

Then the old man chalked up the limit on the side of his little smoke discolored office, spat with emphasis and —well, that closed the subject as far as Pug was concerned.

I reckon if Lannigan hadn't begun by blowing about his eastern record he'd made more of a hit with us.

He was a tall, awkwardly built man, with a shock of sandy hair and a smooth, humorous face. His legs and arms were remarkably long and thin and old Donaldson's sobriquet stuck to him. "Daddy Longlegs" seemed to fit.

Lannigan got a freight, and the worst bunch of scrap iron on the road, which, in moments of enthusiasm, Pug called an engine. If there was any man handicapped in the race to break the limit it was the new man from the land of tenderfeet.

The system of advancement followed by the M. and S. P. did not include length of service or "pull." Just one thing counted—the ability of a driver to get speed out of his machine over the worst track the law ever allowed man to lay.

The country was new when the M. and S. P. was surveyed and laid down. It had been a race between the M. and S. P. and another corporation to see which should reach the terminating town where connection could be made with the Pacific road first.

We won, but at a cost which crippled the road financially for years, and the renewing of the first roadbed was a slow and laborious job.

We ran one fast passenger—the Limited. The through mail cars were attached to that train too.

It was a continual fight all through the year to keep that one train alone up to the schedule called for by the contract with the government.

If any man on any other train showed the ability to get speed out of his engine he was watched, and if he "broke the limit" he stood a good chance of displacing the driver then running the mail train.

The M. and S. P. in those days was a "farmers' railroad." Most of the way stations were merely huts and water tanks in forest clearings, tapping a certain section of farming country stretching westward of the line.

Lannigan had been with us since the winter before. He was a good driver, but not brilliant. Anybody but a prejudiced old fool like Donaldson would have recognized his good points, but you never could stir the roundhouse foreman when he'd once made up his mind.

Lannigan had learned the road and his engine. If he followed another train he was on its heels all the time and got himself well cursed for it.

Some of us began to see that there really was more to the eastern man than we had believed.

That fall was dry, the sun and wind all day and every day drying the sap out of the trees and brush and burning the leaves brown before the frost could make them pretty.

By and by the inevitable happened. Fires began to light up the heavens nightly, and by day streaks of blue smoke hid the tops of the higher hills.

Reports reached us from all directions of families burned out and settlements threatened, but for a week the conflagrations kept away from the line of the road.

Then suddenly one Sunday morning a flood of fire swooped down the mountain side and crossed the tracks some miles south of Yardsley.

The Limited came through somewhat scorched, and the next day traffic on the road between Lattell and the junction was cut off altogether.

This shut off several settlements as well as Yardsley, except by telegraph. The wires were still working, and our operators stuck to their posts like the brave fellows they were.

Pretty near every living soul in a hundred square miles of territory lit out for less dangerous ground. But Yardsley was caught napping, and its 300 people were practically hemmed in by the fiercest forest fire the state had ever experienced.

The entire system of the M. and S. P. was pretty well tied up. We had pulled freight as near the fire line as we dared, and the sidetracks were about full of waiting cars.

The fire was still burning fiercely beside the roadbed in more than one place, and we weren't asked to try to pull a train through to the junction.

Naturally there were plenty of locomotives and plenty of drivers at Lattell that day when the news came from the Yardsley operator. It was his last dispatch, for he had remained until it was too late to escape by any track through the forest, and there wasn't even a handcar left at the station.

"Wind changed. Fire will reach us in one hour. Three hundred people in danger. Can you reach us?"

That was the message which the yardmaster read to us from the steps of the station at Lattell. He was pale, and his hands shook as he spelled the words out slowly.

He didn't have any need to tell us the danger. Nor did he call for volunteers. To try to get to Yardsley was like buying a through ticket for death and be done with it.

We stood around and discussed the terrible news and did nothing—except Lannigan.

He appeared at Pug Donaldson's window and, leaning his arms on the sill, looked in with the same humorous twist to his lean features.

"Them three boxes there empty?" he asked, jerking his head backward toward the sidetrack.

Donaldson nodded.

"I'm going to hitch my engine on to 'em. Jimmy and me'll see if we can git down there and beat that barbecue. Gimme a clear switch!"

The roundhouse foreman only stared; but, after Lannigan had disappeared from the window, he rushed to the door and yelled after him:

"Hey, you, Grandfather Longlegs! You'll be fried like a pancake on a griddle!"

But Lannigan only grinned and leaped aboard the old engine. We didn't know what he was up to until he'd coupled on the three empty box cars and rattled away over the switches and out of the yard.

"He's making a bluff," some of us said.

Others who respected the pluck it took to approach the fire thought he'd never get through, but would waste his steam for nothing.

"Well, Jimmy, it's going to be a hot run," the long legged Yankee told his stoker as they neared the first belt of fire. "You fill up the furnace, and I'll slow down so you can jump. I don't want to take another man to perdition with me."

"Oh, I guess I'll stop," says Slosson, kind of shamefaced.

Then they shook hands on it, and from that moment neither questioned the other's intention of sticking to his job.

But Jimmy had loaded the old engine for bear all right before they reached the fire line. She was whirling miles under her drivers at a rate to beat even our one fast train, and the empty boxes behind were dancing like mad over the rough roadway.

"We're getting there, Jimmy!" sings out Lannigan at last. "Shin over into the water tank and fling a pail or so over me when you get a chance."

He stood out on the running board with a hand on the lever, his cap visor shielding his eyes from the smoke and flying sparks, peering ahead as best he could at the rails. Jimmy, up to his neck in the tank, flung pail after pail of water over his long figure.

Suddenly the engine seemed to run into a veritable wall of flame. It extended far across the roadbed, and it wrapped the train about in a living, seething mantle as she rushed on.

It seemed as though no man could go through that sea of fire alive, but when the old engine staggered out of the fire belt Lannigan still stood upright at the lever.

His sparse mustache, his eyebrows, his shock of sandy hair were gone. He was as bald as a parrot, and his clothing was afire in a dozen spots. But he turned a horrible grin upon Jimmy and waved his hand.

"Give us another bucket!" he croaked. And the stoker climbed out of the tank, more dead than alive himself, and put out the burning garments.

Then they reached Yardsley.

I guess if any two men were ever welcomed as angels straight from heaven it was Lannigan and his stoker, though they must have looked a deal more like devils from the pit.

Two hundred and ninety people, who had given up their last hope of continued existence, piled into those three box cars like cattle. The doors were closed, and then it was up to Lannigan and Jimmy to run them back to Lattell.

The old engine was reversed, and back through the awful belt of flame and smoke she went with the three boxes.

Lannigan certainly showed that day what he could do when he had the right of way.

Scorched almost to a cinder one instant and saturated the next, Lannigan stood at his post and brought the rescue train through to Lattell. The box cars were afire and the passengers half suffocated when they arrived.

Jimmy was pretty nearly drowned in the tank, and we picked Lannigan off the engine just as he caved completely.

"Daddy Longlegs" was some time in the hospital and came plaguy near losing his sight, and all because of that run. But if a man was ever popular along the line of the old M. and S. P. his name was Lannigan.

The first day he got down to the yard the super happened to be there himself. The line was open again and everything running smoothly by that time, only the miles upon miles of charred forest and the heap of ashes where Yardsley had stood telling of the forest fire.

"Humph!" said the super, trying to pick out the engineer's hand which was least bandaged to shake. "I hear you've been doing some tall running down here, Lannigan."

And the driver grinned sheepishly as though he had done something to be ashamed of.

"Donaldson's got your record chalked up on his office wall over the Limited. Guess we'll have to find you something better than a freight to pull out when you're well enough."

And Lannigan got the mail train the next fortnight.

The Furies.

Greek mythology created some female deities who were supposed to inhabit the lower regions and visit the earth to avenge supposed wrongs and punish their enemies. Black sheep were sacrificed to them at night by the light of torches, and they were represented as horrid looking creatures, wearing long, black robes, with snaky locks, bloodshot eyes and clawlike nails. Sometimes they had snakes or torches in their hair and carried scourges or sickles in their hands. The Greeks called these imaginary creatures Erinyes, and the Romans, adopting the same idea, called them furies. Vergil represents them as willing agents employed by the higher gods to stir up mischief, strife and hatred on the earth.—Philadelphia Press.

The Novelist Rebuked.

The late George Alfred Townsend (Gath) was lunching in New York one day when a novelist of the realist-pessimist school began to growl about marriage.

Gulping his drink and bolting his boiled beef and cabbage, the novelist in a long harangue proved conclusively that marriage was a failure.

When he had finished Gath gazed at him mildly and said:

"I tell you what it is, Ed—when a man thinks marriage is a failure it's pretty blamed certain that his wife thinks so too."

Worsted.

It is stated that worsted was first spun at Worstead, Norfolk, England, in the year 1340. Stockings made of this material were at first very cheap and used by the poorer people. Shakespeare uses the word contemptuously in the phrase, "Worsted stocking knave."—London Telegraph.

"Curing" Diseases.

"What is a cure?" asks the editor of the London Lancet in reproving doctors for the loose way in which they use the word. "Nothing ever gets completely well" is an aphorism of a great medical philosopher.

Only when the cause of a diseased condition has been removed, its effects neutralized and the organism protected against its activities in the future have we the right to speak of the "cure" of the patient, is the editor's opinion. Immunity conferred by such a cure, he says, may be only temporary. "Where a disease process is only limited or shut off and its further spread prevented, while the causal agent remains, we should speak of arrest, but not of cure. Where grave organic damage has occurred and function has been restored by vicarious activities we should speak of the result as one of repair or compensation."

HOW TO WIN BATTLES

More Victories are won by siege tactics than by assaults

Apply this to business and see what it means: it means that continuous and steady advertising is more restful than campaigns that come and go, come and go with long intervals in between.

For an advertiser with goods to sell to suspend his selling effort now is to make conditions worse for himself, and is no sign of that courage which is supposed to possess every Canadian heart in these war times.

Win and hold your position in business by steadfastness of attack.

Sterling, Conn.—"I am a girl of 22 years and I used to faint away every month and was very weak. I was also bothered a lot with female weakness. I read your little book 'Wisdom for Women,' and I saw how others had been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and decided to try it, and it has made me feel like a new girl and I am now relieved of all those troubles. I hope all young girls will get relief as I have. I never felt better in my life."—Miss BERTHA A. PELOQUIN, Box 116, Sterling, Conn.

Massena, N. Y.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I highly recommend it. If anyone wants to write to me I will gladly tell her about my case. I was certainly in a bad condition as my blood was all turning to water. I had pimples on my face and a bad color, and for five years I had been troubled with suppression. The doctors called it 'Anemia and Exhaustion,' and said I was all run down, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound brought me out all right."—Miss LAVISA MYRES, Box 74, Massena, N.Y.

HARD ON CANADA

Nephew of Charles Kingsley Hands Us Some Knocks

Mr. Lionel Kingsley, nephew of the late Charles Kingsley, the famous author of "Westward Ho!" gives a highly unfavorable account of Canada in a London paper; referring particularly to Manitoba. He says:

"Canada is undoubtedly a land of mighty opportunities, but not for the poor immigrants. Its greatest prizes are for the twenty men who are said to control the country and are out to boost it. All capitalists are welcome, and can make their way. Huge, crude, Canada stews in an atmosphere of selfconceit, generated by its press. It is essentially a land of promises.

"One of the baits held out is "free homesteads." This is an insidious lure. "Free land" is nothing but an illusion. Nothing of any value is given away in Canada. That might have been so in the past; but now all the best land has been taken up or held by big city men for the rise in values which they are always certain will come. Every Canadian is an optimist; if he were not he could not endure the country. A great deal of the scum of Europe enters the sinkhole of the West, Winnipeg. Even more rightly now this city is worthy of its Indian name of "Dirty Water."

The present social system of Manitoba is one which the cunning and the strong are forcing on the weak. The wealthy men pile heavy packs on the backs of the immigrants as soon as they enter their charming country.

The present social system is creating slums in Winnipeg and mutilating the lives of little children. It is the very antithesis of brotherliness. It is a crime, for the newcomers expect at least freedom to work out their futures. Instead, they find that all is corrupt, that everyone must graft if he is to succeed; the average immigrant is not naturally a grafter.

"Young as the country is, Canada can put in the shade the wickedness of Chicago. From the time of his arrival, after passing the officials at the Immigration Hall, the newcomer runs the gauntlet of unscrupulous lodging-house keepers or employment agents—if he elects to forswear the attractions of farm life for that, for instance, of a railway gang and construction foremen. The saloon and the low dives, which abound in the North End, make every effort to entrap him. The machine politicians are eager to bribe him, and he usually falls an easy prey to the ward boss.

"The artisan finds little work in the cities. In the wintertime the building trade practically shuts down. This can be well understood, as in a place where concrete is largely used, it is no use trying to work frozen material. Cases have been known where daring builders have run up factories in the wintertime which have promptly fallen down again when the spring came around."

ATLANTIS IS RECALLED; BOOK IS IN PROSPECT

Prof. Schliemann's Son Now in Public Eye—Father of Diplomat Spent Years Excavating the Site of Troy

The recent appointment of Mr. Schliemann to represent the Greek Government at Washington, recalls the dream of his father, Henrich Schliemann, of uncovering Troy, and the story of his fifty years of preparation for digging up the ancient ruins.

He was the son of a pastor with classic tastes, a grocer's boy at 10, a cabin boy, an underwriter, an indigo merchant. But from earliest childhood the story of the Trojan war had exercised a great influence over the future explorer. Of his earliest childhood he writes:—

"My father had often told me with a warm enthusiasm of the tragic fate of Pompeii. He also related to me with admiration the great deeds of the Trojan War and the Homeric heroes, always finding in me a warm defender of the Trojan cause. With great grief I heard from him that Troy had been so completely destroyed that it had disappeared without a trace. My joy may be imagined then, when I received as a Christmas gift a book with an engraving representing Troy in flames, with its huge walls and the Scaean Gate from which Aeneas was escaping with his father.

"I cried out, 'Father, you must surely have been mistaken; if such walls existed they cannot have been completely destroyed; vast ruins of them must still remain, hidden under the dust of ages.' He maintained the contrary, but I was of my opinion and at last we both agreed that I should one day excavate Troy.

"Small wonder that the boy who at eight years had this interest should keep true to the dream of youth. But the story of how he realized that dream half a century later reads more like the chapters of a fatalistic romance than any true biography.

Learning Russian, he was appointed agent of his company at St. Petersburg. Later he embarked in business of his own—the indigo trade. In 1868, at the age of 36, he was able to retire on his income, and now devoted himself to the study of archaeology for ten years. At that time his fortune had increased to an income of approximately $50,000 a year.

"A trip through the Orient resulted in the writing of his first book, "Le Chine et le Japon," and in 1869, after a careful and extensive investigation in Greece, a second volume, entitled "Ithaca, the Peloponnesus, and Troy."

In Greece, before the publication of his second book, he had married Sophie Kastromenos, a remarkable Greek woman of strong character, notable scholarly attainments and considerable wealth. She was in hearty sympathy with his aim, and aided him to such an extent that he expressed himself as being gravely in doubt if his work would have ever been as successful without her untiring interest and assistance.

In 1870, at the age of 48, having received permission of the Sultan, through the office of the American Minister, Schliemann's chance came.

Some idea of the barriers presented by the work itself may be gathered from the excavator's story of the proceedings in his greatest book, "Ilios." He says:

"We had to break through a wall ten feet thick consisting of large blocks of marble, most of which were drums of the Corinthian columns, cemented with lime. We then had to piece the wall of Lysimachus, also ten feet thick and built of large hewn stones, and to force our way through two Trojan walls from five to ten feet in thickness.

"While making this excavation we found a number of large earthen jars from three to six feet high, as well as numerous drums of Corinthian columns and other sculptured blocks of marble. All these must have belonged to the Hellenic buildings."

Schliemann found the great edifice he called the Tower of Ilium — a building nearly 40 feet thick. In turn were unearthed the "Scaean Gates" of Homer and the palace of Priam the king.

The contributions made by the Schliemanns to the archaeological knowledge of the life of Greek antiquity, and, in addition, the increased light thrown on the Homeric poems by the material discovered, are almost inestimable. But not content with the work accomplished Doctor Schliemann turned his attention to Greece proper and succeeded in unearthing the ruins of Mycenae and Tiryns.

Here were discovered the remains of the Lion Gate, the royal tombs, and a number of priceless additions to the world's knowledge of archaic history.

Schliemann died in December, 1890, just before his 58th birthday. Upon fulfilling the conditions prescribed in his will, his grandson, in 1906, received the documents specially prepared by the great archaeologist, and made public enough to let the world know that Doctor Schliemann believed he had discovered a certain clue to the discovery of the fabled Lost Continent, Atlanta. The book, which is to be based on the discoveries, has not yet been published.

A man who is constitutionally late surprised his friends by leaving the house at 1 o'clock to keep a 2 o'clock appointment.

"Jim's watch must be wrong or he wouldn't have started so early," they said. "He will surely be on time today. Where in the world can he be going?"

"He is going to a funeral," volunteered one who knew. "He is one of the pall-bearers. Very seldom are pall-bearers behind time. I have known men who were late on every other imaginable occasion—late for their own weddings even — but if chosen for pall-bearers they always came up to the mark."

Dancing on Talcum Powder.

It has been found by experiment that the best dancing floor is made as follows: Upon the ordinary floor a sheet of rubber half an inch thick is spread; a certain smooth surfaced linoleum is laid over this, and talcum powder is sprinkled upon it every day. The highly polished waxed wood floors of a few years ago are too slippery for the modern dances. The shoemakers soon learned this and introduced pumps with pads of rubber inserted in the soles.

Yearning.

I want to be a granger—
So ran an ancient ditty
By one who was a stranger
To aught except the city,
Who had a peck of notions
That farmers' ways consisted
In going through the motions
And coming home fat fisted.

He thought of gayly hoeing
Tomatoes tall and waving,
Of singing songs and mowing
The lawn that needed shaving,
Of getting bees in training
To fill his pail with honey
And from their efforts gaining
A load of easy money.

For him the plot would thicken
Until it was a winner
If he could raise a chicken
Already cooked for dinner
And pick his bread and butter
On little bushes cunning,
So visitors would mutter,
"My, isn't it just stunning?"

Then ho for scenes exciting,
Out where the grass is waving,
Where plenty comes a-kiting
And properly behaving!
That was the way he put it
When by the thought enchanted,
But back he had to foot it
Before the crops were planted.

There Was a Change.

A Government inspector, entering a rural postoffice, expressed surprise upon seeing a woman at the delivery window. "I was under the impression," said he, "that a man was in charge of this office."

"And so he was," replied the woman sharply, "but I married him."

Britain's Oldest Regiment.

The oldest regiment in the British army is the 1st Battalion Royal Scots (Lothian Regiment), which will move from Allahabad to Rawalpindi at the close of the year. In fact it claims to date from the days of the Roman Legions, the tradition — unsupported by facts of course—being that the regiment was formerly a Highland corps in the service of the Caesars, and that it served in the many wars waged by these potentates. Be that as it may the regiment has a practically unbroken record of service since 1633, the year from which the history of the regiment commences for the purposes of the Army List at all events. In that year a part of the Scottish Guards went to Scotland when Charles I. was crowned King of Scotland and was placed on the British establishment as the Royal Regiment of Foot, returning immediately to France when it was known as "Hepburn's Regiment." The regiment returned to England in 1634, and from that date down to the South African war has seen service all over the world, and has been engaged in practically every important war waged by Great Britain.

LITTLE ANNE IN THE CITY

Her Motive For Leaving It in Haste

By TEMPLE BAILEY

"There!" said the mother as she rose to her feet. "It looks mighty pretty!"

"It certainly does," Anne agreed as she surveyed herself with naive satisfaction in the inadequate mirror.

A coarse straw hat with a pink rose was set on Anne's sunburnt hair. Beneath it the girl's eyes looked out eagerly.

"Oh, mother," she breathed. "I'm glad David's goin' to drive me to the station! He ain't never seen me look like this!"

The rattle of wheels outside took them to the front door, Anne walking a little stiffly in the closeness of her new suit.

"Dave," said the older woman as the mud spattered buggy stopped at the step, "you are early enough. You'll have to wait when you get to the station."

"I didn't want her to miss the train," the boy explained.

But there was another reason for his promptness. When they had left behind the half dozen towheaded youngsters who waved at them from the front gate and the big man who halloed from the field—when they were beyond the sights and sounds of the farm and had come upon the quiet of the forest road he let his horse walk.

"Anne," he began and stopped.

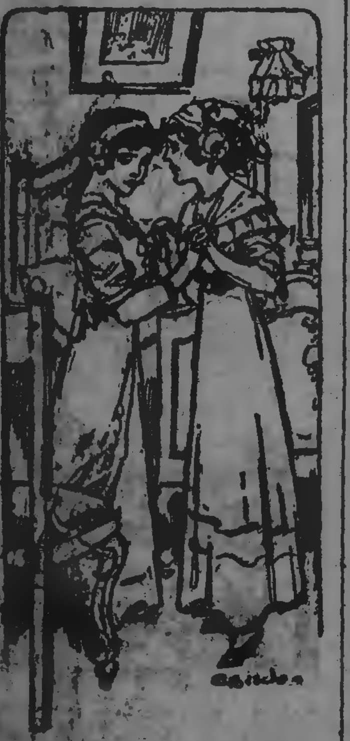
Her glance met his, and she laughed nervously.

"Look here!" he hesitated. "Look here, Anne!"

"I'm lookin'," was her tremulous repartee.

"Look here, ain't you goin' to let me kiss you goodby?"

"Here?" The great trees bending above the road made for them a sanctuary of love. "Here?" she whispered again.



"IT'S DAVE I WANT," SHE CONFESSED.

"Yes. There's so many people at the station!"

"But I ain't never let you kiss me, Dave."

"You ain't never been away before."

"I know; but I'm comin' back in a week."

"Something might happen. Let me kiss you, Anne!"

He dropped the reins, and the old horse stopped. The girl swayed toward him, and he took her in his arms. She was only a sunburnt mountain child, but her eyes shone like stars, her cheeks were as pink as the rose, her lips were warm and sweet. To him she was altogether lovely.

On the platform he warned her:

"Don't you fall in love with any of those city fellows!"

"Of course not," she laughed, conscious of her power.

"You won't?" he urged jealously.

But she gave him no further satisfaction than a coquettish "You'll see!"

At the end of her journey she was met by Margaret Drake. Her father had supplied fresh eggs and butter to the Drakes for ten years, and it had been Margaret's whim to bring the little country maid to town and show her the sights.

Anne was half afraid of the luxury of the claret colored cushions of the limousine, but she was more afraid of the dancing eyes of the young man who had come with Margaret. He was like a being from another world, with his soft, white hands, his smooth, fair skin.

"So this is our mountain rose!" he said, and Anne blushed to the roots of her hair.

When they reached the big house Margaret showed Anne to a room all pink and white and gold and said:

"You can dress for dinner, dear, and then I'll come for you."

Anne gasped.

"I—I haven't any other dress," she stammered.

"Oh!" Margaret apologized. "I never thought of that. But—I have a white gown with a short waist—I could make it fit you, I think."

So it happened that when little Anne came into the dining room that night she created something of a sensation. Margaret had looped up the rough locks with a bit of silver ribbon, and two curls bobbed over one ear and were caught by a white rose. The silken gown swept in folds about the tiny straight figure and hid the awkward feet, while a chiffon scarf made a charitable place of concealment for the red hands.

The young man who had driven home with them came forward eagerly.

"Cinderella?" he murmured, laughing into Anne's startled eyes.

"Don't tease her, Mark," Margaret protested, with a perceptible note of irritation in her voice.

"Is he your beau?" Anne asked her in a dim corner of the library.

The men were smoking on the balcony, which overlooked the Italian garden.

"I'm not sure," Margaret said, with a catch in her voice. "We are not engaged, if you mean that."

"Has he ever kissed you?" Anne demanded.

Out of a long silence Margaret whispered:

"If he had, what then?"

"Because that would show that he wants to marry you. Dave kissed me this mornin' on the mountain, and that means that I'm his!"

"You dear!" Margaret said quickly and turned the subject to other things.

But that night when little Anne was in bed in the pink and white room Margaret came in, looking very beautiful, with her long braids framing the white oval of her face and hanging dark and glossy against the silken folds of her scarlet gown.

"Tell me about Dave," she commanded.

It was a simple little tale, but it breathed of youth and love.

"Mark wants to marry me," Margaret said slowly. "He asked me tonight after you came up."

Little Anne sat up in bed.

"Then it's all settled?"

"No; it isn't settled. I can't be sure of Mark. He knows that I have money and that father has influence, and he is an ambitious young lawyer. Oh, little Anne"—she threw herself down beside the wondering child—"I am afraid it is not love he gives me!"

Little Anne, puzzled by complexities which had never disturbed her pellucid mind, reiterated:

"He wouldn't have asked you if he didn't love you."

In spite of her doubts Margaret was comforted by that simple faith.

Next evening little Anne again wore the white gown. After dinner she sat alone on the balcony with Mark, while Margaret played for them. Below the balcony the garden was asleep under a silver moon. From beyond the stone walls came the soft night sounds of the city streets.

"Do you like it here, little Anne?" Mark asked.

"I like it, but I miss mother and Dave," she told him.

"Dave?"

"I'm goin' to marry him."

"You're much too pretty to marry a countryman."

He threw his cigar away and sat down on the marble coping which encircled the balcony. His change of position brought him just behind her, so that she had to turn to look up at him. He bent toward her suddenly.

"Such a waste of sweetness!" he murmured and kissed the parted lips.

She flung him from her and stood very still and silent in the white moonlight.

"If you were up on the mountain Dave would surely kill you for that," she said at last, and he shrank from her primitive fierceness.

In the other room the music stopped.

"Come here," Margaret called, "both of you!"

Anne went to her swiftly, like a bird flying to cover. Mark followed slowly. When they stood beside her Margaret talked of plans for the next day—a matinee and dinner at Bartin's or the opera and the Russian dancers.

"You—you needn't plan for me," little Anne said. "I'm goin' home."

Margaret stared at her in amazement.

"You promised me a week."

"I'm sorry, but I've changed my mind," little Anne insisted obstinately. "Mother needs me."

But that night she crept into Margaret's room.

"It's Dave I want," she confessed.

They clung together for a moment in the darkness. Then Anne whispered:

"Don't you marry Mark, Margaret."

"Why not?" was the sharp demand.

"Because—oh," she whispered with a shuddering sense of the secret she must not share, "wait till somebody loves you like Dave loves me, Margaret."

The next day Dave, driving to the mail train, found more precious freight.

A soft rain fell on the mountain and made the forest road a thing of moist fragrance and misty vistas. Dave drove the old horse to the place where he had stopped on the morning of little Anne's departure. Then he let the reins drop and held out his arms to his sweetheart. She yielded this time without resistance.

"I ain't ever goin' away from you again, Dave!" Her face was hidden in his rough, wet coat. "I ain't ever goin' away again!"

He laughed with a triumphant sense of possession.

"I knew them city fellows couldn't take you from me," he said. Then, with a sudden savage certainty, he added, "I'd 'a' killed them if they had!"

Town Topics.

Real Oratory.

Apropos of French-Canadian oratory, which is one of the features of the Commons at Ottawa, Tom King of the Press Gallery describes a speech last session by Dr. Paquet, M.P. for L'Islet.

"When I saw him first," says Mr. King, "the doctor's eyes blazed. Foam flecked his lips. His hair bristled. He pounded the desk. He spurned a pile of blue books with a sweep of his hand. He pointed to heaven, describing concentric circles with his arms. He went through the motions of the Giant's Swing. He seemed to be calling down fire from the sky. He levelled a long finger at Sir Robert Borden. He drew a bead on Speaker Sproule. He raked the Opposition benches with a scathing smile. Anon he wept. Still more anon he roared. Words poured from him, a flow of eloquence more thunderous than Montmorency Falls. I did not know what he was saying for at that time I did not understand the language, but I felt that he was dealing with a great national crisis — somebody had thrown the books into the British North America Act or something like that.

"Well," said Mr. King, "I looked in the English version of Hansard a couple of days later to find out what the doctor was talking out. It turned out to be the San Jose scale."

Undue Pressure.

A student named Robbins, when a sophomore in a New Brunswick college, had paid considerable attention to Miss Hay, a fair co-ed in the same institution, but towards the close of the second term he was displaced by a fellow-student named Dobson.

When the college mock trial came on Robbins was one of the parties to the suit, and Dobson was proposed as a juryman.

"I object to Mr. Dobson as a juryman," said the opposing lawyer, now a prominent Manitoba jurist.

"On what ground?" inquired the student judge, with a surprised look, for this was not on the program.

"He is working for Robbins," was the reply.

"Working for Robbins. How's that?"

"Pressing his 'Hay'."

EATS ITS OWN TAIL

Queer Feast of the Tadpole Before It Becomes a Frog.

EVOLUTION OF A POLLYWOG.

Changes That Mark the Transition of This Curious Creature From an Aquatic to an Air Breathing Animal. How It Differs From the Toad.

There is no more interesting creature on earth than a pollywog, or tadpole, for it is a fish in the process of transformation into a land animal. The whole process can be watched if you put a few pollywogs in a milk bottle or jar full of water with some water plants.

In any of the ponds in the parks in the cities or in the pools in the suburbs in the proper season frog spawn can be found. It floats on the water like masses of sago pudding. A handful of this will furnish entertainment for several weeks and will at the same time give a lesson in evolution.

The spawn that floats on the ponds is the eggs of frogs. They lay it in the first warm days of spring, spreading it where the rays of the sun will warm it. Each egg contains a yolk, which is the food of the living germ within, and is coated with black, probably to attract as much heat as possible and at the same time to protect the germ from the penetrating ultra violet rays of the light, which would destroy it. The black yolk is in the center of a mass of transparent jelly, which is there as a protective covering.

If a small mass of spawn be placed in a jar of water and watched daily with an ordinary magnifying glass the black yolk of each egg will presently be seen to assume a sausage-like shape. Gradually this takes the form of a tiny pollywog, which soon begins to wriggle. After a few days these little black bodies wriggle out through the transparent jelly and attach themselves to bits of green sticks or weeds, which should be placed in the jar with them.

For some time they remain attached to such supports by a sucker, waiting for the opening of the mouth. As yet there are no visible eyes, but small stumps on each side of the head will be noticed. These are the gills. The whole skin if examined with a lens will be found to be covered with a sort of animated velvet pile, for its component threads are in constant motion, thereby creating a stream of fresh water to carry on the work of breathing, and a little later these movements will be strong enough to bear the body slowly along, so that locomotion at this stage is like that of the lowliest of living creatures, the protozoa.

When the mouth appears the inside of the great fleshy lips and the jaws will be found to be armed with rows of horny teeth numbering many hundreds. The gills will also have grown considerably. These, however, soon give place to internal gills, and the water taken at the mouth passes out again by a small funnel on the right side of the head. This fishlike stage disappears with the appearance of the forelegs.

The hind legs next appear, and as these develop the mouth is closed for alterations. No food can be taken, and during this enforced fast the tadpole supports life by consuming its tail! This is slowly digested by a process not yet clearly understood. By the time this strange feast has ended the new mouth and the lungs have appeared—the tadpole has become a frog and leaves the water for the land. As a tadpole it fed by rasping off vegetable and animal matter with its teeth; as a frog it feeds by jerking food into its capacious mouth by the flick of a very sticky tongue.

Newts and toads in their pollywog stage can scarcely be told from frogs, but newts remain water animals, wearing tails all their life. Some of them retain their gills also, but most of them develop lungs and have to come to the surface to breathe. There are few species which have neither gills nor lungs and therefore do not breathe at all, their blood being oxidized by the skin alone.

Adult frogs spend most of their time in the water, but they must come to the surface to breathe. Toads once they leave the water do not return to it.—New York World.

Penny Cress.

Penny cress, or stink weed, although not at the present time of a very serious nature in Ontario, is liable to become so if care is not taken by the farmers. This weed is very prevalent in the west, and is becoming established in the east through the importations of western grain and screenings.

Penny cress is an erect plant, and has a number of branches on the upper part. The flowers are small and white, while the seeds are brownish-black, oval shaped, and have a number of slight ridges running around the flattened sides. When eaten by cows a very unpleasant odor is imparted to the milk. The seeds are borne in pods, and the average plant will produce about 20,000 seeds, which are generally distributed by the wind.

The Ontario farmer should look at the grain he obtains from the west and make sure that he is not introducing this weed on his farm. As the limit of the pioneer wheat crop proceeds westward, a greater amount of wheat will be brought into this province, and the greater will be the danger from this weed.

The most satisfactory methods for dealing with penny cress is to hand-pull the weeds when they are first noticed on the farm. If the pods are nearly fully-formed they should not be plowed under, as the seeds will mature, and later will be brought to the surface, where they will germinate.

HOLDING THE GERMANS BACK

Allies Desperately Contesting German Assault on Upper Oise, Less Than Fifty Miles From French Capital

RUSSIAN LOSSES AND WINS

London Hears First Definite Information on Battle That Raged Sunday and Monday

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Sept. 2.—A corner of the curtain over the battle drama in northwestern France has been raised momentarily. It shows the allies battling desperately to prevent the success of the German assault on the Upper Oise, less than 50 miles from Paris.

On the eastern war stage, Russia frankly confesses to disaster to two army corps, including the loss of three generals, Samsoniv, Martos and Pestitch. Elsewhere the Russians seem to have triumphed. Galicia has been successfully invaded and Lemberg will soon be evacuated, according to reports from the St. Petersburg war office.

If this is true, the Austrian menace to Russian Poland will be ended, and Russian forces can begin to converge for a march on Berlin. The Russian objective in north Galicia is apparently Moenigshutt, whence they can march on Berlin via Breslau.

On the Upper Oise the British are fighting desperately to prevent the Germans from securing one of the most direct routes to Paris. News of a battle reaching here from two different sources is the first definite information since the end of the battle of Mons.

The battle raged Sunday and Monday and by sheer weight of numbers the Germans secured a slight advance.

Military experts point out that from the present position on the Upper Oise the German advance will become increasingly difficult, owing to natural features of the country, as well as artificial defences that will have to be encountered.

COL. CLEGG APPOINTED COMMAND EASTERN ONTARIO BATTALION

A lettergram received this morning from Major Bennett states that Col. Clegg has been appointed senior officer commanding the Eastern Ontario battalion, which includes various contingents of Central and Eastern Ontario, among which are the Mississauga Horse and the 34th Battalion.

This will be known as the 11th battalion of the 3rd Infantry brigade. Col. Mercer, Toronto, is Brigade Commander.

A company is in command of Major Bennett which included the 57th and 3rd Dragoons. There are sixteen infantry battalions, 12 of whom are going to the front.

The appointment of Col. Clegg to this responsible position is one of the highest compliments that could be paid to the 57th Regiment. The Review feels that those who had this appointment in hand made no mistake in conferring it upon Col. Clegg.

Mayor Buller answered the wire this morning extending to Col. Clegg the congratulations of the citizens of Peterborough.

SIEGE GUNS DO TERRIBLE EXECUTION

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Sept. 2.—The Boulogne correspondent of the Express says: "A French artillery officer who has just arrived, wounded, from the front, spoke with greatest earnestness regarding the new siege guns the Germans are using. He says the gun uses a new and highly explosive shell, which has a most devastating effect. 'In all my experience I have seen nothing like it,' declared the French officer.'"

REGIMENT OF GERMAN INFANTRY ANNIHILATED

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Sept. 2.—The correspondent of the Daily Mail at Boulogne reports that a regiment of German infantry has been cut up and that most of their equipment was completely destroyed by the allies.

Since Friday night, he says, a large body of German troops have been surrounded in a forest, which is being fiercely bombarded on all sides by the allies.

Heavy slaughter occurred during a two days' battle, which finally ended with the retirement of the Germans, who left large numbers of dead and wounded on the field. The losses of the allies were also heavy.

No location is given in this despatch as to where the fighting occurred, but it undoubtedly refers to the German attacks on the French left flank.

OFFICIAL CASUALTIES OF THE ENGLISH IN FRANCE

Except on South Germans Are Pressing on all Sides Towards Paris---Extensive Movement Has Been Seen From Brussels

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Sept. 2.—Official casualties suffered by a cavalry brigade and of the three divisions, less one brigade, of the British force in France, follow:

Killed, 36 officers and 127 men.

Wounded, 57 officers and 629 men.

Missing, 95 officers and 4,183 men.

Paris, Sept. 2.—The number of wounded arriving at different points shows that the fighting in the north continues with great violence. Yesterday 700 wounded soldiers arrived at Cherbourg, 500 at Orleans, 300 at Briancon and 200 at Paris.

Nearly all had wounds in the legs or arms. The number of prisoners is also considerable.

London, Sept. 2.—The correspondent of the Daily Mail at Boulogne says: "It is quite evident that, except on the south, the German forces are pressing on all sides towards Paris. It is reported today that a German patrol, with a quick-firing gun in a motor car, and 50 cyclists, was in Arras, the capital of the department of Pas de Calais, yesterday."

London, Sept. 2.—The Ostend correspondent of the Reuter Telegraph Co. reports that an extensive movement of German troops towards the north has been seen from Brussels. It is believed that the Germans are going to Antwerp, where an investment and bombardment are expected.

Austrians Suffer Appalling Losses At River Vistula

LONDON, Sept. 2. — The Central News has a despatch from Rome saying telegrams received there from Bucharest, Roumania, declare that the Austrian defeat in Galicia was colossal.

They inflicted a loss of 20,000 on the Austrians, who sought to cross the Vistula.

Trains are transporting tens of thousands of wounded.

Numerous Austrian regiments have been destroyed.

A despatch from Bucharest, which reached the Central News at London by way of Rome, says the Roumanian General Staff considers that the battle on the Austro-Russian frontier will be decisive. They believe that the defeat of the Austrians would be followed by a general insurrection, and that, therefore, whatever may be the sacrifice, the Austrians will not fall back. They are now making a strong effort, and are recalling even the troops engaged against France and Servia.

Closing In on Lemberg.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 2. — The official account of the situation at the front, as made public by the War Office, says:—

"The German defence has stiffened, and we are sustaining severe losses, but the Germans are losing far more than are we, and, despite the arrival of fresh troops, who have strengthened the German lines, the enemy will be unable to withstand our assault.

"In Galicia our army continues victorious, and the Austrians who managed to invade Russian Poland in an attempted flanking operation have been repulsed, with enormous losses, and have fallen back. The Russian cavalry is covering itself with glory. In the Austrian retreat it surrounded an entire Austrian regiment and forced its surrender.

"As a result of the general engagements which lasted from Aug. 26 to Aug. 30 we took 17,000 prisoners and captured 120 Austrian and German guns."

Greatest Battle In History.

VIENNA, Sept. 2.—(Via Rome.)—In an official statement issued by the Austrian War Office yesterday the battle now in progress along the Austrian-Prussian-Russian frontier is referred to as the "greatest in the history of the world. It is stated that already there are three million men engaged in the active fighting. Every branch of the service is represented, and the fighting tide ebbs and flows like that of the seas.

Germans Bringing Wearied Army Towards Paris Forts

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Sept. 2.—The Times correspondent at Dieppe, France, says: "In the main northern theatre of war the German advance appears to continue without slackening its pace. It must indeed be an over-wearied army that the Germans are bringing towards the forts of Paris. They have made an effort which nearly deserves to be called superhuman. Nothing like it ever before was seen in war. Yet we may be sure they have spent themselves in vain."

Limited Express Crashes Into Engine of Way Freight

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Ont., Sept. 2.—Running at high speed, trying to make up lost time, the Grand Trunk Limited Express, No. 4, eastbound, Chicago to Montreal, broadsided into engine No. 1008 of an extra way-freight from London, at the cross-over at Komoka, at 6.30 this morning.

W. H. Webster, of Sarnia, fireman on the express, was thrown across the cab and sustained two broken shoulders and several scalp wounds. Sixteen passengers received minor cuts and bruises, caused by flying glass and by being thrown from their seats.

The freight train was attempting to cross from the westbound main line to one on the east track. As engine No. 1008 pushed her pilot across the intersection, the heavy locomotive of the express bore down upon it. There was no time to reverse, and the two locomotives met with a terrific crash. The express is almost a solid Pullman steel train and that alone saved many passengers

Turkey at War With Russia?

Canadian Press Despatch.

New York, Sept. 2—Dow Jones & Co. to-day published the following on the news ticker:

London, Sept. 2.—Unconfirmed reports are current here that Turkey has declared war on Russia. Communication with Constantinople has been cut off for three days, and the Turkish ambassador stated that he had no way of telling when he would hear from his government again.

More Bombs At Antwerp

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Sept. 2.—A despatch to the Reuter Telegraph Co. from Antwerp says a Zeppelin airship passing over that city this morning dropped several bombs. One struck a railway, doing no damage, but others seriously damaged ten houses.

LT. DENISON IS KILLED IN ACTION

Was First Cousin of Mrs. W. H. Dunsford, of This City.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Toronto, Sept. 2.—Bertram Denison, lieutenant in the King's Own Yorkshire Regiment, son of Admiral Denison, and nephew of Col. George Denison, of Toronto, has been killed in action.

Lieutenant Denison was married to Miss Gladys Nordheimer and with his father visited Toronto last summer. He was formerly in the navy but was transferred to the army and sailing from here July twenty-fifth, resigned his position in the war office and went to the front.

He was born in London, England and was aged thirty-four.

The late Lieut. Denison was a first cousin of Mrs. W. H. Dunsford, 748 Water Street.

FORCES IN GALICIA ON THE ADVANCE

Russians Are Marching on Lemberg, the Enemy Having Fallen Back---Germans Hold One Strong Position.

AUSTRIAN DEAD ARE BURIED

In Warsaw District All Austrian Attacks Have Been Repelled, Inflicting Heavy Losses.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Petrograde, or St. Petersburg, Sept. 2.—The following official announcement was made public here to-day: "Our forces invading Galicia have continued their advance in the direction of Lemberg. The enemy fell back gradually before our troops. We captured some cannon, some rapid fire guns and some caissons. The pursuit continues.

"Near Gulla, the enemy occupied a position considered impregnable. They also desperately attempted to stop our advance by a flanking attack in the direction of Halurz.

"We repulsed the Austrians, inflicting severe losses. We buried on the battlefield 14,800 Austrian dead, captured a flag and 32 guns and a quantity of supplies, and made many prisoners, including a general. On the south front, in Warsaw district, all Austrian attacks have been repelled with success. Assuming the offensive on our right wing, wt forced the Austrians to retreat, capturing three cannon, ten rapid fire guns and over 1,000 prisoners. According to statements made by the latter, the Austrian losses were very heavy.

MOBILIZATION CAMP FOR WINTER MONTHS

Likely to be Established Near Halifax by the Militia Department

Ottawa, Sept. 2.—The department of militia has under consideration the creation of a new mobilization camp to take the place of Valcartier during the winter months. The advantage of Valcartier during the open season of navigation of the St. Lawrence is obvious. The men have dry, healthy training grounds, a day's march from the port of embarkation, but with the coming of winter, the Valcartier site will be impracticable. The climate is severe. Shacks might be erected for the accommodation of the troops, but it would be a matter of some difficulty, and in the winter navigation from Quebec would be closed.

It is likely that a camp will be established in the neighborhood of Halifax in the event of contingents being requested. After November, training of local headquarters will be encouraged to the fullest extent, that the men may be kept in readiness for service. The operation of securing the necessary equipment for the new recruits is demanding some attention.

Turkey and Greece Again To Battle

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, Sept. 2.—A St. Petersburg despatch to Reuter's Telegraph Co. expresses the opinion that war between Turkey and Greece is now only a question of two or three days.

Numerous Turkish troops, the despatch states, have landed on the shores of Asia Minor, at Smyrna, while near Chattlja and to the east of Scutari, fortifications are being feverishly thrown up, under the direction of German officers.

PETERBOROUGH, WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 2, 1914

THE CUP AND THE LIP.

THE GERMAN PLAN of campaign provided for a swift passage through Belgium. There was to be an immediate and crushing defeat of the French. The surrender of Paris and its occupation by a German garrison was to follow. Then a triumphant return east to catch the Russians on the frontier and smash their disorganized war machine in the midst of its mobilization.

The Prussians, therefore, counted on the neutrality of Belgium, the inefficiency of France and the slow mobilization of Russia. They also counted on the neutrality of Great Britain. Apparently they did not take the British overseas into their calculations at all.

The best-laid schemes of mad war lords aft gang agley, if we may paraphrase one who would certainly be striking a blow somewhere for liberty if he were alive to-day.

The Belgians have fought like heroes.

The French and British are facing tremendous odds superbly.

The Russians, instead of doing a hesitation shuffle on the frontier, are dancing a six-million quick-step in the direction of Berlin.

As for the British Lion in his marine capacity, he yawned in the North Sea and the German navy disappeared.

He stretched out one paw lazily towards Heligoland, and turned at least four of the opposing warships into submarines.

Consider these factors.

We must keep cool, help with men and money to the limit of our powers, and resolve more sternly every day that this war against Kaiserism has to be a fight to a finish.—Montreal News.

CENSORING WAR NEWS.

CHAFING under the strict censorship, the London papers commenced publishing extravagant reports of the war, until now they are threatened with suppression if they continue. There are some papers in Canada that are given to publishing every rumor that bears on the war, thus exciting the people and creating false impressions. Fortunately here, however, the majority of the people are not so easily excited as in England, and can now tell the papers that publish only authentic news, from those that publish anything that may help to sell their papers for the moment.

A CHANCE FOR THE FARMER.

WE ARE TOLD that the Ontario government is to lose no time in seeking the co-operation of Ontario farmers in placing unemployed laborers. In a day or two advertisements will appear calling meetings of farmers, when the scheme will be fully explained to them. This will allow the farmer to do something for his country, without any great effort on his part. It is thought many worthy men now out of work, and others who will be, would be willing to work for a nominal wage during the fall and winter months, in order to have a comfortable home until the war scare has subsided. It is hoped many of our farmers will respond to the appeal of the government. Many have complained of the difficulty of securing help on the farm, and they may now be able to have much heretofore neglected work done by taking advantage of the plan now to be placed before them.

RECOVERING MUCH SILVER.

NOTWITHSTANDING that one diver has already lost his life in the task, silver literally by the ton is being extracted from the hulk of the sunken Empress of Ireland, as she lies on the bottom of the St. Lawrence, a few miles below Father Point. When the Empress sailed on her last voyage in June, she carried in her strong room a consignment of 219 bars of silver, 60 pounds to the bar, or a total of 13,145 pounds of the precious metal, which is worth 55 cents an ounce. This, of course, went to the bottom when the ship sank after being smashed by the Storstadt, and much work has since been done to get this valuable freight out. Four divers have been working at the job continuously since a few days after the wreck, making two descents each day, at low tide in the morning and again in the afternoon. They have so far succeeded in getting out 120 of the silver billets, making 7,200 pounds of the metal, worth close upon $50,000.

Of much importance also has been the locating of the mail bags, which were in a fairly good state of preservation. Most of the contents are being forwarded to the postoffice department at Ottawa, where it is being dried and, where possible, forwarded to its destination.

PREPARE FOR SHORTAGE.

WHILE THE present harvest is abundant, timely warning to prepare against an inevitable shortage in the world's supply of foodstuffs is given by Lord Milner, who points out that an immense decrease in production in 1915 must result from the fact that all the able-bodied males of France, Germany, Austria and Russia are now engaged in fighting. Canadian farmers should all prepare for increased acreage of grain crops for next year.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

IT IS to the credit of our Canadian institutions that when the city of Montreal required a loan of about $6,000,000, one of our principal banks was able and willing to make the large loan. Negotiations had been in progress with New York banks for the accommodation, but the Bank of Montreal came forward and took it up. The breaking out of the war stagnated the world's money markets, but this old and tried bank has been able to come to the rescue of more than one municipality, among them Peterborough. The general manager was at one time manager of the local branch, and has every confidence in the future of Peterborough.

MAY RILMA, the champion butter-fat producing cow of the world, according to the tests of the American Guernsey club, has just been sold in Pennsylvania for $5,010. Last year the report says she produced 19,639.5 pounds of milk, which showed 1,059.55 pounds of butter-fat. Miss Rilma, we should judge, is well worth the price paid for her.

Holland Germany's Breadbasket.

New York Sun.

The ultimatum of Japan to Germany is like that of Austria to Servia in that the demands were manifestly drawn with the deliberate intention of making compliance impossible and war certain. The first thought in every impartial mind will be of the outrageous brutality of this proceeding on the part of Japan at a time when the German Empire is fighting for life against three of the greatest of the world powers. The second thought will be that Germany, in the hour of her distress, is reaping what she sowed twenty years ago, when the Kaiser, for his own purposes, stepped between the new young power of the Far East and the fruits of her victory over China.

Russia's Record.

Victoria Times.

The Germans have professed to hold the Russian menace on their eastern frontier in contempt. But we should also remember that they entertained a poor opinion of the fighting qualities of the Belgians. It is likewise worth bearing in mind that it was Russia more than any other nation which destroyed Napoleon; that were it not for Russia, the other allies, Prussia and Austria, would have sued for peace even when, after his retreat from Moscow, Napoleon fought with his back to the wall. In those days Napoleon found it child's play to crush the German armies whenever he met them. He was extended to his limit to bat the Russians.

Kitchener's Speech

Lord Kitchener's first speech in the House of Lords, as military general manager for Great Britain, breathes the sentiment of the man and the sentiment of the nation. He is cool, deliberate, neither overstating nor underestimating the perils of the contest. It is no "military promenade" to which he invites his countrymen, but a war to be fought to a finish, a war which will make tremendous exactions on British manhood and British money.

Kitchener embodies the British national character. The old racial traditions speak in his words. The descendants of the Britons who for almost a quarter of a century kept up the struggle against France, who continued to face Napoleon when their allies were compelled to forsake them, form Kitchener's appreciative audience. With less enthusiasm than the French, the British have more endurance. They never know when they are defeated. They rise from a lost round ready to renew the fray. Their greatest antagonist paid tribute to their constancy in admitting that every rebuff they received simply stimulated them to new exertions. New exertions they will have to make now, precisely as their forefathers of one hundred years ago were compelled to make against the greatest military genius the modern world has known. Great Britain has "enlisted for the war," even if that war lasts three years, as Kitchener thinks possible.—Boston Transcript.

Cutting Down Their Guard

LONDON, Sept. 2.—A despatch to the Reuter Telegram Co. from Antwerp gives the latest official communication issued there. It says:—

"The situation throughout the country is stationary. The Germans have evacuated Aerschot, and railway communication has been restored over the greater part of the Campine country.

"Malines were bombarded for an hour, although the town was not occupied by Belgian troops. This is a fresh crime against the civil population."

A despatch to The Post from Antwerp says that the Germans have evacuated the Province of Antwerp, presumably as part of their scheme for the withdrawal of unnecessary troops, who will be used to replace those taken for service against Russia. Part of the forces in the Province of Limburg have also been withdrawn.

"The Anglo-French army corps have had to give ground, but nowhere have they been broken through," is the statement given out at the French embassy in London yesterday.

Recruits Are in Training

LONDON, Sept. 2.—The first 100,000 recruits who responded to Lord Kitchener's appeal have gone into training in various parts of the country, and men are now enrolling at a much quicker rate for the second 100,000.

In London 10,000 joined the colors in the last few days, while the response in the provinces has been equally gratifying. In Birmingham, where the recruiting is particularly brisk, the Lord Mayor, Col. Ernest Martineau, has resigned his office and volunteered for foreign service.

Sir Edward Carson, the Ulster Unionist leader, has called a meeting of the leaders of the Ulster volunteer force for Thursday, when he will submit a scheme, with the concurrence of the War Office for the utilisation of this force as one body.

THE VACATIONISTS

By Walt Mason

The ones who toil, the summer through, at home, in dreary occupations are always bored by that weird crew returning from their long vacations. There's naught more irksome to the gent, who can't forsake his tiresome labors, than stories told, with fell intent, of joys abroad, by gurgling neighbors. I toil like blitzen in my den, while others go to sea or mountain, and then, when they come back again, each mouth becomes a bubbling fountain, that pours forth yarns of wild delights, of heavenly sails on lake or river, of lovely maids and moonlit night—and I stayed home and dined on liver! If ever I should go away, to dodge the summer's beastly weather, when I come back I'll sigh and say, "It was a nuisance, altogether! I don't enjoy the ocean's foam, nor woodlands dark, nor mountains sunny; hereafter I shall stay at home, and do my stunt, and draw my money." Then all my friends who couldn't go, will gather round me and embrace me, they'll wipe away their tears of woe, and to the soda fountains chase me.

More German Spies.

PARIS, Sept. 2. — Three German spies were brought from Beauvais, south of Amiens, Monday night by a squad of French troopers. They were arrested in the French lines, and one of them wore the uniform of a Belgian officer. Arriving at the north station the soldiers had difficulty in protecting them from a mob when it became known they were spies. They were finally conducted in safety to prison.

Man Arrested as Spy.

CORNWALL, Ont., Sept. 2.—Two guards of the 59th Regiment arrested George Travenski, 26, on suspicion of espionage. He said that he was a native of Russia, but beyond this he would say nothing. The guards stated that the man would give no satisfactory account of his presence on the canal bank. He was remanded for ten days in the police court.

Sentry Shot Himself.

BROCKVILLE, Sept. 2. — Simeon Cormier, a French-Canadian, who was the victim of a shooting accident early yesterday, at Rideau station, and brought to Brockville for hospital treatment, will recover. Cormier, who was on sentry duty, placed his rifle in an upright position against a wall and it fell, he receiving the charge in the right thigh.

BAGS AS SOUVENIRS.

Canada's Million Flour Sacks Will Be Sold at $1 Per.

OTTAWA, Sept. 2. — It has been arranged that the million bags containing Canada's gift of flour to the people of the United Kingdom shall be sold as souvenirs and the proceeds given to the Belgian relief fund. It is expected that these bags will be purchased as souvenirs for not less than one dollar each. In this way the Canadian people will help in making a worthy contribution in aid of the people of Belgium, who have offered such splendid and heroic resistance to the overwhelming forces massed against them, and who have endured such great suffering and hardships in the defence of their country and their liberty.

Steamer Reports Cannonading.

LONDON, Sept. 2.—The Westminster Gazette publishes a despatch from Gothenberg, Sweden, saying that the Wilson Line steamer Oslo has arrived there from Hull, and reports having heard heavy cannonading as she passed through the Skager-Rak, the waterway between northern Denmark and Norway.

St. Petersburg Now Petrograd.

LONDON, Sept. 2.—A despatch to the Reuter Telegraph Co. from St. Petersburg says that by Imperial order the City of St. Petersburg, capital of the Russian empire since 1712, will henceforth be known as Petrograd. This change eliminates the Teuton construction in the name by which the chief city of Russia has been known since it was founded by Peter the Great in 1703.

Worshiping a Turtle.

At a place called Kotrou, on the French Ivory Coast, the natives believe that to eat or destroy a turtle would mean death to the guilty one or sickness among the family. The fetich men, of which there are plenty, declare that years ago a man went to sea fishing. In the night his canoe was thrown upon the beach empty. Three days afterward a turtle came ashore at the same place with the man on its back alive and well. Since that time they have never eaten or destroyed one of that species, although they enjoy other species.

If one happens now to be washed ashore there is a great commotion in the town. First, the women sit down and start singing and beating sticks; next a small piece of white cloth (color must be white) is placed on the turtle's back. Food is then prepared and placed on the cloth, generally plantains, rice and palm oil. Then, amid a lot more singing, dancing and antics of the fetich people, it is carried back into the sea and goes on its way rejoicing.

Inexhaustible Rome.

"Rome is wonderful," said a man familiar with the historic city. "Rome is inexhaustible. There is a story that describes Rome well.

"The pope was giving audience. He said to a lady in black:

"'How long have you been in Rome?'

"'Three weeks,' the lady answered.

"'Ah,' said the pope, 'then you have seen Rome?'

"And he turned to an American merchant and asked:

"'And you, sir, how long have you been in Rome?'

"'Three months,' the American replied.

"'You, then, have begun to see Rome,' said the pope. And he next accosted an elegant woman with gray hair.

"'How long, madam,' he asked, 'have you been here?'

"'Three years,' the woman answered. "The pope smiled faintly.

"'You,' he said, 'have not yet begun to see Rome.'"

True Moles.

In this country there are five recognized groups of true moles, two of which are confined to the Pacific coast and the other three are distributed over the section east of the one hundredth meridian extending from Canada to the gulf of Mexico. In the latter districts and in the greater part of Pennsylvania, New York and New England the common mole occurs with the star nosed mole and Brewer's mole. The mole is so seldom seen even by those who are familiar with its work that it is often confused with other small creatures, particularly the shrew, the mole or meadow mouse and the pocket gopher. However, it can be readily distinguished by its stout, short front limbs ending in broad, rounded hands with palms turned outward. It has a rather elongated body, close, plushlike fir, a pointed snout and a short tail. Neither eyes nor ears are in evidence. It is a creature of strictly subterranean habits.

Care of Arms and Neck.

Since fashion has decreed that women shall wear gowns in which there appears not the vestige of a sleeve, waists that are cut low in the front and more than low in the back, it behooves the woman who wishes to wear them to pay a good deal of attention to the appearance of her neck and arms.

Most women who have not bestowed some care on this part of the anatomy will find the elbow hard, callous and unsightly, but a nightly massage of the joint with a good cold cream after the elbow has been thoroughly cleansed with pure soap, warm water and a brush will drive away the callous spots and make the skin soft, pink and beautiful. When massaging the arms always remember to rub downward with long, strong strokes.

As for the neck, any disfiguring marks should be dabbed with lemon juice or diluted peroxide. In fact, to sponge the entire neck and shoulders with some powerful astringent of this order would be a good idea before beginning treatment, as the lemon juice or peroxide will do much to whiten the skin. After this bleaching fluid has been allowed to dry and remain on the skin for an hour or more the neck and shoulders should be washed free of the astringent with a good soap and warm water and a good cold cream rubbed into the skin.

Remember in massaging the throat that a downward stroke is the one to employ. As for massage of the shoulders, no woman can do this for herself, and if she needs this treatment to improve her appearance she will have to call to her aid a mother, sister or a professional masseuse.

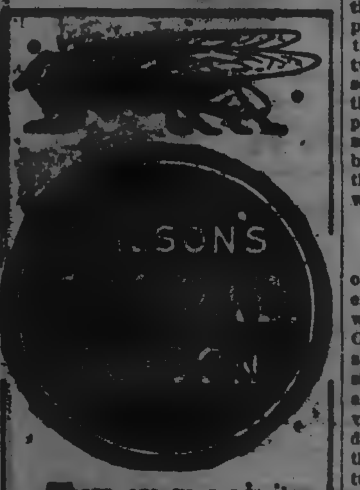
For the Tired Woman.

When the business woman comes home from work tired and fagged there is nothing so restful as a little massage of the forehead and eyes. It soothes and quiets the nerves and improves the appearance as nothing else could possibly do.

First wash the face with warm water; then rub a very little skin cream on the fingers—only a very little. Lay the tips of the fingers together in the center of the forehead and draw them gently outward to the temples.

Do this on the forehead and on the eyes. If one of those people who feel tired in the lower part of the face, do it on the mouth also, beginning in the middle of the lips and working outward to the ears.

Rub very lightly and very steadily, keeping on for perhaps five minutes. This process takes all that dragged and worn appearance from the face and makes one look many years younger than before it was tried.



There are many imitations of this best of all fly killers.

Ask for Wilson's, be sure you get them, and avoid disappointment.

Our Abused Feet.

There have been many railing accusations brought against civilization, but may they not all be summed and typified in the prevalent custom of abusing feet?

We inclose them in leather air tight coverings, and may this not be why our souls are so hidebound? When we wish to be particularly civil we paint this leather with an impervious polish that the ten poor prisoners in the two black holes of Calcutta may be exquisitely punished.

When I think of the abuse heaped upon our feet, how the toes are misshapen by irrational compression, how the arches are broken by high heels, and how corns, bunions and abrasions afflict alike the darling of fashion in her too narrow boots and the laborer in his hard brogans, and how humanity climbs on utterly without initiative to break the bonds of habit, I do not wonder at the other things they do.—Chicago News.

An Absentminded Amateur.

They were talking about their husbands over the tea things. Husbands and the weather supply the same vacuum between the gales of gossip.

"Theophilus, you know, is very absentminded and so wrapped up in his new study of photography that that's all he thinks of. You can't imagine the time I have with him."

She paused a moment to imagine it herself, while her listener found an idle interest in creasing the lace ends with her fingers.

"Oh, this is what I was going to tell you! Theophilus came out of the dark room the other evening just as dinner was set. I says to him, 'Theophilus, what are you standing up there rolling that plate of soup around like that for?' 'Just a minute,' he says to me, 'just a minute. It's developing nicely. See that high light coming up?' 'High light nothing!' I says. 'That's cracker. Sit down!' "—Kansas City Star.

Workers Without Wages.

Birds live to eat. It is lucky for men they do. Some years ago a French scientist told the world that if all the birds should suddenly die man would have only a year's life left to him and proved his point to the satisfaction of other scientists.

How much does a bird eat? Take a robin as an example. It eats at certain seasons of the year about double its weight in insects and worms every day.

The bird's dinner hour begins at sunrise and ends an hour after sunset. Any legislation looking to the shortening of its hours of labor, which are coincident with its hours of eating, would bring famine. All the song birds and all the silent birds give their service to man, and they ask no pay for it except to be let alone.—Our Dumb Animals.

Fishskin Dresses.

Among the most curious as well as wonderful of garments are the fishskin dresses worn by wealthy women of the gold tribe along the Amur river in east Siberia. These women produce some extraordinary ornaments, designs and embroidery. The dresses mentioned are composed of several layers of fishskin, the undermost representing the skin of the garment proper, the uppermost showing the ornaments in their cutout forms. Between these two layers there is another layer that serves to throw out distinctly the beautiful qualities of the ornaments. The pieces of fishskin that form the ornaments are usually blue. The front and back of the dress are adorned with these cutout pieces of fishskin sewed with fishskin thread.

Only Jar of Its Kind.

Horace Walpole tells a lively story of an old porcelain vender who had an exceedingly rare and valuable jar on which he set an almost fabulous price. One hot summer a slight volcanic shock, such as the British isles occasionally experience, jogged his house about his ears and split the porcelain vase. To an ordinary mind the accident would have been calamitous, but the china seller rose superior to fortune. He doubled the price of the article immediately and advertised it as "the only jar in the world which had been cracked by an earthquake." Nothing very slow about that.

Eat much fish. It is cheap, and many authorities assert it is more healthful in summer than meat.

ADHESIVE POSTAGE STAMPS.

The First Crude Ones That Were Issued by Great Britain.

The adhesive postage stamp had its origin in England as a direct outcome of the postal reforms introduced by Sir Rowland Hill, whose master mind created not only the inestimable boon of penny postage, but the means by which it was carried into effect—the adhesive postage stamps.

At the time of the passing of the uniform penny postage act in 1839 all postal charges were paid in cash (usually on delivery), involving an enormous amount of bookkeeping on the part of the postoffice, which would have been increased a hundredfold when the reduced rates of postage came into force but for the suggestion of the great postal reformer for "a bit of paper just large enough to bear the stamp and coated at the back with a glutinous wash," being subsequently embodied in the famous one penny black postage label and its consort, the twopence blue, which made their debut in May, 1840, and were the progenitors of all adhesive postage stamps.

For three short years Great Britain enjoyed a monopoly of this novel and handy method of collecting postage, until in July, 1843, the enlightened empire of Brazil followed suit with a series of unprepossessing adhesive labels of native manufacture, adorned with large numerals of value in place of a design.

In 1847 the United States entered the field with two beautifully engraved portraits of Franklin and Washington, while the head of Ceres, the goddess of agriculture, found place on the first stamps of the French republic, engraved by the elder Barre, which made their debut on Jan. 1, 1849.—Strand Magazine.

SEIZE YOUR OPPORTUNITY.

Get Out and Hunt For It If It Doesn't Knock at Your Door.

Lots of fellows have overlooked an opportunity simply because they were too close to it.

Don't be like the sick man who heard of the curative properties of the waters of Carlsbad and went there to take them. After he arrived be consulted a physician who carefully diagnosed his case and then told him that his particular ailment would respond better to the waters of a certain spring in America. "Which spring?" asked the patient. "One of the springs in Saratoga," replied the doctor. "That's certainly tough!" said the sufferer. "I live in Albany."

If you're made of the right stuff you'll find plenty of room to create something for yourself in the job you've got. You can grow just as big there as you can in something of your own building.

They say that opportunity knocks once at every man's door. I don't know the name of the scientist who managed to get such a fine line on the habits of opportunity, but if opportunity does announce itself the chances are that it misses many a door, and in some cases when it does knock I presume "there's nobody at home."

My impression is that opportunity as a rule doesn't knock at all—or very rarely. Opportunity consists of thinking, doing, having plenty of patience and perseverence, possessing the ability to size up a situation and having the nerve and willingness to take advantage of it.—Maurice Switzer in Leslie's.

Not Used to Wholesale Business.

A small party of prospective investors were on a tour of inspection in the oil fields. Having smoked all the cigars previously provided by the agent who conducted the party, they all went into the one store of the village to get a fresh supply. An awkward clerk came up to wait on them. The cigar stock consisted of a limited assortment of stogies, "two-fers," and one box of a supposedly extra choice brand that sold for 5 cents each. The host of the party looked over the stock and said, "I suppose you sell six of of these nickel cigars for a quarter?"

The clerk took on a puzzled look, scratched his head and drawled: "Waal, I dunno. We never sold six to any one man."—Indianapolis News.

The Green Sailor.

Mark Twain was once talking about a play that had failed.

"No wonder it failed," he said. "It's author was a greenhorn. He knew no more of stagecraft that young Tom Bowling knew of sailoring when he shipped before the mast.

"Greenhorn Tom, you know, being told to go aloft one dark, wet night, started up the rigging with a lantern and an umbrella."

Most Important.

"The customs inspector evidently realised that we were important people."

"So?"

"Yes; he passed some baggage with hardly a glance, but when he came to us he was careful to go through everything."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Leading Part.

"My brother has a leading part in that drama."

"What part?"

"He leads a horse across the stage in the last act."

Not Yet Acquainted.

"And what do you know about Moses?"

"Please, teacher, it's my first Sunday here and I don't know anybody."—London Punch.

Fundamentally there is no such thing as private action. All actions are public in themselves or in their consequences.—Hovee.

THE MARKETS

Latest Quotations in Grain, Dairy Products, Live Stock, etc.

CHICAGO, Sept. 1.—Reports that farmers were showing a disposition to sell more freely than has recently been the case had considerable to do with a downturn in the price of wheat today. The market closed unsettled, ⅜c to 1¼c under last night. Corn showed a net decline of ⅛c to ½c, and oats off ¼c to ⅝c. In provisions, the outcome varied from a drop of 5c to 7½c advance.

Flax—No. 1 N.W.C., $1.35; No. 2 C.W., $1.33.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Sept. 1.—Prices on the local grain market were unchanged, with very little doing. Oats over the cable were unchanged, but no business was reported. Demand for flour from over the cable is good, several enquiries being received for full cargoes for shipment to outside ports, in addition to orders for round lots of all grades from London; but, as millers at present are taxed to their full capacity, no business resulted. The local market is very active and firm. Millfeed is scarce and wanted.

MINNEAPOLIS GRAIN MARKET.

MINNEAPOLIS, Sept. 1.—Wheat—December, $1.16¼; No. 1 hard, $1.24¼; No. 1 northern, $1.16¾ to $1.23¾; No. 2 do., $1.13¾ to $1.21¾.

TORONTO, Sept. 1.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 50 cars, comprising 385 cattle, 1057 hogs, 1277 sheep and lambs and 103 calves.

Butchers' Cattle.

Choice steers sold at $8.60; choice heifers, $8.25 to $8.45; loads of good, $8.25 to $8.50; medium, $7.50 to $7.75; common to medium, $7.25 to $7.50; inferior heifers, $6.50 to $7; choice cows, $6.75 to $7; good cows, $6.25 to $6.50; medium cows, $5.75 to $6; common cows, $3 to $4.50; choice bulls, $6.75 to $7.50; common bulls, $5 to $6.25.

Stockers and Feeders.

Choice steers, 800 to 900 lbs., are selling at $7.50 to $7.75; good steers, 600 to 700 lbs., at $6.75 to $7.25; stockers, $5.50 to $6.50.

Milkers and Springers.

Not many milkers and springers were offered, but prices remained steady at $50 to $90 each, the bulk selling at $70 to $80.

Veal Calves.

Receipts moderate and values practically unchanged. Choice veal calves, $10 to $10.50; good, $8.50 to $9.50; medium, $7.50 to $8.50; common, $6.50 to $7.50; inferior at $5.50 to $6.50.

Sheep and Lambs.

Sheep, ewes, sold at $5.50 to $6.25; yearlings, $6.50 to $7; heavy ewes and rams, $4 to $5; lambs, $8 to $8.50, the bulk going at $8 to $8.25; cull lambs at $6.50 to $7.50.

Selects, fed and watered, $10.40; $10.65 weighed off cars.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

CHICAGO, Sept. 1.—Cattle—Receipts, 4000; market firm. Beeves, $6.75 to $10.90; Texas steers, $6.25 to $9.35; stockers and feeders, $5.50 to $8.25; cows and heifers, $3.90 to $9.40; calves, $7.50 to $11.25.

Hogs—Receipts, 13,000; market strong; 10c higher; light, $9.10 to $9.65; mixed, $8.80 to $9.60; heavy, $8.70 to $9.50; rough, $8.70 to $8.85; pigs, $5 to $8.25; bulk of sales, $9 to $9.45.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 39,000; market steady to 10c lower; native, $4.75 to $5.50; yearlings, $5.40 to $6.35. Lambs, native, $5.75 to $7.60.

Forbid Publishing Casualty Lists.

LONDON, Sept. 2.—The Mail says the German military authorities have forbidden the publication of further casualties in the newspapers. The local newspapers are allowed to publish casualties of purely local interest from the lists posted in the offices of the local administration.

Only 12 complete lists have been published and these concern only the fighting which occurs before the large engagements. It appears, says The Mail, that the enormous casualties suffered from the British are being carefully concealed.

French Aviator Escaped Death.

PARIS, Sept. 2.—Lieut. Campagne of the aviation corps, while flying over the German lines at a height of 1,800 yards, was subjected to the enemy's fire. A shell struck his machine and he stopped the motor. The aeroplane oscillated violently in the wind, but the lieutenant succeeded in righting it and in volplaning into the French lines. He landed safely and gave important information concerning the German positions.

This exploit of Lieut. Campagne was given out officially yesterday.

Mexico's Spiked Mountain.

One of the most remarkable geological freaks in Mexico is a mountain situated on the outskirts of Pachuca which presents the appearance at a distance of being covered with spikes. The sides of the mountain are closely studded with stone columns or palisades. These columns are five to twelve feet long and as large around as an average man's body. It is a remarkable uplift of nature which has the appearance, however, of being the handiwork of human beings. One side of the mountain is almost perpendicular, and the stone columns protrude from the surface at right angles, forming an impressive picture. Pachuca is one of the most noted mining districts in Mexico, and it is said by geologists that this remarkable spiked mountain is out of keeping with the remainder of the formation of the mineralized region. The stone is as hard as flint and has withstood the elements for ages. The spikes form a natural battlement that makes the mountain appear from a distance like some ancient fort.

Won by a New Hat.

Rube Waddell was not only the greatest left hand pitcher in his time, but the most eccentric. Back in the late nineties Tom Loftus, who was the only man who could handle Rube in the minors, took charge of the Chicago Nationals at that time and wanted the great pitcher. He was authorized by the club owners to pay the eccentric pitcher $3,500 a year, while two other clubs already had offered Rube more.

Loftus went out to meet the Rube one afternoon and said to the southpaw, "Come on, Eddie, sign this," and presented the contract.

"But, Tom," said Rube, "I can get a lot more."

"That's all right," returned Tom soothingly. "Just sign this and when we get to New York I'll buy you the best panama hat there is in town."

"That's a go, Tom," replied Eddie, and he signed the Chicago contract.—New York World.

HOW TO STUDY. Examine the Rebus Picture and see how it will apply to a name. For example, the picture of a man lying on a couch can be interpreted as COUCHMAN, while a stone-worker on a building could be evolved as MASON.

REMEMBER. Answer Forms may be filled in with ink, pencil, or typewriter. Poor handwriting or trifling errors will not count against a participant. No sets of Answer Forms are to be submitted until called for at the end of the Pastime. It makes no difference where a person lives, provided he or she can return the Answer Forms in time after the contest has closed.

RIGHT TIME TO START. Call or send for a copy of the Summer Pastime Handbook. It will enable you to obtain a lot of back pictures, 75 Answer Forms, etc., and, moreover, it is a valuable guide to winning. Price, 25 cents; by mail, 30 cents.

MONEY BACK OFFER. Get the Summer Pastime Handbook, and, if after receiving it, you are not well satisfied, send it back at once and we will refund your dollar.

OSHKIGMONG

Oshkigmong, Sept. 2.—Mr. R. B. Childs, of Niagara Falls, N. Y., was the guest for a week at the Chemong House, his second trip this year. He had good luck in fishing.

Mr. J. M. Wallace came all the way from Toledo, O., to attend the Chemong excursion to Lake Simcoe. Mr. Walace, on his return, intends to stay at the Chemong House for two or three weeks. It is his second trip this year.

Mr. R. D. Morgan and Mr. S. J. Korrhauser, both of Cleveland, O., had dinner at the Chemong House, and went to Catchacome Lake for trout fishing. On their return they intend staying at Chemong House for a week or ten days, duck-shooting and fishing.

Mr. Wm. Batten, Master of Orrange Lodge of Dummer, was here to let us know of their excursion to Chemong on Friday, Sept. 11. Mr. Batten says that he will have with him Mr. James Thompson, M.L.A., and Mr. Sexsmith, M.P., East Peterborough. Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., is also expected to be present. All of those gentlemen will be expected to make a short speech. Mr. Wm. Batten, of course, will occupy the chair. Mr. Batten has invited the Alderville Lodge and their band.

The steamer Stoney Lake will leave Lakefield on Friday, Sept. 11, at 7.15 a.m. All are invited to come to Chemong and have a day with Billie.

SALVATION ARMY SUFFERS FROM WAR

Members in Different Nations Will be Seeking to Kill Each Other

Montreal, Sept. 2. — A strange caprice of the present war is that members of the Salvation Army will seek to shoot or bayonet each other. German workers will face British, French, or Belgian brothers, and the kinship of the Army will become secondary to the desire to kill and conquer. Members of the Salvation Army in Canada will be bearing arms against German workers whom they met and were friendly with only two months ago at the International Congress in England.

Brigadier J. Rawling, of the Montreal division, fears that the Army, which had attained great strength in Germany, will be set back in its progress there to a great extent. Its workers have all had to join the German forces, its buildings have been turned over to the military authorities, and the entire work of the organization in Germany has had to be stopped.

"About the last words of Captains Marsh and Shaw as they left Montreal to return to Britain as army reservists were: 'I suppose we will have to kill our brothers.'" Capt. Marsh joined the army as a gunner, so his power to kill will be reater than that of the ordinary soldier.

Col. Sam. Hughes has asked the Army to provide six chaplains, and, though the word was only received a few days ago, already that number have volunteered from Montreal division alone. One man, writing to Brigadier Walker, says he woke at midnight and suddenly felt called by God to offer himself.

No definite action has yet been taken by the Army in Montreal regarding the National Patriotic Fund, but the Army will gladly co-operate, Brigadier Walker says, in any way considered advisable. In Toronto the Army is raising money by team work and it was the street car ticket of the team of Col. Chandler of the Salvation Army which was auctioned for $1,000 in Toronto the other day.

Plans have been made for the relief of distress by the Army during the coming winter, but they have been discarded, and later conferences will take place to meet the special conditions due to the war.

DESPERATE ATTACK FAILS TO DISLODGE BRITISH

With Paris as the centre and with a diameter of eighty miles, draw an arc of a circle to the northeast, forty-five miles from tip to tip. This arc embraces the line of fortresses La Fere-Laon-Rheims, against which the allies now have their backs, trying to stem the German rush to the Seine.

About twenty-five miles further northeast, in the general direction of Liege, draw another arc sixty miles from tip to tip. This arc, passing through St. Quentin, Vernins and Rethel, marks the German frontal lines forcing the French fortifications.

Besides delivering this frontal attack, the Germans are engaged in two flanking movements. One army extends to the west from St. Quentin, passing through Peronne to Amiens. Another, which has crossed the Meuse River from Longwy, through the Stenway gap, is advancing from the east toward Rethel.

The purpose of these three movements—two flanking and one frontal—undoubtedly is to bottle up the allies in the La Fere-Laon-Rheims fortress, after which the German army could proceed to Paris without serious interference.

This attempt to duplicate Sedan and Metz, which, if successful, would probably mean a decisive German victory in France, has been the constant aim of the German strategists. At Liege, at Namur, at Maubeuge and at Lille, the allies avoided the Kaiser's desire to entice them into their own fortresses and surround them. They retreated, keeping their field armies intact in the open.

If the German right and left break through and get between the allied forces and Paris, the peril will be immediate. The allies have evaded these encircling traps hitherto by desperate fighting and skillful retreats. It seems impossible the Germans can continue much longer to deliver their terrific massed attacks without rest. There are limits to human endurance.

Russia's advance through East Prussia is not progressing as rapidly as early indications suggested. For more than a week, the fight has been proceeding about the lake and marshy district of Allenstein. The Germans are giving way slowly, but apparently are fighting as tenacious a defensive battle as the allies are in France. The field fighting has not indicated Russia will have an easy time crossing the Vistula.

Germans Flung Full Weight Against General French's Men.

LONDON, Sept. 2.—A correspondent of The Daily Chronicle, writing from a town in France (whose name was deleted by the censor), under Monday's date, tells of desperate attacks Sunday and Monday by the German forces in overwhelming numbers, to break through the British lines and thus turn the left flank of the allies. Though the British troops were forced to give ground slightly Sunday night, he says, they resisted the full German attack, and on Monday resumed the fighting with undaunted courage. The despatch reads:—

"The right wing of the northern army of the allied forces had been fiercely engaged south of Mezieres, but it is against the British, on the left wing, that the Germans are flinging all their weight.

"In spite of the enormous sacrifice of human life entailed, the enemy seems to be bent upon breaking through our defensive line and so pushing back the allies nearer to Paris.

"Yesterday's battle, which is still unconcluded, was preceded by a very heavy artillery fire from the German guns, which were well served, and the aim of the gunners was rendered very accurate by the observations of aerial pilots, who throughout the day hovered about the allies' position, and corrected by signals any wild firing on the part of the German guns.

"German impetuosity spent itself in a vain effort to overcome British resistance. The fight for supremacy was continued throughout the day, and is by no means ended yet. The brunt of the attack was splendidly borne, and never did the unflinching bulldog courage of the British show to better advantage.

"The heavy and well-directed German artillery fire made little impression on our men, although the casualties entailed by the splendid resistance were necessarily heavy.

"The German artillery fire ceased only to permit the advance to close quarters of masses of German infantry, who for hours hurled themselves against the British wall of steel. Toward evening and after a day of most sanguinary fighting, the brave fellows were compelled to give ground slowly, but this slight advantage obtained by the Germans was dearly purchased.

"The German infantry fell in heaps, and stories of recent German atrocities alleged to have been perpetrated on our helpless wounded, maddened our men to a point of fury."

A simple dessert is boiled rice and stewed figs or prunes served together with cream.

ONLY TWO RUNS FOR FIRE DEPARTMENT

The month of August has been a very slack month for the fire department. They had only two runs. There was no damage. In August, 1913, they had 31 runs and the damage amounted to $1305.

Eat many fresh vegetables and fruits. They are plentiful and cheap, and it is best to eat them while you can.

Paris Seems Unruffled

PARIS, Sept. 2.—A German monoplane dropped two more bombs in the streets of Paris about 6.30 o'clock last evening.

The operations of the German aeroplane over Paris have been watched with equanimity by the people. The first day the operations caused some nervousness among the women; the second day it was already an old story, and the third day they provoked for the most part sarcastic remarks for the inefficiency of the German marksmanship.

A German monoplane dropped a bomb at the Rue Michodiere and the Rue du Quartre Septembre near the Credit Llonnals yesterday afternoon. A gun mounted on the bank fired four shells at the aeroplane and two British infantrymen fired their rifles repeatedly. Another bomb was dropped near St. Lazare station. Neither bomb did any damage.

CLEARED FOR ACTION.

German Cruiser Leaves Honolulu to Battle With Australian Ships.

HONOLULU, Sept. 2. — The German cruiser Nurnberg will leave this port to-day, cleared for action, to meet the Australian warships, Australia and Warrego. The two British men-of-war yesterday accompanied the British collier Strathadle to the three-mile limit here, and are reported waiting outside.

Capt. Schoenberg of the Nurnberg said yesterday that the Nurnberg would not surrender, and that he expected the ship to be the coffin for himself and his crew.

Capt. Schoenberg asked for 1,200 tons of coal. Rear-Admiral Charles Moore, commandant of the naval station, refused to say how much he allowed to be taken aboard. Stevedores loading the cruiser said they were putting 750 tons in her bunkers.

Leipzig May Dismantle.

SEATTLE, Wn., Sept. 2. — There has been a relaxation of the activity of the three cruisers using Esquimalt as a base since it was officially announced that the German cruiser Leipzig no longer was a menace to commerce. It is thought in British Columbia that the Leipzig may enter an American port and dismantle until the end of the war.

The Leipzig has not been reported since Aug. 19, when she held up the American tank steamer Catania off Cape Mendocino, California.

One gallon of ice cream, if served on plates, will serve 24; if in sherbet glasses, 30 at least.

WHITE SLAVER GETS PRISON

Club Man Gets Two Years Following Sensational Evidence

Calgary, Sept. 2.—Harry Cardell, a well-known Calgary club man and former official in the C.P.R. department of natural resources, was convicted in the police court here by Magistrate Sanders of having brought Mrs. Helen Grantley Delcher from the United States in violation of the white slave enactments. He was sentenced to two years' imprisonment in the pen at Edmonton. The trial attracted much attention. The evidence showed that Cardell became infatuated with the woman, who was a variety actress, and after following her through all the American coast states, brought her back to Calgary from New York. The evidence was very sensational in its details.

CHARGE AGAINST AGENT WHO TOOK ORDERS, FAILS

No Breach of the Transient Traders By-law Says Magistrate

The police magistrate this morning gave judgment dismissing the charge against Albert J. Peake, representative of a Toronto firm who was charged with a breach of the Transient Traders' By-law. The magistrate held that Peake had not sold goods, but had simply taken orders for goods, and held that the cases that had come before the courts made it clear that no offence against the by-law had been committed and dismissed the case. G. N. Gordon, city solicitor, appeared for the prosecution, and F. D. Kerr for the defendant, Peake.

ONE DAY'S MAKE OF CHEESE FOR PATRIOTIC FUND

From Each Factory on Peterboro Cheese Board

IS THE SUGGESTION

The universal feeling and movement to do something for the dependents of the soldiers fighting for the cause of Britain has reached even the farmers of these inland counties. This morning at the Cheese Board meeting, Mr. James Cook, buyer for the W. S. Cook and Sons firm of Belleville, briefly outlined an idea inaugurated at the meetings of the Cheese Board of Stirling and Campbellford. The idea is to grant one day's make of cheese from each factory to the Patriotic Fund. A certain day is to be set aside and farmers not wishing to assist, need not send their milk on that day. Mr. Cook was of the firm belief that few indeed would be the men who would not contribute to help the empire and he was also of the opinion that even the cheesemakers would work that one day gratis, as the employes of the Grand Trunk and Bank of Montreal are doing. Mr. Cook urged that the members of the Peterborough Cheese Board take it up with the patrons of the factories and obtain their co-operation.

Several members of the Board spoke very highly of the proposition and it was moved and seconded by Mr. R. Duff and Mr. John Coughlin that the representatives bring the matter before the patrons of their factories and then report at the next meeting to be held three weeks from today.

MESSAGE TO ENEMY SENT IN SHELL

London, by mail to New York, Sept. 2.—At least one English shell, sent screaming after a German warship in the North Sea, carried a message. Lord Edmund Talbot has received from a friend in the navy a copy of a verse written on a shell on one of the British vessels. The lines were written after an exchange of courtesies between the British and German fleets shortly before the war. Here they are:

"You gave us 'bacca and you gave us beer,
You made us happy while we were here;
And in return we'll send you this,
And hope to God it doesn't miss."
